A study published in the Journal of the American Medical Association (April 15, 1998 issue) should serve as a reality check for a culture that has grown accustomed to treating illnesses with drugs. Unlike previous studies, this most recent research reviewed cases in which drugs were taken correctly as prescribed by physicians. It showed that more than 2 million Americans annually become seriously ill due to reactions to correctly prescribed drugs, and that 106,000 of these patients die from these side effects. This research may lead many to conclude that treating illness with medications comes with some risks. On the other hand, chiropractic is a drug-free treatment that may be considered a conservative and appropriate first-line treatment for many illnesses.
Find out how chiropractic care, combined with proper exercise and diet and other aspects of good health and personal hygiene, can enhance your well-being. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we focus on good health and optimal function. We believe a continuing schedule of regular chiropractic checkups can help detect, correct, and maintain optimum spinal and nervous system function. Please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment and let us help you enjoy life to the fullest. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor. Have you heard about our "Mothers' Morning Out"? Come in and find out about the benefits of chiropractic. He 'draws' on local issues for his cartoons

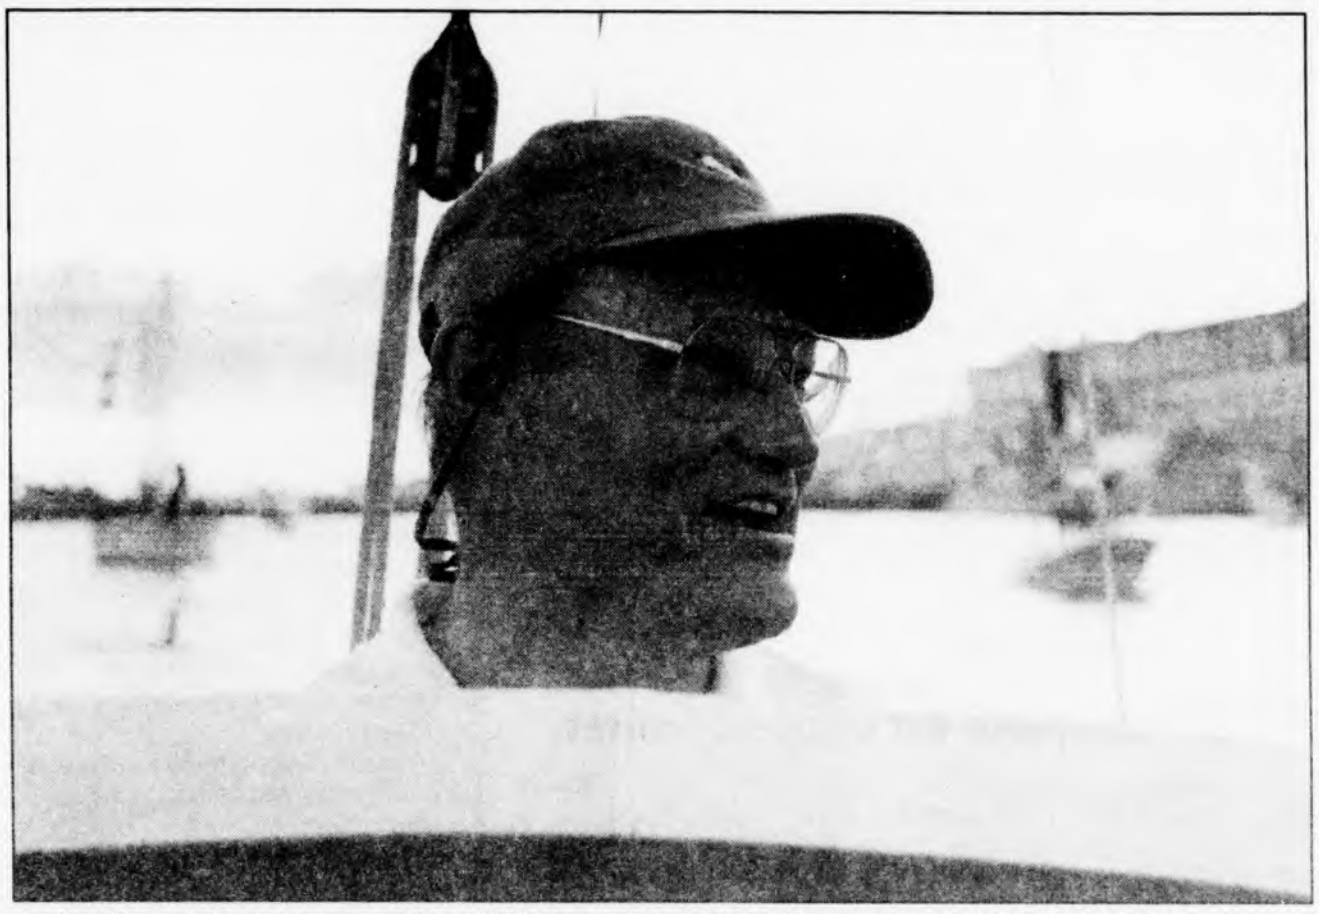
By Alison Cohen
MARINER STAFF

At first glance he seems rather sedate. Then you see the impish gleam in the eyes that must have made his reputation in the fourth grade.

Meet Jim Hamilton, cartoonist extraordinaire.

Hamilton has been drawing cartoons from the time he figured out how to bend his wrist and hold a crayon. He used to entertain his buddies with them in grade school and by high school he was drawing a strip for the school newspaper.



That was long ago — but he's been involved in print and graphic work one way or another ever since.

Hamilton's cartoons have been appearing in the Cohasset Mariner since January 1990. They got here through a rather circuitous route.

Hamilton has always designed his own Christmas cards. As you might guess from his work in the Mariner, if there are visions of sugarplums dancing in his head, they dance to the tune of a different drummer.

He considers the cartoons his way of sending a letter to the editor — lucky for us and our readers that he is such a faithful and prolific correspondent. They also serve as his way of getting involved in his town government.

"I've worked on town committees before, but find that just as my fellow committee members are getting energized, I'm already past my bedtime and have to apply all my mental skills toward keeping awake," Hamilton said.

Jim Hamilton's cartoons have graced the editorial page of the Cohasset Mariner since the beginning of 1990.

"Maybe editorial page illustrations get more people to read about what's going on with town management and get them more interested in helping control the events of the town," he added.

The ideas that shape Hamilton's cartoons come from any number of sources. He reads the paper, watches the selectmen via cable and chats with the neighbors. Sometimes the topics are the big, important things that affect the town; and sometimes they are the little foibles and foolishness that give the town its character. Or characters.

Everybody seems to have their favorite Hamilton cartoon — and probably a few have cartoons they wish had never seen the light of day. Hamilton thinks those folks may be taking themselves, and things in general, too seriously.

"Nobody has called me threatening bodily harm," he joked, "but I am surprised at folks who take a cartoon literally.

"A cartoon is supposed to make a statement using the least amount of detail and copy which will attract a reader's attention," he explained. "Never mind if it's an overstatement or so subtle that most people miss the message as long as it produces some kind of response, it's done the job."

Hamilton's cartoons work because he knows his town so well, even if he can't lay claim to being a townie. Although he can't say he is a third generation Cohassetite, at least he can say he's entered his third decade.

Hamilton's arrival in town was precipitated by a surfeit of snow and a dearth of the milk of human kindness.

He and his wife were living in Cambridge in the late '60s. One year a series of heavy spring snow storms hit the city. Since there was no place to park his car except the street — where parking was prohibited during snow emergencies — his car was towed to the Cambridge city dump.

"I had to go by cab to collect it, kind of like bailing a relative out of jail," he recollected. "Not only did I have to pay a towing fee and fine, but my emergency light and snow shovel were stolen from the car.

"I said to Laurie, 'O.K., that's it for city living, let's go find a place in the country.'"

The Hamiltons kind of fancied living in an antique Cape. They tied up with a broker who was the friend of a friend, and off they went looking at homes on the South Shore.

"We first saw our future house blanketed under snow on a beautiful day, and it was love at first sight," Hamilton said.

The would-be seller had really set the stage to hook a romantic. There were fires blazing in the fireplaces and the owner's child was decked out in Colonial garb. Hamilton and his wife fell hook, line and sinker.

"We made an offer on the house and only after the snow melted found that it was in the town of Cohasset and needed a lot of work."

The house sits on a hill in the middle of the farm country of Cohasset. Hamilton loves the ambiance of King Street. There's a horse corral behind the house and a garden with corn and tomatoes and crafty raccoons.

One of his favorite parts of life in a small town was the weekly trip to the dump. He'd show up with his one barrelfull and meet up with his neighbors.

"Cohasset used to have one of the most impressive landfills on the South Shore, a really great place to swap ideas, run for political office, raise money and talk shop with folks you'd never see otherwise," Hamilton said.

He also used to come home with perfectly good treasures until his wife broke him of his trash-picking tendencies.

"There comes a point in mid-life where you have to take more to the dump than you bring home," Hamilton philosophized.

Although he misses the dump that was, he's getting used to the new ways. He thinks the RTF — everybody's affectionate appellation for the recycling transfer facility — has the potential to rank right up there with the best in the country "as long as they let us slow down long enough to get to know and enjoy the place better."

The RTF has been a favorite topic. He's also delved into the cemetery problem, the Lily Pond landtaking and the mysteries of town meeting. Oh yes, the selectmen are regular cartoon fodder.

"I couldn't quite get Martha's caricature, but she's been a good sport about past attempts," Hamilton said about his efforts to capture former selectman Martha Gjesteby in ink.

Hamilton doesn't suffer from a lack of role models. If you ask who his favorite cartoonist is, he'll list just about every political cartoonist since Thomas Nast put pen to paper in the 1800s. Although he follows all the political cartoonists, such as Szep and Oliphant, he still has a soft spot in his heart for the strips he grew up reading in the old Boston Herald's funny papers.

Al Capp was one of his favorites. He liked Capp's sensuously drawn women and the offbeat characters in continuing political story lines. In his last years, Capp grew bitter and his politics were increasingly shrill and reactionary, but Hamilton remembers the glory years when Capp was the best.

Francis Dahl was another favorite. Dahl did a local strip in the Herald focusing on Boston and New England news items gleaned from the daily papers. Hamilton said Dahl's cartoons tended to feature birds, beasts, Bostonians and Ver-

There definitely is a morbid side to Hamilton — he's a real Charles Addams fan. Hamilton decorated his high school senior prom with cutouts of Addams' creepy mansions, monsters and madmen long before television tamed them and turned them into cute little parlor creatures. Today, Hamilton can be found turning the newspaper pages to find out how far Larson's bizarre twist of imagination has led him into the "Far Side."

If pushed to explain the method behind his madness, Hamilton says he likes to take stereotypical situations and put real people in them.

"If we can't laugh at ourselves, what's left?" he asked. "The boards and commissions are really doing the town a service. Those people work like hell, but they can also take it to an extreme."

"Maybe editorial page illustrations get more people to read about what's going on with town management and get them more interested in helping control the events of the town."

— Jim Hamilton

Hamilton sees himself as a deflator of dogma armed only with a Pentel pen.

He'd also like to encourage the townspeople to work together better.

"Since our town can't expand width-wise — you're either in the sea or Wompatuck State Park — and Hingham and Scituate aren't willing to fork over some of their territories, we've got to make do with the revenues generated by a primarily residential population," Hamilton said.

"Small business enterprises should be encouraged by the town rather than hassled with bureaucratic impediments. Finally, we've all got to get realistic about where the money comes from to fund town services and essentially what we're going to have to do without to keep our cost of living in line with our incomes."

Skippers prepare to battle the Green Wave

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Very rarely does a team play as well defensively as the Cohasset Skippers did Friday night and still lose. Cohasset's defense did nearly everything possible to stifle the offense of the Carver Crusader offense, finally allowing a score with only 2:30 remaining in the third quarter.

However, the Skipper offense was ineffective, virtually non-existent in comparison to its dominance in last week's 32-14 blowout over Latin Academy.

The Skippers rode down to Carver for this year's contest, a trip enjoyed by this reporter a few hours later while snacking on tangerine chicken and scallion pancakes, and were greeted rudely by the Crusaders at game time.

After Ben Roine received the kick-off and carried it to the Cohasset 37 yard line, the Boys in Blue were forced to punt after three downs.

The Crusaders gained enough for a first down despite running in the teeth of the Cohasset defense. Linebackers Greg Parkinson and Luke Caldwell each had a pair of nice tackles, and defensive back Daniel Trowers forced Crusader Bill McDonald out of bounds after a solid gain. But Cohasset's big defensive play, one of several during the game, came when Raheem Shepherd delivered a touchdown-saving, bone-jarring, mothers-cringing-in-the-stands hit to a Carver receiver, popping the ball loose. While Shepherd followed through on the hit, Roine dove on and recovered the ball for the visitors.

With the momentum now in their favor, the Skippers began eating up the yards. Trowers carried for 17 behind blocks by Craig Davis at

A tale of two teams

Stickmen still searching for an identity

By David Wolcott

So which CHS field hockey team is going to show up for coach Debby Bostwick when they next take the field against Carver on Tuesday night?

Will it be the hustling squad that pulled out big wins against Norwell and East Bridgewater earlier this season or the young, inexperienced team that showed up in recent losses to Notre Dame and Hanover?

If you know the answer, give coach Bostwick a jingle. She's still looking for the answer herself and none seemed to be forthcoming Tuesday after the Skippers dropped a 3-0 league game to Hull

"We're not a bad team, in fact we've got some pretty good talent on the field. There just have been times where we have failed to apply that talent."
DEBBY BOSTWICK

"I sat them down for a long talk before the Hull game and said it was totally up to them what kind of team they wanted to be this season," said Bostwick, who is trying to send her squad to the state tourney for the second year in a row. "If they want to be a recreation time, then fine. But I think we are a better team than that.

"I have a hard time figuring out how we can play so well in one game and then lose our concentration and look pretty bad the next time out," she added. "We're not a bad team, in fact we've got some pretty good talent on the field. There just have been times where we have failed to apply that talent."

That's what you get when you are as young as the Skippers are this season. Bostwick has a core of strong veteran players, but her hand has been forced a little since there is no JV lacrosse program at the school this season. Thus, Bostwick is developing a team without the help of a JV coach and some of the underclassman aren't getting the much needed sub-varsity game experience.

One game where they did step up and use all their talent was a recent 0-0 tie against the Division 2 Hingham squad of the Patriot League.

"We just played our socks off against Hingham," said Bostwick. "We got solid play from Melissa Rosano (3 saves) and Kristin Consadine (4 saves) in the net. It was just an extremely well played game by both teams. We put together a real team effort."

Also playing well was the front line

Skippers conquer Wave in SSL battle

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Getting some solid scoring chances off their hustle and the lucky bounce of the soccer ball, the Skippers boys soccer team got their second win of the season Thursday night in a 2-1 victory over the Green Wave of Abington.

The Skippers find themselves at 2-6-1 as they begin their second tour around the South Shore League. Any hopes they have about post-season play could hinge on their play this week as they prepare for league battles with Norwell (Friday), Carver at home on Tuesday and then back on the road to Hull on Oct. 15.

Against Abington, who was winless coming into the game, the Skippers found themselves in a hard and physical battle with a young team that was very hungry to get their first taste of victory on the year.

The visitors did not play like a winless team, going step for step with the Skippers and even jumping out to a 1-0 lead when senior co-captain Russ Burns converted a corner kick from senior Dennis McCleary halfway through the first half.

The goal seemed to fire up Cohasset as the Skippers immediately turned their intensity up a notch and tied the score at 1-1 less than two minutes later when junior Travis Moore scored his first varsity goal.

The Skippers were buzzing around the offensive end when a shot got by the Abington goalie, sophomore Dan Frenier, but was headed out before crossing the line by an alert Green Wave defender. The ball went straight to Moore who wasted no time in blasting the ball high into the open net.

Moore nearly made it two in a row three minutes later off a throw-in from senior captain Mark Equi.

Equi made a long throw to Moore, who was standing about 25 yards from the goal in the middle of the field. Before the ball could hit the ground Moore got his foot underneath it and launched a nice shot on goal that Frenier jumped high to grab before it went in the net.

From there both defenses settled down and there was no more scoring in the first half.

Sophomore Matt Gustin and Jared Crowley as well as seniors Matt Kramer and Anthony Leverone were strong in front of Frenier while Ben Bixby, Mike Baird and Evan Murphy were solid in front of Cohasset

Jim O'Sullivan enjoyed a moment at the prom this spring with friend Alison Kinchla. O'Sullivan, the senior class president at CHS, has been a correspondent with this newspaper since he was in the eighth grade.

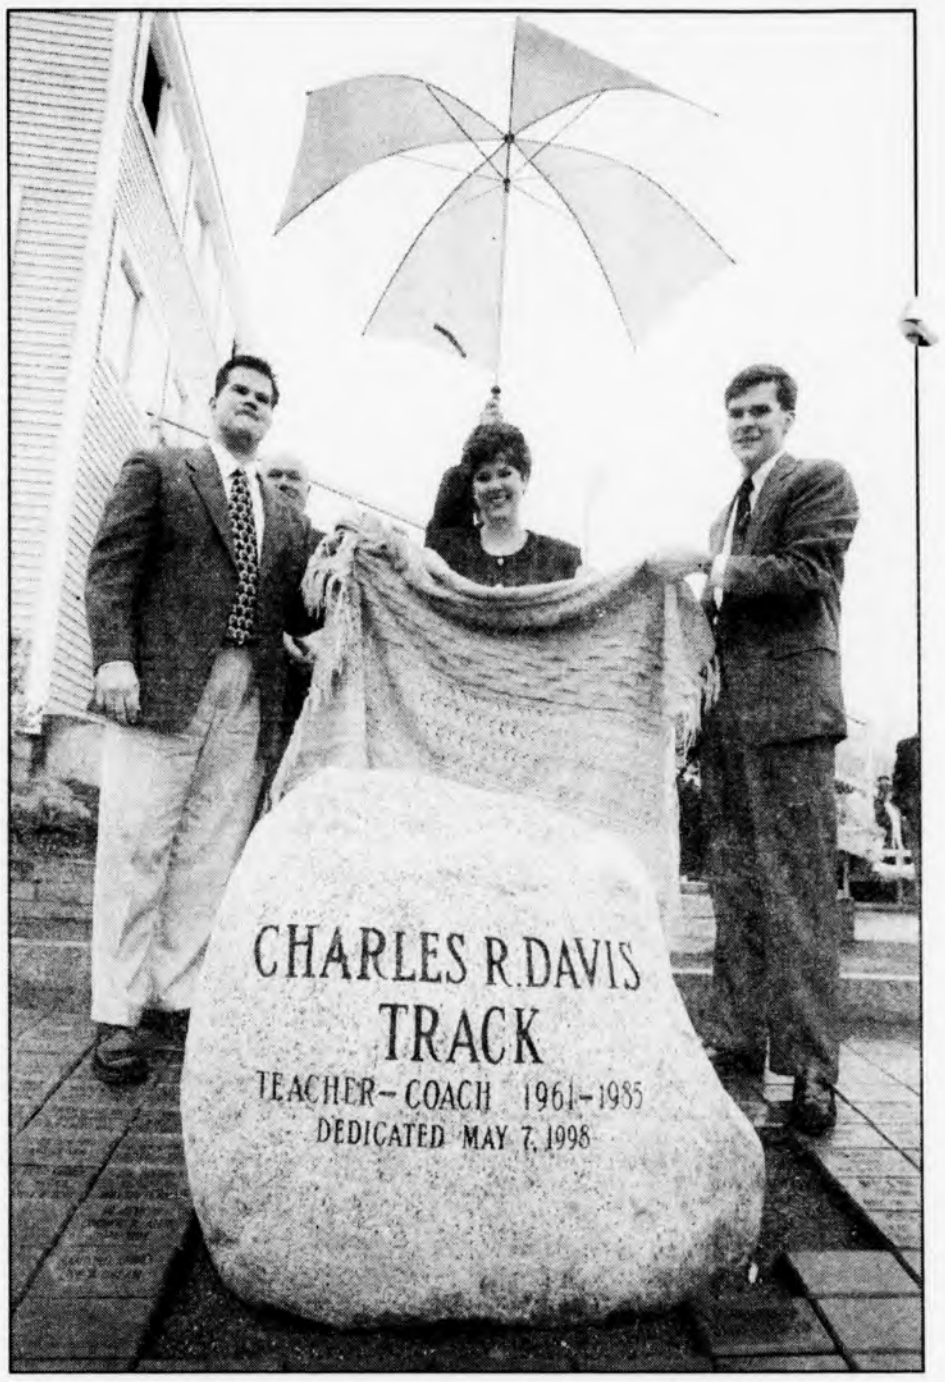
O'Sullivan knows CHS sports

Mark Twain used to tell people that writing was a fairly easy thing to do. Just make sure you write about something that you know.

Fortunately for us, Jim O'Sullivan knows Cohasset sports.

O'Sullivan, a senior at Cohasset High School, has been a vital part of this newspaper since way back when he was in the eighth grade.

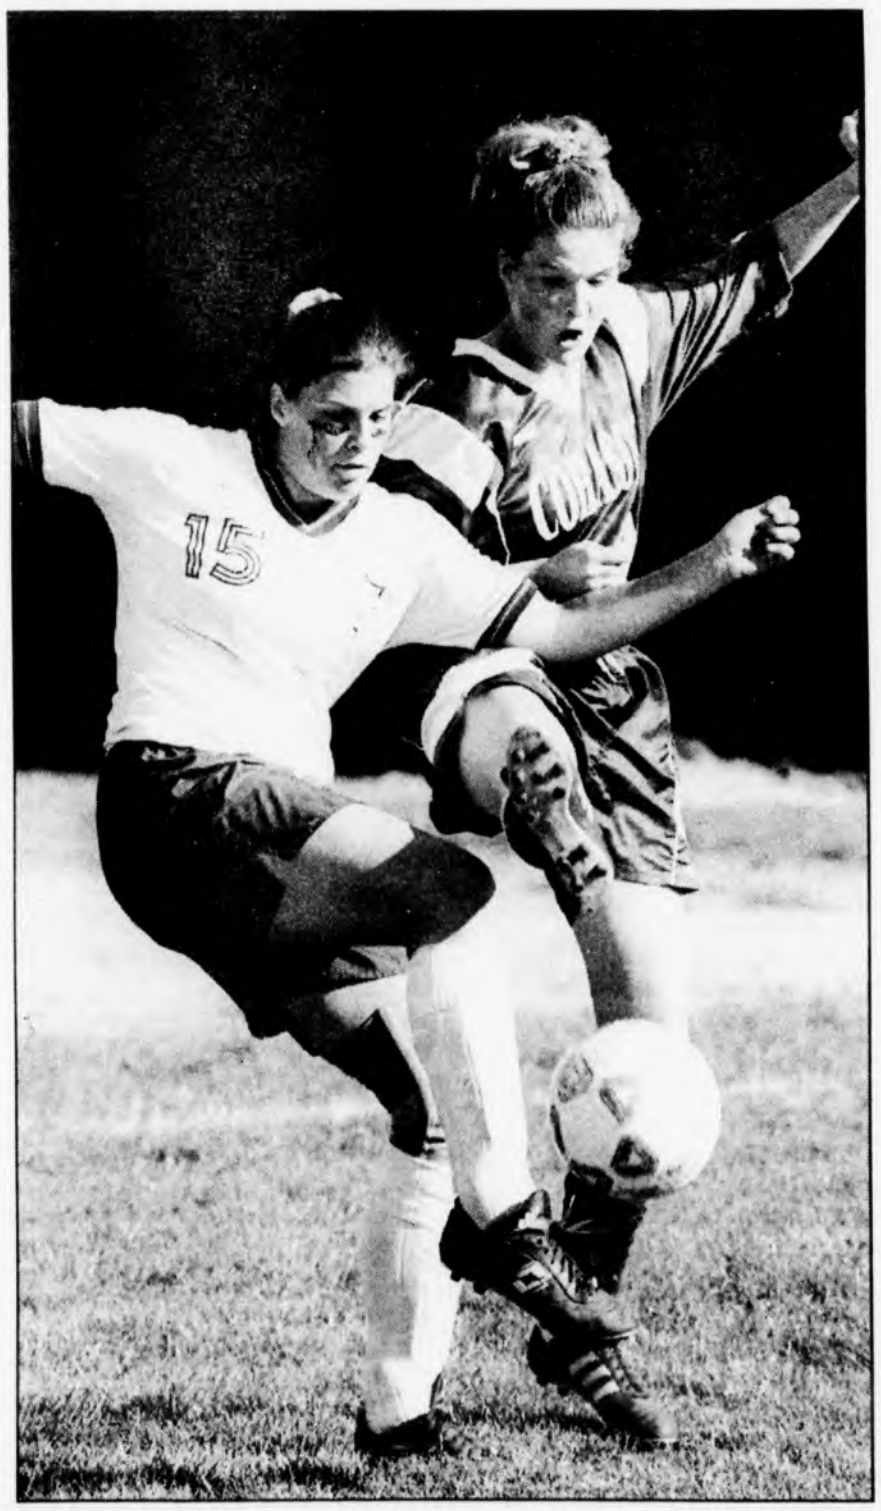
"I love both sports and journalism, so it seemed like the thing for me to do," said O'Sullivan, adding with a laugh that it also seemed like a good way "to get some playing time."



A football and baseball player, O'Sullivan's insights into the high school sports scene and superior writing skills belie his young age.

Not your average jock, O'Sullivan is also president of his class and president of the National Honor Society at CHS.

College plans are not finalized as of yet, but O'Sullivan hopes to study English and then get an advanced degree in Journalism.



Two decades of memories at CHS

Looking back in time, clockwise: Joe Slotnick (#35) and Ryan Bishop can only watch as a Winthrop shot goes through the hoop during the EMass hoop finals at the Boston Garden in 1995. The Skippers would lose this heartbreaker in triple-overtime. Members of the Davis family officially unveil a stone dedicating the track at Alumni Field in the name of Charles R. Davis. Davis, a beloved teacher and track coach at the school for 24 years, died unexpectedly in 1985. Cohasset athletic director Clark Chatterton, second from left, has been the driving force behind Cohasset High athletics for many years. The varsity football team announced last week that they are dedicating their season to Chatterton for all of the work he's done for sports at the high school over the years. Kate Carroll starred both as a soccer player and on the softball field for CHS.

Twenty years ago this week Red Sox nation was still trying to get over their playoff loss at the hands of the dreaded New York Yankees while Bruins fans were just beginning to learn about the greatness that is Ray Bourque and Celtic followers were still a year away from entering the Larry Bird era.

Locally, Cohasset athletes finally had a place to chronicle the athletic exploits of their sons and daughters with the initial publication of the Cohasset Mariner.

And what fun we have had.

We saw Bryan Edwards, who's now a record producer in Boston, help bring glory to the basketball program at CHS as he battle future NBA player Billy Curley for high school basketball supremacy on the South Shore in the early 90s.

A few years later, it would be the boys hoop team under the direction of current coach Ron Ford making waves once again defying all the odds while stepping into their role as David against the basketball Goliath's of Eastern Massachusetts.

In 1995 it was a much larger Winthrop squad that did the deed, eliminating a game Clipper squad in the EMass finals in what turned out to be a triple-overtime thriller at the Boston Garden. Players like Jared Hardwick and Tom Allen did their school proud in leaving all that they had on the floor of the old building.

Next year it was back to the same building (except it was now called the FleetCenter) and a similar heartbreaking result as Ryan Bishop and Joe Slotnick helped the team back to the EMass finals before being eliminated by Winchester.

One of the younger players from that crew, Paul-Michael Quintin, became one of the few players to eclipse the 1,000 career point mark at Cohasset last season.

We also saw the school wrestling team rise to prominence as one of the top teams in their class in the state these past few years.

One wrestler in particular, Ray Jones, excelled both on the mats as well as on the football field.

The boys haven't had all of the fun, though.

Kate Collins was an all-star on both the soccer field and the softball diamond while Erika Hettstrom was a superior gymnast for CHS, making it all the way to the state individual finals.

Another star on the mats, Ruthann Ardizzoni, was a junior at the high school back when we began this ride. She's now been the head coach of the CHS gymnastic team for 14 years and has five South Shore League titles and a 30 meet winning streak to her credit.

"What I remember most about the past 20 years is all of the hard work and dedication that the athletes have put into the performances," said Ardizzoni, who still keeps in touch with many of her former charges. "It's a great feeling watching someone set a goal and reach it."

Here's to another 20 years of people reaching their goals.

Let the music play all night long

EXTRA POINTS

DAVID WOLCOTT

You could cut the tension with a knife.

This is the game everyone's been waiting for all season long. The winner goes onto the title game, the loser just goes home. You'd swear that every single alumnist from both of the schools has made their way to the field.

After all the hype, it was finally game time. The time for talking had ceased. Instead of singing it, now was the time to bring it.

Suddenly, the hometown heroes appear out of the darkness from their locker room. They charge the field as Barry Manilow's "Copacabana" blares from the speakers. The boys suddenly drop their helmets, call off the game and dance the night away under the stars with any willing partner they could find.

What's wrong with this picture? Well, a sporting event is just like any good party when it comes to your choice of music.

Pick the wrong selection and your audience is history.

More than a pre-game talk from the coach or a nasty quote or two in the newspaper from the other side, nothing motivates a team like their choice of music. Walk past any locker room before a big game and you are bound to something emanating from the sound system that would generally make a coach deaf and a parent cry.

"Whatever we play, we play it loud," admitted Hanover High quarterback Ryan Hoyle, whose team adopted AC/DC's "Thunderstruck" as their team song last season.

The key, said Hoyle, is the tunes have to be of the anthem variety "to get the adrenaline pumping."

No Garth Brooks for these gentleman. It's got to be the hardest of the hard rock genre.

You know the ones. The song that make any self-respecting teenager's blood boil, heart and soul pound through the chest cavity, fists shake and liver quiver like a fish out of water.

"We've got some beauties on our tape," admitted Hoyle, listing hits from such favorites as Van Halen, Metallica and Danzig. "The coaches are in another room so they put up with it."

Being the helpful people that we are here in the newsroom, let us offer you some of our own musical tips so you don't make the same mistake our friends did at the top of this column.

Stay with the standards- You pay your $3 and there's just some things you expect to see at the game. Gary Glitter's "Rock and Roll, Pt. 2", "Welcome to the Jungle" from Guns and Roses and Queen's "We Will Rock You" come immediately to mind. Yes, they are probably overdone, but they're tried and true staples of the game as much lettermen jackets and the 50-50 raffle.

Have a little fun with your selections- Try to include at least one or two from the following group: "Macarena", Barenaked Ladies "One Week", Billy Joel's "We Didn't Start the Fire" or anything by Bob Dylan. They won't do anything really to impact the game, but sit back and enjoy the fun as the guy next to you attempts to translate what the artist is actually saying.

Maintain the home field advantage- Always keep a stack of tunes handy to help quell an uprising from the visiting team. Anything from Yanni, John Tesh, the Spice Girls, Backstreet Boys, Roger Whittaker, Boxcar Willie or any movie star who was under the impression that they could actually sing should do the trick. By the time you get to the refrain, watch the other team's fans run for the exit. Don't forget to supply ear plugs for your own diehard followers.

Find something you like and stick with it- Pick a song to play after your team score and stick with it. Once the fans start looking for it they'll join in on the fun.

Use the time to get a message across- Buy a subscription. Sales slow at the concession stand? Play Jimmy Buffett's "Cheesburger in Paradise" and watch the people flock to you. Buy a subscription. Need to sell more raffle tickets? How about Mary Chapin-Carpenter's "I Feel Lucky". Buy a subscription. Subliminal messages can work well when used correctly. Buy a subscription.

Rock on.

of Maggie O'Connor, Andi Shaughnessy and Melissa Pyform as well as Meghan Connolly, Katie Devine, Kelly Devine and Jill Magner on defense.

With those highs, you need to take the low points as well. Bostwick said she expected a little bit of a letdown against Carver. She got it as Cohasset dropped a 3-1 decision.

Shaughnessy scored first for the Skippers in the first half but it was all downhill from there as the Crusaders scored three times without retaliation to get the league win.

The Skippers came right back, though, behind the strong defense of Kelly Lordan and goals from O'Connor (two) and one from Shaughnessy to beat Norwell 3-1.

keeper Kevin DeVito, who made a couple big saves on McCleary and senior co-captain Brian Maslanka in the waning minutes of the half.

Both teams came out for the last 40 minutes looking to get the deciding goals. Cohasset had the early advantage, including glittering chances from the foot of Ben Littauer and the head of Mark Equi, but it would be the hustle of Ben Peterson that put the Skippers up to stay.

Peterson, a sophomore, stole a clearing attempt and sent a beautiful crossing pass to Steve Sceery who didn't disappoint as he put his fourth goal on the season into the net with 19 minutes to go.

Abington would keep the pressure on and almost scored with six minutes left when the ball squirted past DeVito and towards the goal line only to be re-directed just in time on a excellent defensive play by Bixby.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Locals shine at Babson

A pair of Cohasset residents are doing their hometown proud on the athletic fields at Babson College.

Sophomore Karen Niessink has been playing well for the 1-5 women's tennis squad.

On the field hockey pitch, freshman Lindy Holway has appeared in six games as a key reserve for the 5-4 squad.

Free sports websites available

The Cohasset Mariner and Town Online, the online service of the Community Newspaper Company (CNC), are offering free web sites to all high school, youth and recreation sports organizations and teams.

CNC will provide the web site and train organization representatives in web page design and building, using self-publishing internet software that is acessible from any computer. Most people only need one 2 1/2-hour training session to get the hang of it. There are no hidden fees and no catches.

Each group and team will build and maintain its own site. Post game results, schedules, a calendar of events, bulletin board, lists of officials and team rosters, photos and/or directions to fields. Coming very soon - each group will have the capability of holding its own online chats.

This is a great way for sports teams and organizations to get their results and message to the public using the web through Town Online.

The program is available to all youth, adult, recreational and high school sports teams and organizations. Even groups who already have websites are invited to join in and be a part of a growing web network that receives over 1.5 million hits a month...and growing.

For more information on this exciting new program, contact Wayne Braverman at (781) 433-7842, or email wbraverman@cnc.com.

Skippers navigating through some rough seas

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

The year-long ride around the learning curve for the CHS girls soccer team continues.

With their opening day win over Middleboro and impressive tie against Hull last week, the young Skippers squad continues to work hard in an attempt to take their game to the post-season tournament level.

As always, though, there will be bumps along the road to having a winning program for the 1-7-1 team.

That road takes them through the South Shore League for the second time this season as they host Norwell (Friday) and Carver on Tuesday before traveling to Hull next Thursday.

"We're not quite there yet," said rookie head coach Debbie Beal. "We've done some good things over the year but we still have a lot to learn as a team. We are not a bad team, it's just that we haven't been able to develop a killer instinct yet. They're not finishing the plays when they have the chance. We need to put that final nail in the coffin.

"We've just got to go at it a little bit harder," added Beal. "The spirit is definitely willing, but it's just a matter of getting it done. They're more than willing to move around to different positions and do what's needed for the team to win."

Beal was also happy with the effort her team put forth in the tie against Hull.

"We had so many chances in the second half of that game to put it away but the ball just didn't ever seem to bounce our way," said Beal. "They've got a tough keeper, but we weren't intimidated at all and just kept firing the ball at the net. We made the opportunities happen, but we just couldn't finish."

Their latest obstacle came Thursday night at home against Abington when the pre-game warm-up turned into community auditions for a new goaltender when the regular keeper, junior Alex DeRosa, was unavailable to play.

"We have a major shortage of girl goalkeepers in this school system," said Beal with a chuckle. "Kids were lining up at the door to play goalie when I was their age, but it's a lot different now."

Since somebody's got to be in the net, the lucky player this night was junior defender Jessie Zerendow who ended up being one of the highlights of the season so far.

"She was unbelievable," said Beal about her new find, who made nine strong saves before a shot was finally able to get behind her late in the first half. "You would not have believed that the first time Jessie had ever played goalie was five minutes before this game.

"Jessie was phenomenal and came up with some big saves that kept us in the game."

With an inexperienced keeper, Beal said her backs and midfielders had to step up and take charge to protect the net.

"Alex is so solid that she is like a security blanket back there for the defenders and they might get a little bit too relaxed because they know she'll be there," said Beal. "With someone else back there they'll actually play better because they know it's up to them. Things start to click faster and they'll move the ball out of the zone faster."

tackle and Caldwell at guard.

A play-making block by fullback Justin Golden enables quarterback Jamie DeMichele to fire a strike to senior end Sean Parkinson at the Cohasset 34 yard line. Golden gained the first with a two yard carry, and a draw play for Trowers gained still more yardage.

But the Crusaders stormed the backfield and sacked DeMichele for a six yard loss. Golden countered with an eight-yard gain, but the momentum was lost and Cohasset was forced to punt.

Again the Carver offense got rolling, and again they were stymied by the emerging Skipper defense. Seniors Greg Taylor and Adam Sasso both made tackles and Greg Parkinson fought his way into the backfield to drop a ballcarrier for a two-yard loss. A hungry swarm of Cohasset tacklers, including Alex Russell, Caldwell, Sasso and Sean Parkinson snowed under the Carver quarterback for a sack.

Then came another huge defensive play, as the Crusaders faced fourth and short on the Cohasset 44. Sasso met the ballcarrier coming around end, stood him up, and deposited him on his backside to stuff the attempt and give the Skippers the ball back.

Cohasset's offense couldn't get cooking and opted to punt on fourth down. Sean Parkinson, coming into his own on special teams, hustled downfield and was waiting eagerly to pounce on the pigskin when it was fumbled by the punt returner. The visitors were in prime real estate as they started their drive at the Carver 27 yard line.

Penalties forced a second and 20, but a tackle-breaking 24-yard run by Trowers brought Cohasset down to the 15, with first and 10. But the Carver defense held and both teams had posted goose eggs when they headed to the lockerroom.

The Crusaders came out strong in the second half and McDonald kept breaking through the defensive line and linebacking corps, before being brought down, often by Shepherd with textbook tackles. But the home team proved overpowering on their maiden drive after the break, and McDonald found the endzone from eight yards out. Caldwell batted down the two point conversion pass attempt and the Crusaders stood a tantalizingly small six point away.

Taylor made a very nice catch on the line drive kick-off and put on a burst of speed to the Skipper 36-yard line for a 20-yard return. Following strong blocks by Laugelle, Golden began to gobble up yardage. Penalties on both sides slowed the drive, and the five minute drive ended after Cohasset could do no more despite nearly crossing into Carver's red zone.

Once again, the Skipper defense rose to the occasion and put their offensive counterparts in position to win the game. They forced a punt, which Roine carried to his own 30. Cohasset went right to work, as DeMichele hooked up with freshman end Nick Bolster for a nine-yard pick-up.

Trowers also gained nine, this on a run to the Cohasset 48. DeMichele hit Trowers through the air and the sophomore back was brought down at the Carver 42. With Shepherd now carrying the ball, to replace the weary Trowers who had just posted back-to-back 100-plus yard games, Cohasset looked as if it were going to hit paydirt. Shepherd rushed for eight to the Carver 24.

Shepherd and his offensive line did what they could, but the Crusader wall refused to yield. Cohasset was forced to turn over on downs with 1:11 remaining in the game. But the Skippers walked off the field with the knowledge that they had fought a capable Crusader team almost to a standstill.

Captain Golden put the game in perspective.

"The upside to a tough loss like this is that our defense made a big statement. Our offense played well at times, but we made a couple of stupid mistakes inside their 20 that killed our drives. It was a war and we lost. We need to win the next one."

That next one is a Friday night nautical battle in Abington, where the Skippers will square off against the Green Waves.

Skippers vs Green Wave

THE GAME: Cohasset (1-2, 0-1 in South Shore League) at Abington (2-1, 1-0 in SSL), 7 p.m.

THE HISTORY: Abington won last year, 21-12.

THE SKINNY: Abington is on a roll after their 18-12 win over SSL rival Norton while Cohasset wasn't able to put anything on the board at Carver in their 6-0 loss. Both team are experiencing somewhat of a resurgence this season and are coming together in what could be a very good game. With the win Abington can go 3-1 for the first time in a long time.

THE PEOPLE TO WATCH: Both teams have someone who can break the game open with one carry of the football. Skippers sophomore Daniel Trowers has been a pleasant surprise this season while Abington's Marcus LaPointe, who rushed for 157 yards against Norton, has been having a great year on both sides of the ball.

Using wood or glass debated

Doors get top billing at youth resources meeting

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The four teens and four adults present at a special meeting of the Youth Resources Committee Tuesday night spent close to two hours in negotiations about the garage doors for the new Teen Center in the town parking lot.

Security, user-safety, door longevity, aesthetics, maintenance and expense were the factors weighed by the group, who were fairly divided between wanting to continue with the garage theme versus replacing the wooden overhead doors with snazzier-looking glass doors.

What it boiled down to for all involved was aesthetics versus expense.

Committee member Liz Bates had followed up on maintaining and/or fixing the two doors currently in place at the garage. The left door on the Red Lion Inn side of the structure is in good enough condition to be moved to the right to replace the dilapidated one which could fetch about $200 if sold. The cost would come to $6,000 to $6,500, estimated Bates.

The option of glass doors was researched by committee member Tony Bramblett, who pointed out that the $5,265 it would cost for two new glass doors plus a front handicap-access ramp would be a better deal than the overhanging doors.

While the numbers spoke clearly, aesthetics were just as debatable.

Committee chairman Jack Worley told members that he had received seven calls from students, all in favor of keeping the garage door style.

"We have a financial issue here and limited funds to work with. We're looking at $4,100 for the glass doors versus $5,500 and hidden costs for the wooden doors. That's 50 percent of the money we have now. I hope that we take that into consideration and can rise above our emotions about what we want. Getting people to come and policing it will be the hard part," said member Ron Nicynski.

"If we keep losing the glass on the door, then we have a bigger problem than doors. That's a serious problem."
— committee member Ron Nicynski

"We'll have to get out there and raise some more money," said Bates to the teens who seemed most keen on restoring the overhanging doors. "We'll have a pretty long wish list—TV, sound system, snack bar...".

Bates also pointed out that the police had said not to go with glass because it could attract vandalism. "Police Chief Brian Noonan had suggested that the doors be kept low-key, not too nice," she said.

"I could name 10 kids off the top of my head who are involved in this," said one of the teens, as the others nodded in agreement. "They all hang around at night downtown, just a block or two from the garage. Their parents don't care that they're out there. It's the kids who don't come to our garage that are going to ruin it for us."

Some of the budget for the garage, which once housed the highway department, will have to go toward installing Plexiglas windows at the back of the garage to prevent breakage.

Committee member Matt Ogrodnik reported to the committee that absentee member Rose Collins did not want the glass doors because "people would probably prefer wood and might not like the impression of large glass doors." Collins had also informed Worley by phone of her vote in advance of the Tuesday night meeting.

The glass doors at first lost votes, too, because of the vandalism problem.

"If we keep losing the glass on the door, then we have a bigger problem than doors," said Nicynski. "That's a serious problem."

Members decided in a to put in one glass door on the left side of the garage, replace the right door with the left one and sell the broken-down right door to help cut costs.

Curfew set for Trick-or-Treaters

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The board of selectmen have elected to set a trick or treat curfew of 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. this year to prevent Halloween trickery in the later hours.

The curfew is in response to the events of two Halloweens ago, when about 100 juveniles roamed about the town in packs of 20 to 30, pelting two bicycle patrol officers, as well as three cruisers, with eggs.

"It really opened people's eyes," said school committee member Mark DeGiacomo, referring to the seriousness of the egging incidents. The school board discussed the issue last week.

Last year, efforts to keep Cohasset egg-free on Halloween were put into place to avoid another episode of vandalism downtown.

In the past despite local grocery and convenience store managers' compliance with Police Chief Brian Noonan's request to not sell eggs to youths in the week prior to Halloween, the resourceful teens had gone out of town or bought the missiles on the "black market" for $5 a dozen.

Last year's Halloween calm has been credited to the voluntary curfew and teen dances and a football game, which seemed to keep the high-jinx in check. Noonan is hoping for a calm Halloween this year, too.

School technology meeting slated

The advisory committee and selectmen will meet 7 p.m., Oct. 14 at the high school's AV room to review the $350,000 technology request form the school for the Oct. 26 special town meeting.

School superintendent Dr. Ted Malvey informed school committee last week to mark their calendars for the meeting in which the moneys requested for updating the school's technology will be discussed.

School committee member Joe McElroy suggested to Malvey that the town's Computer Study Committee and the Capitol Budget Committee be invited to attend so that they can be kept appraised of the matter.

Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers to meet

A regularly scheduled meeting of the Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers will take place at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 19 at the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset.

Taxpayers will meet with the Library Trustees regarding their Osgood Reuse and discuss other special town meeting warrant articles.

Also, taxpayer-sponsored articles for the Annual Town Meeting 1999 Election Ballot will be discussed and voted upon.

Parking is available at Town Hall. Taxpayer meetings are open to all. For more information call 383-0024.

LIBRARY CORNER

New database at library

Next time you visit the reference room of the Paul Pratt Library, be sure to try the new SIRS Researcher database. SIRS provides easy access to full-text articles on social issues. Broadly defined, these topics include aging, alcohol abuse, crime, capital punishment, ethics, government, human rights, mental health, etc. The articles have been selected from more than 1,200 newspapers, magazines, journals and U.S. government publications and provide authoritative, but non-technical, information to meet the needs of students and general readers.

Concise information from the "1998 World Almanac and Book of Facts" is also included along with 300 colorful maps of the world. A colorful screen and point and click technology makes searching the database easy. Articles and graphics can be printed on a color printer.

SIRS stands for Social Issues Resources Series, a publisher that has long served the research needs of small libraries. Originally in printed format, and now in electronic CD-rom format, the SIRS Researcher is used in school and public libraries across the country. "This is an excellent example of the intermediate technology now available to libraries," said Library Director Janet Husband. "The SIRS Researcher on CD-rom is easier to use than either the printed version or the internet version. I hope it will be popular with our library users."

Monetary gifts are always welcome at the library. Potential donors have their choice of several ways to make a gift.

Donors may mail or bring to the library a check in any amount (or cash) made out to the "Paul Pratt Memorial Library." Include instructions on how you would like the donation to be used, i.e., for books, for books on a particular subject, for children's books, etc. Equipment and furniture are also needed at the library and donations may be earmarked for that use. Donor plates may be placed on the books, furniture or equipment purchased with donated funds as the donor prefers. Call the library director if you would like a suggestion as to the furniture or equipment currently needed by the library. At the moment, the library needs computers and secretarial chairs most.

Donors may also contribute to the library's Endowment Fund. Mail or bring your check made out to "Paul Pratt Memorial Library Endowment Fund." These donations will be added to the funds invested and controlled by the Library Trustees and the Endowment Fund Advisory Board to supplement the library's town budget. Because only the interest may be expended, donations to the Endowment Fund will go on to benefit the library in perpetuity. Endowment fund income is usually spent on books and other library materials.

A separate named endowment fund may be created to accommodate an individual who wishes to make a significant donation. Call the Library Director or a Library Trustee about establishing such a fund. Donor plates for these funds are usually custom printed. Donors may specify the use of income from these funds.

Monetary donations in any amount may also be made to the "Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library," an independent body which generously supports the continuing work of the library. Checks mailed to the library will be forwarded to the Treasurer of the Friends.

Ripley Media Center upgrades

Recent improvements at the Ripley Media Center at Cohasset Middle High School have upgraded the look of the facility. A new rug, clean painted walls and a new library media specialist have contributed to the changes. Joan Gallagher, a veteran of both public and school libraries, has set her goal for this year. She wants to expand the materials collection and work with staff and students to use both traditional and newer research tools to their fullest.

Parents or other Cohasset residents who would like to volunteer to assist with ongoing, as well as, special projects are invited to call the Ripley at 383-2447 for details.

IT'S HAPPENING

Appalachia Project deadline: Oct. 15

The Cohasset Applachia Service Project is receiving registrations for their 1999 work project trip. Tentative dates for the ASP '99 trip are June 26 through July 4, 1999. The trip is open to anyone, 10th grade and over. Adults are also encouraged to sign on as advisors for the trip. There are forms available in the office at Cohasset High School, and at the following churches here in Cohasset: Second Congregational, First Parish, St. Stephen's Episcopal, St. Anthony's Catholic and Panagia Greek Orthodox. Forms with a non-refundable fee of $50 must be returned by Oct. 15. For information call Gary Ritts at (781) 383-0345.

Aging is subject of series

A four-session program for Elders, their families and caregivers, will be presented Wednesday evenings from 7 to 9, Oct. 14, 21, 28 and Nov. 4 at Cohasset Elder Affairs, 3 North Main St. The regional program will be sponsored by Cohasset Elder Affairs, Hingham Elder Services, the Hull, Norwell and Scituate Councils on Aging, Affiliated Community VNA, Inc. and the Norwell VNA, Inc.

The first program, Oct. 14, will cover the Physical Aspects of Aging, an overview of the normal aging process, as well as those diseases that are age-related. Presenters will be Meg Doherty, MS, RN, Executive Director, Norwell Visiting Nurse Association, Inc. and Susan R. Donaldson, MD, Medical Director, Psychiatry Division, Quincy Hospital.

Farmers' Market Harvest Folk Festival

The Third Annual Cohasset Village Farmers' Market Harvest Folk Festival will be held Thursday, Oct. 15, from 1:30 to 6:30 p.m. on Cohasset Common and in historic Cohasset Village, South Main Street (rain date is Thursday, Oct. 22). Come and harvest some fresh vegetables, plants, flowers, herbs, breads, honey products, baked goods, lobsters, jams and jellies, homemade soaps and many crafts. Your children will have a great time enjoying the many activities such as Story Telling, by Diane Edgecomb; The B.J. Hickman Magic Show, Pony Rides, Hay Rides, Face Painting, Pumpkin Decorating, Scarecrow Decorating, Pumpkin Luminary, Gymnastic Demonstrations and a Village Scavenger Hunt. Enjoy fresh lobster, chowder and corn on the cob while listening to great folk music featuring singer/songwriter Mark Purcell, Chris McNeil and the Homemade Jamb String Band. Learn a few great harvest recipes from cooking demonstrations and you will not want to miss the Harvest Bounty Soup to benefit the Cohasset Food Panty. Donations for the Food Pantry will be accepted.

If you need directions or further information, call the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce at (781) 383-1010.

October flu clinics planned

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League announce the October Flu Clinics:

It's time to "winterize and immunize!" The best way to protect yourself from the flu is a yearly flu shot. Who should get a flu shot?

People who are 65 or older.

Children or adults with chronic lung disease, heart disease, diabetes or other chronic health problems. Children or teens who, for medical reasons, take an aspirin every day.

People who live with or take care of someone who is at risk of getting the flu (health care workers, primary care givers, etc.)

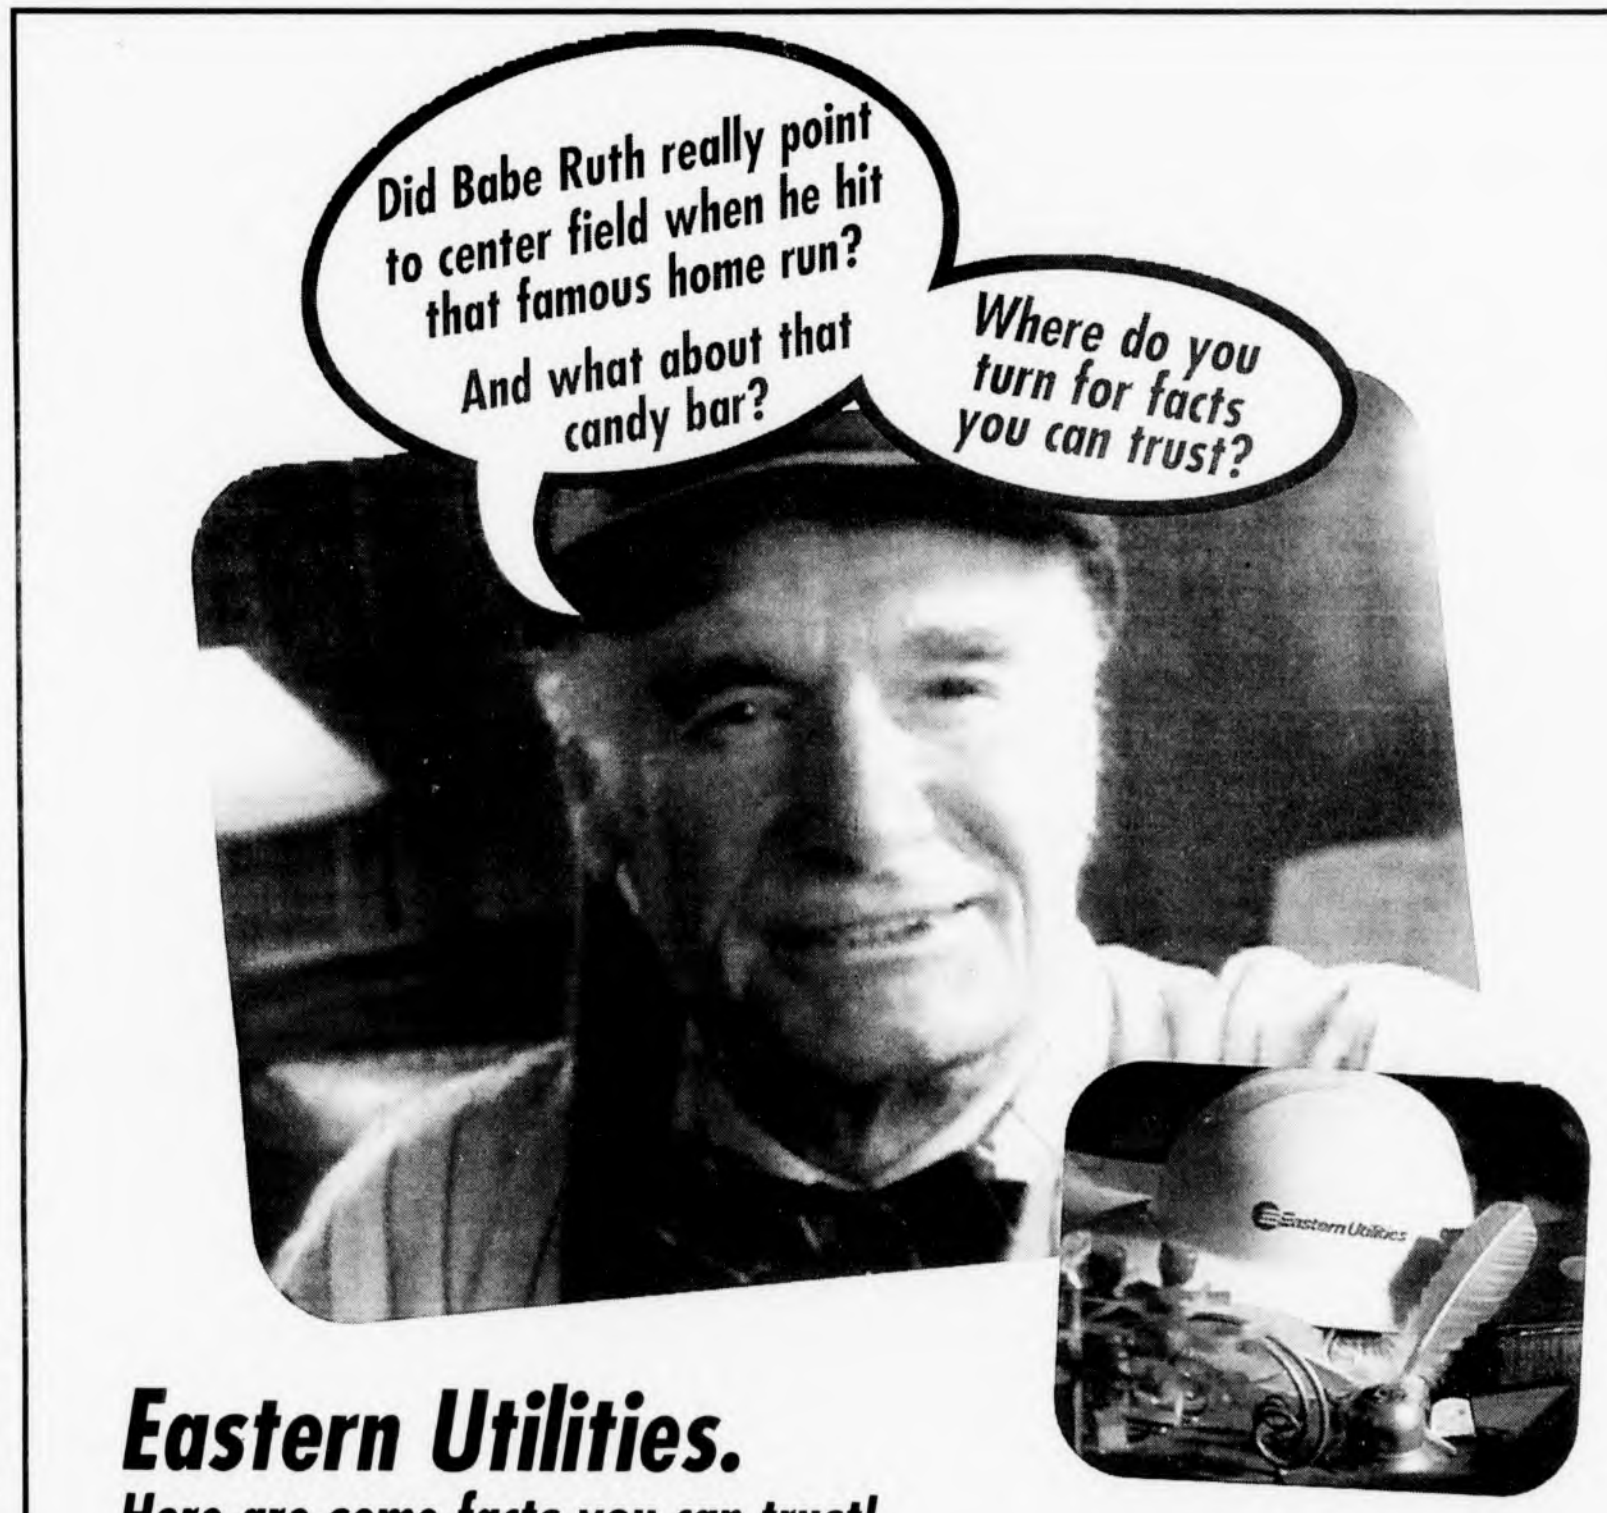
Anyone wanting extra protection during the winter months from the current flu strains.

There will be two flu clinics for seniors:

1. Tuesday, Oct. 13, 10 a.m. to noon, at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave.

2. Friday, Oct. 16, 10 a.m. to noon at Harborview, 60 Elm St.

Community flu clinics for all Cohasset residents:



1. Saturday, Oct. 17, 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave.

2. Saturday, Oct. 24, 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave.

3. Tuesday, Oct. 27, 7 to 9 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave.

Note: Please wear a short sleeve shirt.

Any seniors who have not received the pneumonia vaccine or who have not had a tetanus booster for 10 years or more, may call the league office at 383-0771 or 383-0821 for our walk-in clinic hours. All vaccines are free for Cohasset residents.

Eastern Utilities.

Here are some facts you can trust!

- With deregulation, you will be able to buy electricity from a competitive supplier.
- But Eastern Utilities will still be your distribution or "wires" company.
- We'll still maintain power lines and provide safe reliable service.
- We'll still get you back in power after any storm or other emergency.
- We'll still manage billing and provide customer service.
- We'll still be in our communities — offering safety-education programs to children & adults.
- We'll still offer conservation programs to help you save energy and money.

If you have any questions, or to get information about restructuring:

By the way... As it usually is with legends, these two are a bit cloudy. As for pointing: It was the third game of the 1932 World Series; the Yankees playing at Chicago's Wrigley Field. There was no love lost between the teams - and the Cubs were taunting Ruth as he came to bat in the fifth inning. The Babe took two strikes and then held up two fingers - as if to say: "That's two!" And then he gestured out toward the mound - or maybe the center field bleachers. He hit the next pitch 500 feet into those bleachers - the longest home run ever hit at Wrigley Field. Ruth both denied and affirmed that he had indeed pointed. The acclaimed sportswriter Grantland Rice said that Ruth did point - did, indeed, "call the shot." [Source: New York Yankees home page: http://www.yankees.com/ruth.trib/br.story.p4.html] As for the candy bar: The Curtiss Candy Co. in Chicago claimed that the Baby Ruth bar was named for Ruth Cleveland, the daughter of President Grover Cleveland: she was the first baby ever born in the White House. (Ruth Cleveland tragically died of diphtheria at age 13.) However, many people (including the Babe himself) thought the candy bar was named after George Herman Ruth, the Yankee slugger. Police made 13 arrests last month

September was yet another busy month for the Cohasset Police Department.

During the month, the department made a total of 13 arrests. Six were for outstanding warrants, two were for Operating Under the Influence of Alcohol and one for Violation of a Protective Order. There was one arrest for Receiving Stolen Property, one for motor vehicle violations and, finally, two for Protective Custody.

There was one Breaking and Entering reported, a business.

During September, the Department received a total of 749 calls for service. Of those calls, 123 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

During September, the department issued 239 traffic citations for fines totaling $9,625 and 108 parking tickets for fines totaling $1,660.

For the past several weeks, the State Police Stop Team has been assisting with radar patrols on Route 3A. There was no accident in the Route 3A and Beechwood Street area for more than a month.

Finally, the South Shore Music Circus ended their season featuring 37 shows. As in past years, the South Shore Music Circus ran a very professional operation and there were no major incidents occurring during the season.

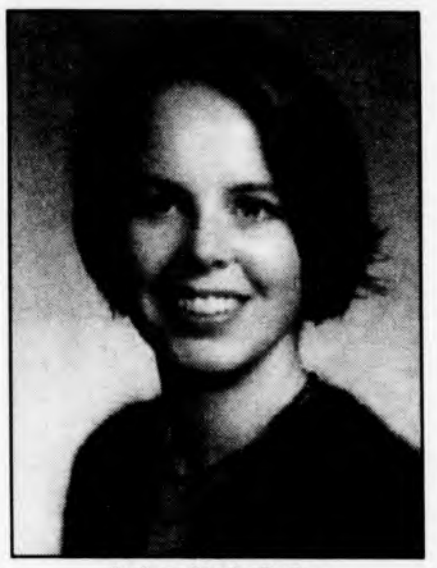
OBITUARIES



Andrea Marie Burke

The funeral of Andrea Marie Burke, an accomplished scholar, singer and athlete, was Oct. 6. Andrea died after a valiant 10-year struggle with brain cancer, diagnosed soon after graduating from Harvard College. She was 35 years old.

She was the daughter of Thomas E. and M. Rita Gilligan Burke and sister of Joanna M. Burke of Malibu, Calif., Thomas W. Burke of Charlotte, N.C., Maryadele Colville, Portola Valley, Calif.; Christopher J. Burke, Lake Bluff, Ill., John A. Burke, Houston, Texas, and the late Patricia E. Burke.

Andrea and her brothers and sisters were born and raised in Cohasset. Her love of music and showmanship became apparent when at age three she started competing and performing as a diminutive figure skater at Cohasset Winter Gardens, winning third place in New England Juvenile Tournament. Her talent as a singer-actress surprised her family when she sang the lead in "Joseph and the Multicolored Coat," at Deerhill School as a sixth-grader.

She entered Milton Academy as a seventh-grader where she received a succession of honors including the Benjamin Fosdick Harding Latin prize, many Milton speech team awards, editor of the Milton school paper, the lead in an original senior year musical, "44 B.C.," and was a member of the Varsity Field Hockey Team. She completed her Milton years as valedictorian of the Class of '81 Girls' School. Her teen years also found her winning awards as a champion junior golfer, tennis team player and received her sailing master.

She was accepted Early Action at Harvard, majored in English and graduated with honors in the class of '85-'86. Andrea's extra curricular at Harvard involved writing for "The Salient," the Harvard Radcliffe Conservative Club publication and pursuing her first love, music. Starting freshman year she was the lead singer in a campus rock band, "Hand to Mouth," and every year appeared in Hasty Pudding musicals. Globe critic John Engstrom, in his review (4/26/84) of Andrea's lead in a campus production of a Neil Simon musical "exudes such musical and dramatic authority, it's hard to believe she hasn't been singing and acting professionally for years." Arthur Freidman, Boston Herald Theater Critic, in a review (11/13/84) of Andrea's one-woman performance in a musical production, "Chinese Cabaret" at the Wang Center China Showcase, "A voice for which angels would throw down their spears and water heaven with their tears."

After brain surgery at Mass General Hospital in Boston, Andrea chose to settle in Santa Monica where she had gone to pursue a singing career. With her mental acumen compromised, most employment was limited. She was able to gain satisfaction through her English-Spanish tutoring business, her myriad Pro-Life endeavors, regular involvement in Santa Monica's Wellness Community (cancer support group), daily ministering to Santa Monica's street people praying, listening and sharing food, and most important to her was being a daily communicant at Saint Monica's Church. Many would say she saved her "best performance" for her last.

The McNamara Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset handled arrangements. Burial was at Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Rose C. Cilento

Rose C. (Gray) Cilento of Cohasset, wife of the late Angelo A. Cilento, died Thursday, Sept. 10 at the Cohasset Knoll Skilled Nursing Facility.

Mrs. Cilento was a secretary for the Chevrolet Division of General Motors in Bloomfield, N.J., for 30 years.

She was born in Newark and graduated from the secretarial school at the Blessed Sacrament School.

Mrs. Cilento leaves a son, Bartley G. Cilento, MD of Scituate; eight grandchildren; and 15 great-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Sept. 14 at St. Mary of the Nativity Church in Scituate. Arrangements were made by the Richardson-Gaffey Funeral Home, 382 First Parish Road, Scituate.

Donations in Mrs. Cilento's memory may be made to Hospice of the South Shore, P.O. Box 859060, Braintree, 02185.

Sewer costs don't take a nose dive

Project funding on town meeting agenda

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

If sewer commissioners could turn back the clock to the 1997 annual town meeting — there's little doubt they would ask for more money to sewer North Cohasset.

The best engineering estimates at the time showed the project would cost about $6.6 million.

But after three bid rounds with the same bad news, commissioners are resigned to the fact it will cost about 40 percent more than anticipated to connect the affected homes to the Hull treatment plant.

"Nothing is ever going to change that," said Chairman Ted Guild.

The sewer commission will explain options on how to pay for the cost overrun and its impact on homeowners in North Cohasset at a special sewer forum at 7:30 p.m. tonight at Cohasset Town Hall.

Voters at the Oct. 26 Special Town Meeting will be asked to appropriate about $2.5 million to finish the project which includes connecting about 320 "dwelling units" in North Cohasset to a sewer main (hook ups include houses, condos and apartments). Installation of the sewer main — known as Phase One of the project — is about 50 percent complete and is being paid for with part of the original appropriation.

"Their engineers made a horrendous error so why should we be asked to pick up the burden for their engineers' mistake?"
— Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road

Sewer commissioners don't expect voters to reject the additional appropriation because the users will pay the town back the entire cost of the increase through betterment's as-

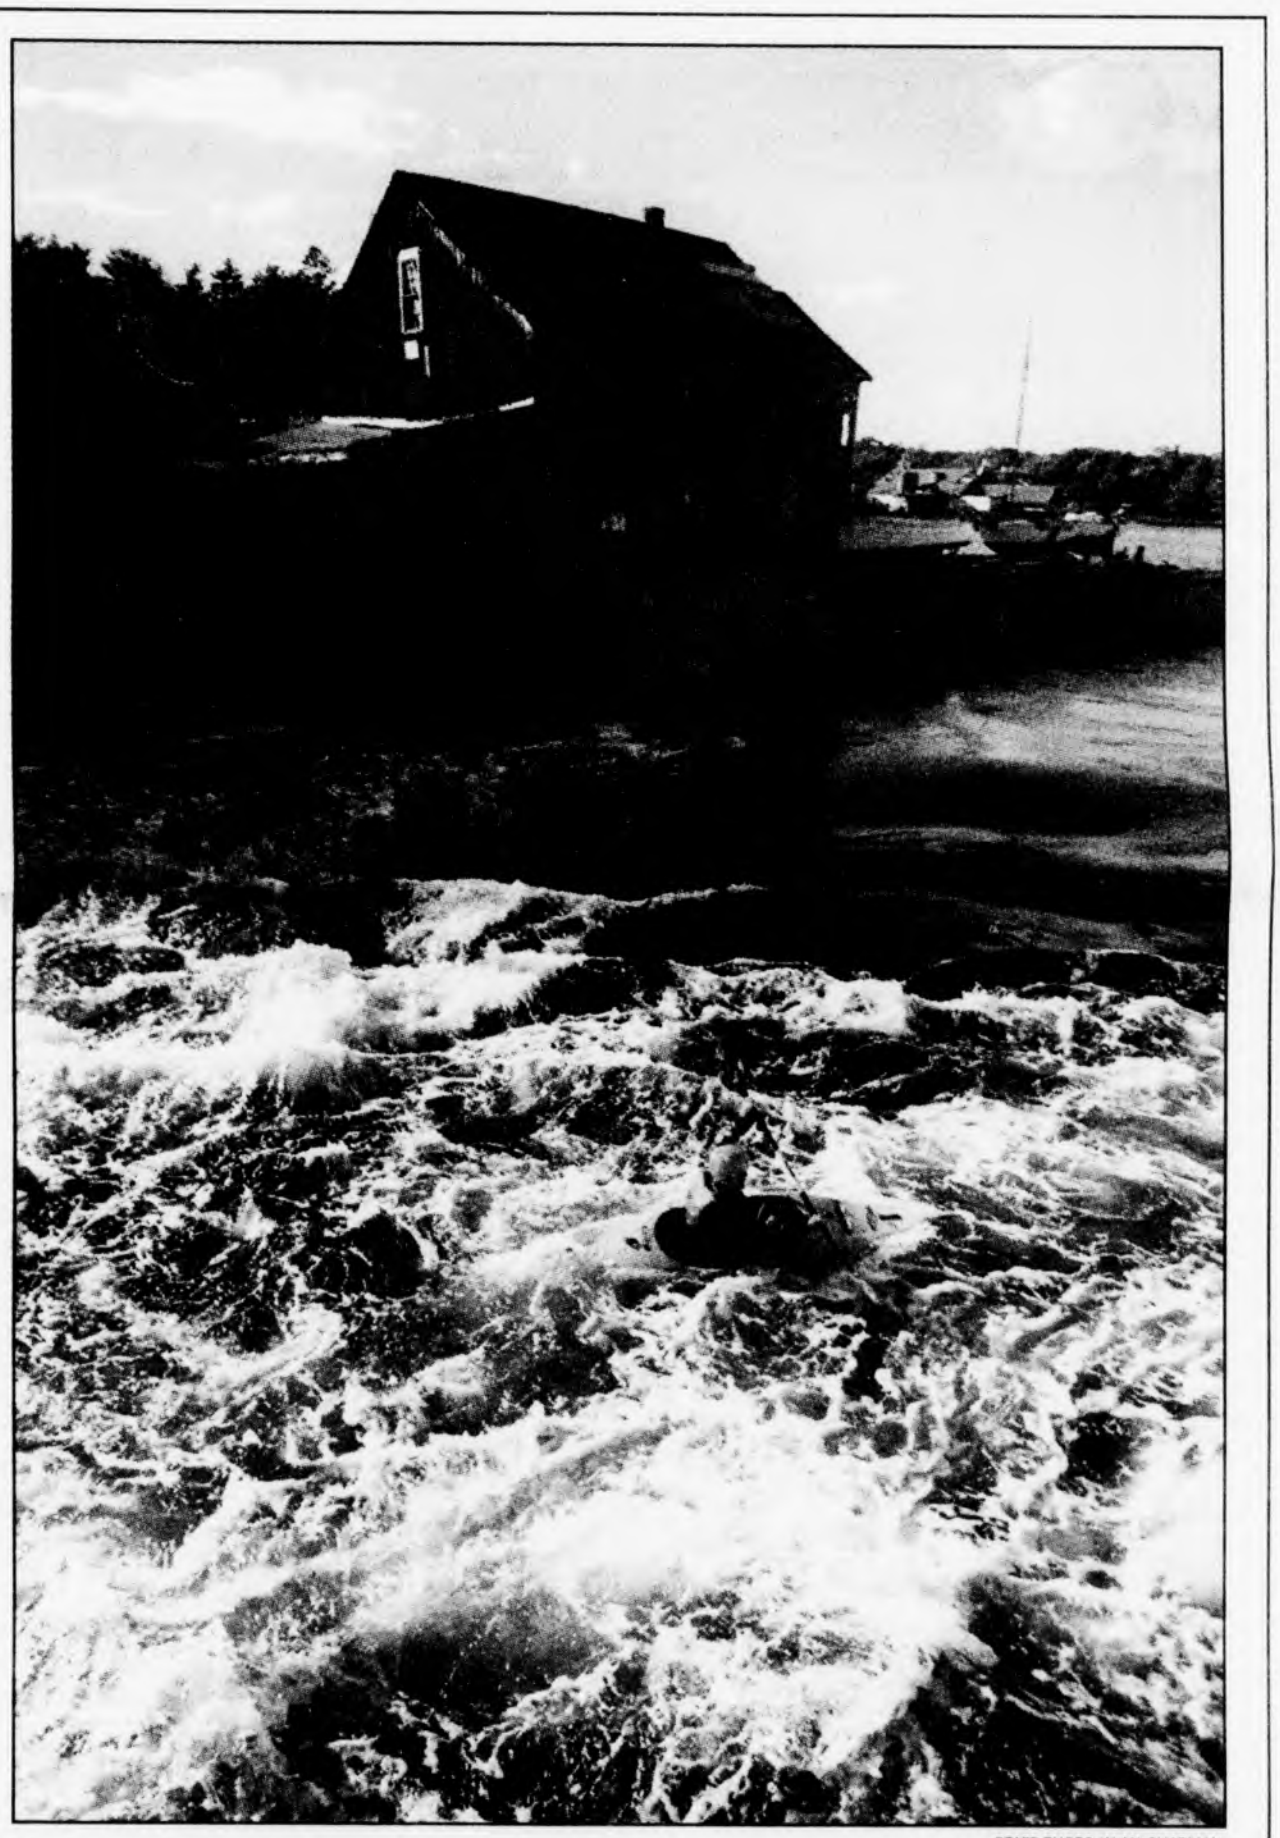
Catching speeders: that's the ticket

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset residents are fed up with drivers exceeding the speed limit and commuters using side street as shortcuts. It seems the selectmen discuss some kind of traffic problem every time they meet. At a recent meeting, selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said more residents ask her about traffic conditions than any other problem in town. Much of the traffic and many of the problems come from out-of-town commuters passing through Cohasset to reach jobs and other destinations. But here's a lesser known fact: many of the speeders and traffic law violators live in town.

This year, Cohasset police have issued 1,380 tickets so far or 4.6 per day, worth about $69,000.



Police Chief Brian Noonan said there is no doubt that his department issues more traffic tickets to out-of-town commuters than to residents of Cohasset. Commuters from Marshfield, Norwell and Scituate frequently cut through Cohasset to get to Route 3A, to reach other southerly destinations, or to avoid crowded secondary roads like Route 228. But Cohasset residents still account for many of the tickets issued within town borders.

"Residents ask up to set up the radar in certain areas of town, which we do, and it seems the first car we pull over is always a Cohasset resident," Noonan said. "I would kindly like to say there are a lot of problems with residents too."

It's not that Noonan is saying that residents are the problem. But based on the number of tickets the police issue to locals, residents are contributing to traffic problems.

The number of tickets issued by police is much higher this year than last year. Last year, Cohasset police

Cohasset Harbor walkway floated

By Mike Campbell
CORRESPONDENT

Jim Shipsky had one thought in his mind when he began to search for a way to revitalize the harbor - "Wouldn't it be nice if you could walk around the harbor?"

Shipsky, a local architect hired with the help of a $5,000 state grant, has spent the past few months gathering public opinions and developing plans on how best to revitalize the harbor and better connect the area to the village. Last night, he presented a preliminary plan of the harbor district to about 20 residents at a public meeting hosted by the Village Revitalization Task Force at town hall.

"I think if you drive around the harbor your impression is it's a beautiful, charming harbor," Shipsky said. "I was asked to look at it as a planner. Ninety-five percent is gorgeous, but I'm focusing on that other five percent."

Shipsky conducted his work on the premise of making the area more pedestrian-friendly. At the meeting, he used a series of slides to detail the obstacles one would encounter attempting to walk from the Hagerty property, over to Government Island, down Border Street and around the Kimball's motel. He highlighted downed utility poles that must be traversed on Gov-

Police department receives $2800 grant

The Norfolk County Sheriff's Department recently awarded Cohasset police with grant for $2812 to help pay for photographic and forensic equipment to support investigative functions of the detective unit.

The grant is one of 23 totaling $64,000 awarded to police departments as part of the sheriff department's Public Safety Grant Program.

The grants are possible because of the restructuring of the Civil Process Division, which collects fees for delivery of various court documents to litigants.

"By reorganizing the Civil Process Division, we've generated a profit which I believe should be returned to the county's taxpayers. The most direct way to do that is through public safety grants to local police departments. That saves taxpayers from funding those needs through property taxes," Sheriff Jack Flood said.

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan requested the grant to obtain equipment necessary to support the department's investigative unit.

"Currently, we lack the equipment that other police agencies take for granted," he said. "For example, photographic equipment is necessary to properly document crime scenes as is forensic equipment to properly process crime scenes and evidence."

Elderly housing, a growing concern to many

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

A six-to-one vote by the Osgood Reuse Committee Sept. 17 to recommend Keen Development Corp. of Cambridge's proposal of 29 market-rate condos for the old Osgood School was an ambivalent decision, with some members preferring the non-profit South Shore Housing plan that offered more affordable housing. (A 3-to-4 vote had initially been cast against the South Shore Housing proposal).

The issue will go before town meeting Oct. 26. And although, the article is worded simply to allow selectmen to dispose of the old school – if Selectman Diane Sullivan has her way, the pros and cons of the Keen and South Shore proposals will be debated.

According to town manager Mark Haddad, the town would receive a flat $800,000 from Keen, or $500,000 plus half the profits from the $195,000- to $265,000-priced condos. That return could bring the town's earnings from the project to $1.1 million. The estimated annual tax revenue from the development would be $99,000. However, should Keen put in affordable housing units, the amount offered for the property and the tax revenue would be reduced. The Osgood Reuse Committee was given the charge two years ago to find the best way to return the school to the tax rolls.

The current state of the elderly housing situation in Cohasset is of growing concern, given that the population is expanding in number.

According to Cohasset Housing Authority Chairman John D. Muncey, a 1990 Elder Affairs census of the town found 1,352 people aged 60 or older, comprising 20 percent of the population. A 1998 census found that the over-60 group now comprises 23 percent of the town's residents and approximately 450 of them are over 75 years of age; about a third of the senior population.

A 1998 census found that the over-60 group now comprises 23 percent of the town's residents and approximately 450 of them are over 75 years of age, about a third of the senior population.

"The elderly housing situation is a need that is not now being met," said Muncey. "If you want state housing like we have at 60 Elm St., that's state funded. There is no state money for building that type of housing anymore. It's difficult to get something like that today, which is why we wanted to get the old Osgood school into the housing market—private housing for the elderly is expensive."

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray pointed out that all three housing authorities in her jurisdiction of Cohasset, Hull and Hingham have a waiting list. Even the old Lincoln School in Hingham, also converted for elderly housing, has a waiting list. "They also now allow disabled people, no matter what their age, which makes the waiting list even longer," explained Murray.

The Elm Street housing, built in 1975, is located just behind the town police and fire stations, and enjoys walking proximity to the village. Residents enjoy large windows that look out on shrubbery carefully maintained by maintenance man Vinny Mischoli for the last 10 years.

"This is a nice place," said Mischoli, of the 64 units of Nantucket-style condos. "A lot of people don't even know it's here. I think if more people knew that this place existed, we'd have an even longer waiting list."

According to Cohasset Housing Authority administrator Marilyn LeBlanc, Elm Street complex is "working well, but space is always an issue." At this time, there are about 40 people waiting for an apartment at Elm Street.

The wait list is updated each year, with about 10 percent missing from the roll for a variety of reasons. There are also emergency situations which take priority.

"People deserve a decent place to live, no matter what their resources are," said LeBlanc. "That's why we need housing authorities to take care of the town's elders. People who live and work here are given local preference and they're taken in first."

According to Boston's Citizens Housing and Planning Association's executive director Aaron Gornstein, there has been very little state-subsidized housing built in recent years. "We've been trying to raise this issue and talk about the need to produce elderly housing. Some communities, especially smaller towns where people want to stay put, are really experiencing the shortage."

According to Gornstein, the private sector is certainly meeting the high-end, assisted-living needs and the wealthy elderly will fare very well. "It is meeting a segment of the market demand, but those units are $3,000 a month. What we would like to see is housing for the elderly on a fixed or low income. People want to be able to 'age in place,' meaning that they would like assistance with building a wheelchair ramp, getting home healthcare, or maybe a reduction in their property taxes which many elderly are now finding prohibitive."

Selectman Sullivan is well aware of the need for affordable housing for the elderly in Cohasset. Her side-by-side comparison of South Shore Housing's proposal with Keen's led her to view that the South Shore Housing proposal was better for the town's seniors.

"It did not bring the maximum return to the town financially," said Sullivan. "But I felt the greater need was for moderate housing. Eight of South Shore Housing's units would be $70,000 and $75,000, and they would be granted based on income guidelines of $31,000 and $33,000 for two bedrooms. That's affordable."

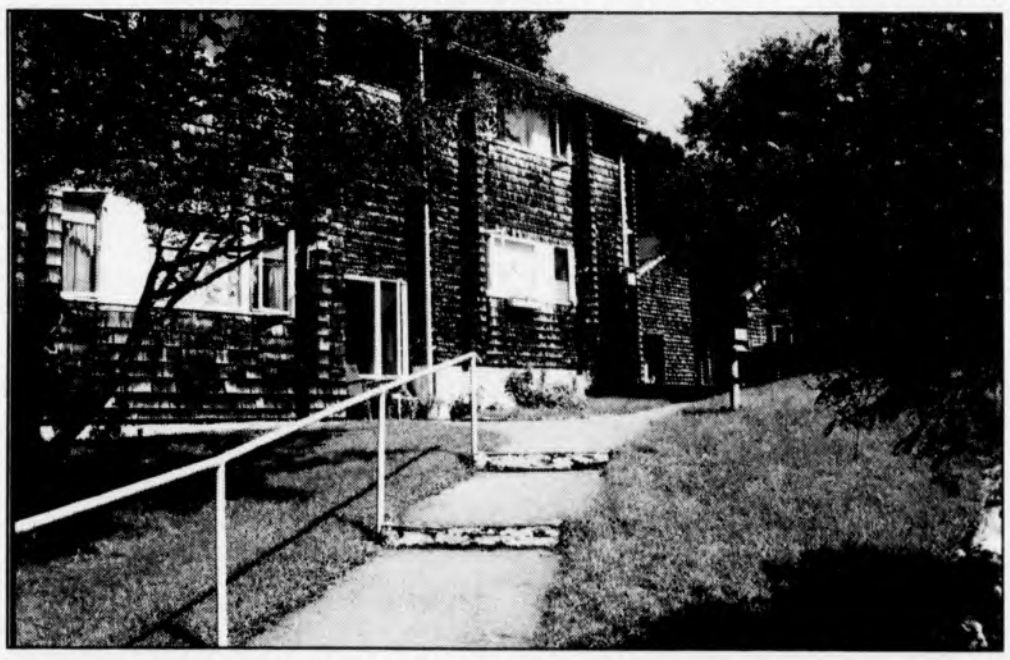
Compare that with the Keen proposal, with units ranging as high as $265,000, she said. There would also be condo fees with electricity, heat and air conditioning not included.

"If a person is selling a home and if they're really wealthy, they don't go into approximately 700 to 900 square feet," said Sullivan, who felt that affordable housing in town would encompass parents who, say, have struggled to put their children through school and may have used a great deal of equity on their homes. "They won't have a lot of money to put down on a luxury condo," she said.

According to Sullivan, the reuse committee had checked the references on Keen and the Kingston-based South Shore Housing, and both were excellent.

The only difference, so far as Sullivan can see, comes down to money for the town. "The up front money for SSH was $100,000 up front and 50% of the profits, estimated at $300,000. But if the units go for less money, that's less revenue for the town. So the town has to decide which is more important for its residents: to assist with seniors or maximize profits."

Sullivan also favored the use of space proposed by South Shore Housing, which would leave more of the old school open for the residents' use for meetings, lunch or whatever use they would like to make of the extra space.



But others in town are clamoring for use of the old Osgood, too.

Library trustee Patience Towle has argued before the reuse committee for a plan to install the town library at the old Osgood.

According to Towle, the Paul Pratt library building is appraised at $700,000 and could be converted to condo and office space which could net about $20,000 in annual tax revenues. A revamped library could also qualify for 40 percent state reimbursement.

The total cost of a new library would come to $751,000, which is $675,000 less than another proposal to build a new structure on the site for the library.

So far as the library issue is concerned, Sullivan sees that as a moot point now. "There is no state funding, which means there is no 40 percent return to the town as it was canceled and is not on the drawing board to be reinstated," she said. "But we have an ideal situation for 26 homes with eight low income homes for the elderly. There would be 18 units at $200,000 and eight at the $75,000 range—that encompasses affordable and low-income housing needs for the elderly."

The Elm Street complex, built in 1975, is located just behind the police and fire stations.

It is not clear when the issue comes to fall town meeting, if townspeople will hear a presentation on South Shore Housing or on the Keen proposal.

That's because Articles 6 and 7 of the Warrant for Special Town Meeting were written with the input of town counsel to prevent selectmen from being tied in legally to any given developer. The articles only suggest giving selectmen permission to "convey, sell or otherwise dispose of the building in conjunction with the School Committee vote of Sept. 10, 1998, declaring the building as surplus, or to take any other action relative thereto."

Sullivan, who would consider Keen if it could match what South Shore offers, sees the five-year waiting list for Elm Street as proof of an affordable elderly housing need in the community.

Muncey, too, would have preferred South Shore Housing's plan presented to the reuse committee, because he doesn't see Keen's proposal as affordable, although the company has offered alternative pricing structures. "If you move in there, you're only making a lateral move because your taxes and other expenses will be the same as in your $200,000 to $300,000 house, plus you've got the condo fees on top of it," he said.

"A lot of the seniors are in fixed incomes," said Muncey. "There are people that will tell you that the elderly don't seem to clamoring for housing but if you built affordable housing here, you'd be surprised at the number of people that would step forward for it."

"There are varying needs among the elderly," said Gornstein, of Citizens' Housing. "We advocate a spectrum of housing alternatives. It's tough because you have to find the funding to do it. The government at state and federal levels, especially federal, has fallen short in trying to meet the elderly housing needs in the Commonwealth. I'd like to say we're making a lot of progress, but we're not. I think people have learned a lot about this and how to do things cost-effectively in the last 10 years, but it's difficult . We're competing against education, day care and other worthwhile causes that bump up against this. Until we see people in dire need, that's what it takes to turn things around."

Cohasset Harbor walkway floated at village forum

ernment Island and the absence of a sidewalk after turning right onto the Border Street bridge.

Commenting on the section of Border Street between the old Chart House and Veterans Memorial Park, Shipsky said "the sidewalk is nothing more than a paint mark on the pavement. In the summer when the area is parked up, there's only about three feet for pedestrians."

Shipsky brought a proposed model of a continuous walkway following the aforementioned path to show those in attendance. He admitted that the design is strictly preliminary and parts are "tentative in the extreme."

"I really haven't designed anything," Shipsky said. " I just walked around the harbor and have taken my cue from what's already there."

The proposed walk would follow the shore from the Hagerty property, where he suggested two areas for seating (possibly with picnic tables), pass in front of the sailing club and follow the existing sea wall to the Gulf river, another spot ideal for possible seating. On his model, Shipsky accentuated the abundance of space on Government Island near the Minot Light Replica, with a cluster of white tents. He would like to see the area, which he says is approximately the same size as the Common, used for community events. Shipsky has received ideas ranging from a harborfest to a kayak competition that could be held at the area.

At the exit to Government Island, the path would turn right onto a new sidewalk and follow the side of the road until the Chart House parking lot. At the lot he would like to see the path situated next to the sea wall, but mentioned it would require discussion with the owner of the property since it is not town land. Next the path follows Border street to the Lawrence Wharf, an area Shipsky felt there was a "great deal of unrealized potential."

After arriving at the Veterans Memorial Park, the plan entered one of the stages he considered "tentative in the extreme." Shipsky proposed a floating walkway that would cut across the harbor from the park to the Town Pier on the opposite side. He also said there would be no intrusions on the privacy of the people staying at Kimballs and that there could even be a gangplank leading to the grounds of the motel. The architect felt the public dock would be a perfect place for a concession area.

Comments from those who attended the meeting were mixed. "You're going to have to expect the litter to increase," said one resident. Also raised were fears that public restrooms, another concern of the committee, would be vandalized.

Shipsky also presented his thoughts on Elm street. He proposed narrowing it at certain points to create larger sidewalks and possibly planting new rows of elms in place of the poorly maintained trees currently lining the road.

"The narrowing of that street in my book is one of the worst things you could do," one resident of Elm Street said. "There's no problem with pedestrian traffic on Elm Street at the moment." The resident was fearful that losing any width would only cause more problems on a road already heavily traveled by speeding traffic.

Resident Bill Good, who also sits on the planning board, was positive about both the walking plan and the Elm street idea. "There was a lot of traffic that's really tearing through there right now," Good said. "I knew it before it was widened and it certainly had a more town-like and neighborhood flavor. If the street was actually narrower it would make it less of a thoroughfare."

Others were curious what the draw of the harbor would be for people outside of Cohasset. Shipsky and the chairman of the committee, Dean Rizzo, explained there would be an economic result to the plan, including more business for local merchants, but the plan's focus and the board's main concern was with the residents.

"I think the general feeling if you talk to people is that this is a benefit to the community and the residents," Rizzo said.

"I think if it were done, lots and lots of people would use it and enjoy it," Shipsky said. He added "it would have been nice if more people had showed interest in it." (He only received about 29 responses to a questionnaire.)

The task force will take the comments and input from Tuesday's meeting under advisement as it pursues the revitalization of the village and harbor area.

Cohasset gets AA3 rating from Moody's

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset is a great town. That's the sentiment shared by most residents. Apparently, its a sentiment shared by Moody's Investors Services as well. Recently, Moody's upgraded Cohasset's bond rating by one category from A1 to AA3. What this means for Cohasset is lower interest rates for bonds, which translates into long-term cash savings for municipal projects.

"It means we're in good standing with investors," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "Their confidence is high that we will pay back our debt, so the interest rates are lower. I'm very excited about this."

The new rating has already translated into significant cash savings for Cohasset. The town obtained the $10 million bond for the new Osgood School last week at a 4.38 percent interest rate, much lower than the six percent rate estimated at town meeting. The lower 4.38 percent rate on the school bond will save the town about nine percent on debt service over 20 years versus the cost of a borrowing at six percent.

Town Treasurer Joseph Buckley said town officials are already hard at work trying to increase the rating by another category to AA2. Officials from Moody's have indicated that the they might increase the town's rating again if local leaders finalize plans to correct Cohasset's sewer problems and increase the local tax base. Moody's is impressed with Cohasset's history of solid financial management, a stable tax base which has grown at an average of four percent annually during the past several years, and a low level of debt compared to other communities of comparable size.

According to a report prepared by Moody's, "The favorable AA3 rating reflects the town's moderately sized, mostly residential tax base; well above average wealth levels; low debt burden and average debt structure; and sound financial operations."

Haddad and Buckley gave much of the credit for the higher rating to sound fiscal management in the past and support by residents for overrides and tax increases.

"The willingness of the voters to raise taxes, the fiscal constraints over the last several years— long before I got here— the combined efforts of the selectmen, the town accountant, the treasurer, and the advisory committee have all led to the higher rating," Haddad said. "The tax payers will only benefit from this in the long run."

Moody's decision marks the second time in recent years that the town's bond rating has increased. Standard and Poor's increased the town's bond rating two years ago, but Moody's hesitated because Cohasset has no industrial tax base. But Moody's changed its position based on several factors. Real estate in Cohasset is far more expensive than the state and national averages. The median value of an owner occupied house in Cohasset is $283,700, about 74 percent higher than the state median value of $163,046 and more than three times the national median of about $94,000. Also, much of the new construction in Cohasset has been coming from large, one-family homes that cost more than $500,000.

Another positive factor from Moody's viewpoint is the median family income in Cohasset, which is $74,310, considerably higher than the state median of $44,332. In addition, the per capita income in Cohasset is $33,166, about 81 percent higher than the state figure of $18,323.76.

Sewer project costs don't take a nose dive

sessed over 20 years. But they do expect a motion from the floor of town meeting to amend the article asking taxpayers to pick up 50 percent of the cost of the overrun or about $1.3 million. Articles are items of business before town meeting. If the amendment is successful, a Prop.2-1/2 override ballot vote would be required because the amount could not be absorbed within the tax cap.

It's all about fairness, said Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, who will offer the amendment.

"It's their mistake," she said. "Their engineers made a horrendous error so why should we be asked to pick up the burden for their engineers' mistake?"

The 1997 town meeting approved the North Cohasset project at $6.6 million with a 50 percent taxpayer subsidy contingent on a successful Prop. 2-1/2 override, which subsequently passed. Voters also okayed the $13 million Central Cohasset sewer project, also with the 50 percent taxpayer subsidy.

If voters approve the sewer commission article at the Oct. 26 special town meeting without the expected amendment, those in the North Cohasset sewer district will pay about 63 percent of the cost of the project. The increase would add about $340 more a year for 20 years to each affected homeowner.

If the sewer commission's article fails at town meeting, remaining moneys of the initial $6.6 million appropriation will be used to buy the components. Affected homeowners would be required to connect to the sewer main within two years and would have to hire their own contractors to do the work, which would be more costly in the long run, Guild said.

"And I suspect it would be quite a headache," he added.

North Cohasset homes will be hooked up to the sewer line via a pump system due to the high amount of ledge. This type of connection is more complicated and expensive than the gravity system slated for the Central Cohasset, which includes about 660 "dwelling units."

Last spring, selectmen directed the sewer commission to bid the Central Cohasset project and the remaining phases of the North Cohasset project together to see if that would cut costs.

Guild, the sewer commission chairman, explained there would not be economies of scale by bidding the projects as a unit.

"The cost of the components is standardized and that is not going to change," he said. The rest is digging trenches which doesn't involve buying any parts, so there are no potential savings there.

The apparent low bidder, Albanese D&S Inc. of Malden is installing sewers in Hingham and one of the other low bidders, D&C Construction of Rockland is installing the sewer main in North Cohasset. Guild thinks the bids are what the market will bear considering both companies are already mobilized and doing work in the area.

Guild said there is some positive financial news to report. A less expensive pump, which is available and has been sufficiently tested, will cut about $250,000 off the cost of the project.

However, if the additional appropriation for North Cohasset is successful at the special town meeting later this month, it is unclear whether selectmen will wait to award the contract until a lawsuit is resolved. The lawsuit, launched by the sewer commission, asks a judge to determine who has authority to bid and award contracts under the Town Manager Act, enacted in 1997.

issued 1,353 traffic tickets, 3.7 per day, worth $65,635. But many people ask for court hearings, and the final cash tally for last year was $41,363 collected from traffic violations. This year, the police have issued 1,380 tickets so far, 4.6 per day, worth about $69,000. In addition to local enforcement, the State Police have helped the town by camping out at the intersection of Route 3A and Beechwood and writing "many books of tickets", according to Noonan.

"We have stepped up patrols in response to requests from the selectmen to do more, who in turn are responding to requests from residents to do more," Noonan said. "I show the selectmen what we're doing on a weekly basis."

The biggest problem areas in town include King Street, Beechwood Street, Forest Avenue, North and South Main Streets, and Route 3A. Noonan said Route 3A has been the biggest problem this year, especially at the intersection with Beechwood Street. The posted speed limit at the intersection is 35 MPH, but the drivers pulled over there for speeding average between 53 and 58 MPH.

King Street residents have been particularly vocal about problems on their road. In response to complaints from King Street residents, Noonan performed a traffic study which determined that 2,400 cars per day use the road. In addition, the study showed that 1,600 cars per day turn off Beechwood Street onto King Street to get to Route 3A. Noonan said almost all of those cars contain commuters from out of town. Selectmen recently approved a plan placing an all-way stop sign at the intersection of King Street and Pond Street, but Noonan is unsure how that will help. He said commuters sometimes overcompensate for stop signs by accelerating afterward and traveling the rest of the road at a faster speed.

The King Street shortcut is attractive because commuters can avoid two traffic lights on 3A. Ironically, the shortcut only saves drivers about two minutes of travel time, Noonan said.

"People like to avoid traffic lights," Noonan said.

There are other ironies as well. Noonan said people complain that more should be done to enforce traffic, yet many people who get pulled over complain that the police should be chasing "real" crime.

"A lot of people also ask us if we have something better to do," Noonan said.

Forest Avenue is a popular cut-through for Hull residents. Noonan said many of the tickets officers write on Forest Avenue are to residents of Hull.

While there are traffic problems in Cohasset, Noonan doesn't believe conditions are any worse in Cohasset than other communities in the area. He said he was quite certain that Hingham, with a population of about 22,000 and several highways in town, writes far more tickets than Cohasset. Hingham even has a division of the police devoted solely to traffic safety. Population growth and commercial expansion in the entire region is causing traffic problems throughout the South Shore.

Noonan said the only way to increase police enforcement of traffic laws would be to add another officer and a vehicle to provide more coverage for the town. Noonan devotes as much of his resources to traffic enforcement as possible, but their are limits to what he can provide. Currently, officers perform radar checks in addition to performing other law enforcement duties. Noonan said setting up a separate traffic enforcement division would allow police to monitor traffic more closely. But until the town decides to do that, the Cohasset Police will do their best to catch traffic violators, whether they are from out of town or long-time residents of Cohasset.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Oct. 20.

Salute to Jean and Dan Cotton postponed

The Oct. 25 reception planned to salute Dan and Jean Cotton for their tireless dedication and involvement in the town of Cohasset has been postponed.

The committee had planned to surprise Dan and Jean with a monetary gift in their name for the Social Service League's Annual Scholarship Fund and plant a tree marked with a plaque. Both will be small tokens of our appreciation for Dan and Jean's good deeds, civic accomplishments and kindness to a multitude of Cohasset citizens. We also hope you will send notes wishing them well directly to their home at 27 King St., Cohasset, 02025.

AROUND TOWN

GET WELL WISHES

Hip hip, hooray! Bob Leavitt went home yesterday! And he's feeling much better in every way! Okay, so I'm not a poet laureate, but you must admit that the news is wonderful, and an answer to oh-so-many prayers! Get well and strong quickly if you please Bob, so many people need you!

IN THE ARMY

We salute Army National Guard Colonel Norman A. Welch Jr. of Cohasset—Colonel Welch graduated from the Army War College at Carlisle Barracks in Carlisle, Pa.

WOW, TRIPLETS!

Christine and Scott Arnold are positively beaming with love and pride, want to know the reason? Actually, there are three of them....Scott Thomas Arnold, Sean Frances Arnold and Christian Joseph Arnold! Oh WOW! The boys were born on Aug. 31, at New England Medical Center in Boston, and are now at South Shore Hospital, doing wonderfully well! Imagine triplets! Have no fear though, they will have scads of love and hugs and kisses to go around, as this blessed event is hared by their grandparents too! They will have Barbara Arnold of Cohasset and Florida and Joanmarie and Tom Gorman, their loving grandparents, to be there whenever they promised the first peek when they go strolling around town. So, be on the lookout for the carriage that looks like a big Caddy, it could be theirs!

CARROT CAKE

Received a call from a delightful lady last week, she is on a quest to find a recipe for carrot cake. That sounds like an easy request, here's the tough part—it calls for three jars of baby carrots instead of the grated carrots that most recipes call for. She claims this is the best recipe that she has ever used, but she cannot find her copy (thinks she loaned it to someone and forgot to get it back). If you are the proud owner of this recipe, could you please give me a call (383-0560)? The lady will be out of town for a while, so I promised we'd all get together and try to have it upon her return. (and she) thank you in advance!

That's Eric Studley getting a close-up look at the Cohasset ladder truck during the fire department open house Oct. 3. The Mariner printed another boy's name by mistake last week. Sorry about that, Eric!

GRAND OPENING

It certainly was nice to see all of the people attending the "grand opening" of the new Osgood School, and to see the pride in the eyes of the students (and their parents and their teachers) as the townspeople took the tour of the building! We should all be proud of such a superior building!

SENIORS TO VISIT SALEM

If you love Halloween, and you are a Senior, please take note! On Oct. 25 The Cohasset C.O.A is planning a trip to Salem, what fun! It will include a guided tour of Salem with a "real witch", A full traditional "Witches" Buffet luncheon at the historic Peppercorn's in the heart of Salem, a tour of the House of Seven Gables, a tour of The Witch Museum and Witches Dungeon, a visit to Witch Memorial Park, the Old Burying Grounds the services of a Traditional Tours Escort, and round trip transportation via Deluxe Motorcoach—all for $59 per person! That just sounds like such fun, contact the Cohasset C.O.A (383-9112) if you are interested. Hopefully someone will take pictures so that we may all share this happening!

TRIPS AFAR

Ran into Jean Magner the other day—she and Bob just returned from a trip to Las Vegas (where they went to a family wedding that was "great"), followed by a trip to Hawaii (from which they hated to leave, it was so "beautiful, warm, sunny"). Ain't retirement grand?! And do you know of two people that deserve it more than they? Just keep up your travels, then report back to us, we love to hear it!

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Happy birthday greetings to George Haley! We're not sure how young he is, but we're sure of one thing—he never changes! Hope your day is a special one indeed, George!

A FINE LADY

We are happy to report that Elinor Kennedy is out of the hospital, and is loving her new home at New England Friends Home in Hingham. As many of you know, she is 96 years old, and still writing poetry and going strong! A fine lady!

OFF TO ARIZONA

Our town just won't be the same when Bill and Grace Enos "take flight" and put down roots in Arizona—Bill is a legend! And, what will Leo do without him? Probably go there for at least one visit a year. Our best wishes go with you, and we hope that you will keep in touch! You will both be missed.

SHARE YOUR JOY

That's the news for the week. Hopefully you will have a newsworthy event take place over this long weekend, and you'll remember to call me so we can all share your joy!

Mr. and Mrs. E. Gardner Jones

Celebrating 60 years

On Oct. 3, Mr. and Mrs. E. Gardner Jones of Hingham were honored at a dinner at P.J.'s Country House in Scituate. They were celebrating their 60th wedding anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones were married on Oct. 11, 1938 in the Evangelical Congregational Church in Hingham. They are both lifelong residents of Hingham.

The Jones' were honored by their son and his family, Edward and Janice Jones, of Hingham and their daughter and her family, Blanche and Peter Whitman of Cohasset. Their grandchildren and great-granddaughter were also in attendance.

Wellspring's 'Mission Possible' challenge

On the counter of Dwyers Cleaning Spot there's an aged tape player and a half-burned cassette tape, suggestions of the opening scenes in the TV show "Mission Impossible." The purpose of this display is to call attention to Wellspring's "Mission Possible," a fall fund and information drive aimed at sending news of Wellspring out to the community as well as encouraging financial support.

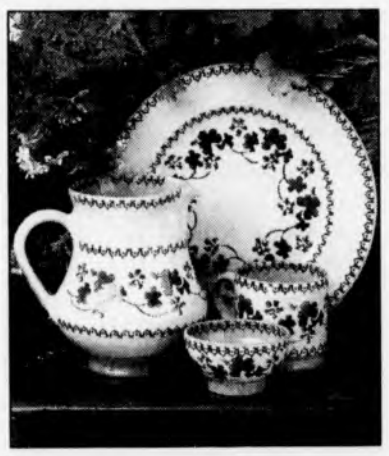
As a Wellspring ambassador, Dwyers has agreed to raise funds for Wellspring, and now, those funds will be doubled.

An anonymous benefactor has offered Wellspring Multi-Service Center, the South Shore's social-services agency located in Hull, a $10,000 matching grant to bolster its annual fall fundraising effort.

To donate to the multi-services agency in time to have your donation qualify for the matching challenge grant, please make checks payable to Wellspring Multi-Service Center and send to 814 Nantasket Ave., Hull, MA 02045. Contributions are tax-deductible. Cash donations of any size may also be made at Dwyers Cleaning Spot, Route 3A, anytime up until the Oct. 17 deadline.

Holiday Bazaar at Beechwood

The Holiday Bazaar will be held at the Beechwood Congregational Church on Church Street in Cohasset Oct. 17, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Come early for the famous sea glass candy. A chowder luncheon will begin at 11:30 a.m.



Search for goodies on the food, fancy work, Thanksgiving, Christmas and candy tables. Bring your children to meet Mrs. Santa from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. The "Pocket Lady" will arrive at 1 p.m. There will be games and crafts for children.

'Tis the season for apple pie

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

It's finally fall: time to dig sweaters and blankets out of the Cedar chest and mothballs, ferret out the rakes, and think about cooking in ernest!! It is nice to go into this rust-tinted season anticipating smoke coming out of chimneys and aromas wafting out of kitchens; now is the time to pull pots and pans from their summer hiding places and use them again! Here's a real treat for you to try, I'll bet it will become one of your favorites! It came from The Publick House in Sturbridge—it smells great, tastes even better and makes use of the abundance of apples that are around at this time of year.

MARLBOROUGH PIE
6 tart apples
1 tsp. butter
2 eggs beaten
1 lemon, juice and grated rind
1cup sugar

Cook and strain the apples; add the butter and cool. Add the eggs; lemon rind and sugar. Put in a deep dish pie shell and, bake in moderate oven 375 degrees for one hour or until the crust is done. Garnish with small cakes of puff pastry baked separately, if desired. Makes one 9" pie.

If pie isn't your "thing", try this unusual cake recipe—it is called "Mayonnaise Cake" and is a wonderful cake to make if you don't have any eggs and you need a cake for an emergency!

MAYONNAISE CAKE

1-1/2 cups sugar
1 cup mayonnaise
3 cups flour
1-1/2 teaspoons baking soda
4 tablespoons coca pinch salt
1 cup milk
1 tsp. vanilla

Combing sugar and mayonnaise, add vanilla. Sift dry ingredients and add alternately to mayonnaise mixture with milk. Beat until smooth, pour into layer cake pans (or cup cake pans). Bake in 350 degree oven for 25-30 minutes.

Too Many Things Are Going Wrong In The Norfolk County Sheriff's Office.

Mike Bellotti knows what to do about it.

PUT AN END TO RUNAWAY SALARY INCREASES
Jack Flood was appointed Sheriff less than 24 months ago, but he's already handed out raises to his confidential staff totalling over $100,000. One employee alone got a $27,000 increase.

STOP CONVICTED FELONS FROM BECOMING DEPUTIES
Jack Flood hired and swore in as a full Deputy Sheriff a friend who'd been convicted on conspiracy, fraud and bribery charges in federal court.
He lost his appeal but is still working as Jack Flood's Director of the Civil Process Office with the power to arrest.
The Patriot Ledger called Jack Flood "The Poster Boy For Cronyism".

STOP RELEASE OF FELONS BEFORE SENTENCE HAS BEEN SERVED
Mandatory sentences for m.v. homicide don't mean much to Flood.
Jack released one inmate sentenced to serve one year in jail after he had only spent 3 days in jail and 3 months in an alternative center!
He never informed the victim's family of the release.
Jack refused to put him back in jail until a District Court Judge demanded it.

GET THE BLOATED BUDGET UNDER CONTROL
The average cost of housing a prisoner in a large US facility today is $51 per day.
Jack Flood is currently spending $108.74 per day per prisoner.
And he's asked the legislature to give him 30% more for 1999.

Make the Sheriff's Office work for us again.

The news and you

Can you believe it's already Oct. 15? School has been in session for more than a month and judging by the quantity of news releases we're receiving here at the Mariner, your clubs and activities are almost in full swing.

That summer hiatus which many organizations took is now just a memory.

So this is a good time to give you, our readers, a friendly reminder about deadlines as the holidays approach and your publicity chairmen prepare press releases about upcoming meetings, events and fund-raisers.

Here's the scoop.

Copy for all "happenings" and school news should be in by 8 a.m.., Friday for the following week's issue. We realize while meeting that deadline can be difficult, most clubs and groups plan their activities well ahead of time.

So we ask you to put us on your calendar. Thursday is the day when the Mariner arrives in your mailbox and the following morning is the time to get your news items in for the next issue.

Why do we need the early deadline?

Our typesetters and production team are based in Marshfield where 14 of the Cohasset Mariner's sister newspapers and a myriad of special sections are also produced. Getting our copy in early helps streamline the process and prevents typesetting log jams on the day when the paper goes to press.

For the record, we will continue to accept all letters to the editor, obituaries, and sports news (which happens over the weekend) up until noon on Tuesday.

If you forget or can't drop your news item off by Friday, please call us. We will make exceptions but cannot guarantee that a late item will get in that week.

Items can be left at our drop spot at Cohasset News, 3 Brook St., or at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square at 73 South St. For your convenience, we also accept news items by fax and e-mail. Our fax number is 741-2931 and our e-mail address is: mford@cnc.com. Sorry, we cannot take happenings over the phone.

We enjoy being your local paper — that's why we're in the business. So don't be shy. Let us hear from you, your clubs, organizations, and your schools. And we always want your opinion, whether verbally over the telephone, in person, or with a letter to the editor.

We also welcome news tips and story ideas. So if you have something you think may be newsworthy, please contact us at 383-8139.

Celebrating our 20th anniversary last week, we included one of our favorite cartoons by Jim Hamilton. It first appeared on Aug. 8, 1991. We forgot to include the following for those of you who are new to town: "The Housesitter film crew wants Cohasset Common to look picture perfect for their location shoot which happens later in August. They might even bring their own ducks to guarantee a picturesque setting."

Osgood staff says thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

To all volunteers involved in the new Osgood school project:

The Osgood faculty would like to express our sincere appreciation for the countless hours of planning, meetings, reviews, packing, unpacking and moving that you willingly and tirelessly provided.

We are indeed fortunate to have this state of the art facility for the children, staff and community.

This new setting surely will enhance the education of our youngsters. We thank you, each and every one, for making this beautiful new school possible.

Victims of discrimination

TO THE EDITOR,

Many people don't realize they live on Private Ways. It's amazing that streets such as Fair Oaks Lane, Old Pasture Road and many others remain private ways long after they were developed.

I wrote to the Selectmen on Feb. 4, 1996, suggesting establishment of a Private Ways Committee. Since then, I have written four follow-up letters and have discussed the unsatisfactory situation at four Town Meetings, several Private Way Committee and Selectmen meetings. While we "spin our wheels," neighboring towns are making steady progress. We haven't accepted a new public way in about 25 years.

During November 1995, Mr. Moore, Chairman of the Cohasset Planning Board stated:

a) "I feel the town has some obligation to residents, whether they live on private or public ways."

b) "Some private ways have been in use for over 200 years. There's nothing private about them. Our forefathers were very diligent about these things. We never seem to get around to dealing with it."

Almost three years later Mr. Moore and Mr. Sturdy counseled the Selectmen to move slowly. The Selectmen embraced this guidance.

As resident of Private Ways, we are the victims of discrimination. We pay taxes, but maintenance of our streets and water service is our financial responsibility. There is a significant liability exposure.

Please call me at 383-0505 and enroll in moving this issue forward in a fair and orderly process. Attending the Fall Town Meeting scheduled for Monday, Oct. 26 is a good starting point.

Fitness opportunity at Cohasset High School

TO THE EDITOR:

Through the auspices of Cohasset High School and Dr. Mike Gill of the Health Education Department CHS has commercial quality fitness center .

We are interested in making this facility available to all residents at a nominal fee charge which cannot be determined until we have an idea of how many residents might have interest utilizing the facility.

If you feel that you or members of your family might be interested in using the CHS gym, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-4109 right away.

We would like to know approximately how many residents would utilize the facility if we were able to keep it open during evening hours.

The facility includes about $75,000 worth of equipment consisting of a variety strength building equipment, two treadmills, two stairmasters, five stationary bikes and a stairmaster freerunner all of commercial quality.

The nominal fee charge would be employed to provide supervision during hours of operation, as well as revenue dedicated towards maintenance and upkeep of the equipment

The fitness center, located in the old study hall room, is currently utilized by students and staff and by CHS gym classes. Ideally, this unique opportunity could be made available to all residents outside of school hours.

You may call 383-4109, 24 hours a day and if you receive voice-mail, please leave the number of people in your family who might utilize this facility if a nominal fee were charged and the facility open evenings/weekends.

Bradley calls on Murray to explain Flip-Flop

Former Assistant District Attorney and State Representative candidate Garrett Bradley took issue this week with Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray's claim that she supports a ban on assault weapons. Murray, who stated in the newspaper last week that she supports the ban, voted against the Assault Weapons Bill that was passed this term in the House of Representatives. Bradley, a former Assistant District Attorney in Plymouth Country, supports the legislation and believes that it would help protect our children and reduce violence in our neighborhoods.

"The legislation that Representative Murray voted against would make gun owners responsible for the safe use and storage of their firearms," stated Bradley. "The bill mandates the safe storage of all guns and calls for all assault and other large capacity weapons that are sold in our state to include safety devices designed to prevent the discharge of the weapons by an unauthorized user. This legislation would without a doubt help to prevent the needless deaths of children and others who are killed each year in gun related accidents."

"Representative Murray can't have it both ways," continued Bradley. "If she supports a ban on assault weapons, why did she vote against it during the only opportunity to pass the legislation during this legislative term?"

Bradley does not agree with all of the provisions of the gun safety bill, but felt that the increased safety provisions in the bill, which would help protect children from accident involving guns, warranted his strong support. Bradley feels that Murray put the interests of a few gun store owners ahead of interests our community has to provide a safe environment for our children.

The legislation not only mandated increased gun safety, but also significantly increased the punishment for those criminals who use guns when committing felonies. The bill also provided for cost-effective ways for responsible gun owners to secure their weapons, including the provision of gunlocks and other safety devices.

Rep. Murray responds to Bradley on gun bill

In order to support his argument, Garrett Bradley omits a crucial point in his press release regarding Murray's so-called "flip-flop" on the assault weapons ban bill.

What Mr. Bradley doesn't tell you is that the House version of the bill to ban assault weapons — which Murray supported — was a different bill altogether when it came back from the conference committee for a subsequent vote. Murray did, indeed, oppose that version of the bill which among other things, removed many of the House provisions intended to protect lawful gun owners.

Murray believes believe in our Constitution and in the second amendment which clearly submits that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed." She also firmly believes in supporting legislation which keeps guns out of children's hands, such as legislation requiring gun locks and gun safes for the home. Many such bills which would mandate increased gun safety and significantly increase the punishment for criminals who use guns in the commission of felonies are filed annually. Murray has consistently supported such legislation, but these bills do not even make it out of committee.

The conference committee version of the assault weapons ban bill expanded the definition of assault weapons to encompass any automatic firearm, including those firearms used by hunters and sportsmen, and even those single-fire arms carried by veterans in parades.

Murray could not, in good conscience, vote for a bill which she believes is nothing more than a first step — the proverbial camel's nose under the tent — to deny lawful gun owners their constitutional right to keep and bear arms.

Mr. Bradley is naive if he does not recognize and acknowledge the true intent of this bill and disingenuous to give you, the voter, only half of the story.

Chat live with Garrett Bradley

Voters in Hingham and Cohasset will have an opportunity to question state representative candidate Garrett Bradley as part of the Hingham Journal and Cohasset Mariner live on-line chat session.

Bradley, a resident of Hingham, will field questions and concerns from voters as he goes on line live Thursday, Oct. 22, from 7 to 8 p.m.

Readers can log on to the papers' web site at www.townonline.com. Once there, readers will find a banner ad and they simply click on the banner to chat live with Bradley, a Democrat who is challenging longtime Republican incumbent Mary Jeanette Murray in the Nov. 3 election.

Murray, a Cohasset resident, declined the papers' invitation to chat on line with voters. She said she could not work out her schedule.

Candidates forum slated

Meet the candidates for state representative in Cohasset, Hingham and Hull, Garret Bradley, Democrat, and Mary Jeanette Murray, Republican, Tuesday, Oct. 20, from 5:45 to 7 p.m., at Old Derby Academy, 34 Main St., Hingham Square. Refreshments will be provided.

Each candidate will give a brief opening statement and then entertain questions from those in attendance.

Ask the candidates the questions that are important to you and your business.

This event is jointly sponsored by Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, Hull Chamber of Commerce, Hingham Business Council and Government Affairs Committee of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce and Hingham Institution for Savings.

Any questions for the candidates may be faxed to (617) 479-1111.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

They deserve credit too

TO THE EDITOR,

When Moody's Investors Service raised Cohasset rating to Aa3 they said "The favorable rating reflects the town's moderately sized, mostly residential tax base, well above average wealth level of resident's low debt burden and average debt structure, and sound financial operations."

However, they did not mention one more very important element—our volunteers. People like Virginia Anderson, Mary Andracchio, Steve Leighton, Phyllis Leighton, Louise Smulen, Tilly Nardo, Maria Perroncello, Pat Hanlon, Libby Pompeo, Olga Sawchuk, Connie Tolman and Peter Tolman. These seniors always volunteer to mail out tax bills.

Thanks again to you all and all the other volunteers who help out in this beautiful ours.

Osgood is best choice for new library

TO THE EDITOR:

What a tremendous opportunity has come our way. The Osgood School, which for so many years served our children and their educational needs, could now become the building which continues to educate and enrich ALL the citizens of our town—the New Cohasset Library.

The current library is one of our town's most valuable institutions. Its per capita use goes way beyond the average use of the library in towns of comparable size. As former Trustees, we have watched the struggle to find space for the new technology, better access for the physically impaired, and additions to the collection of Large Print Books, tapes and videos as well as fiction, nonfiction and research materials. There simply is not room, and yet the need is critical if we are to serve the citizens as well in the future as we have in the past.

We have an unparalleled opportunity now to create badly needed new space all on one level with adequate parking, handicapped access and flexibility. The location is ideal and the building is already owned by the town. It would continue to be used for a public purpose with a minimum impact on its residential neighborhood.

To renovate the School into a new library will be far less costly than trying to build a new library. Some of the playground area can be sold for development if that is deemed advisable and the old for development into offices or apartments, thus returning money to the tax rolls.

Let's make it happen!

Angled parking a concern

Mr. Mark Haddad
Town Manager
Town Hall
Cohasset, MA 02025

DEAR MR. HADDAD:

As my two young sons now begin to participate in town activities, I greatly look forward to weekend events involving soccer and baseball played on the lower field at Cohasset High School. The angled parking overlooking these playing fields and along the main exit from the High School provides convenient parking and the embankments immediately beneath this parking provides excellent lawn chair/blanket viewing for proud parents. This parking, as I have observed, also presents all the elements for tragedy.

These spaces tend to downward sloped towards the playing fields and viewing areas. A car or truck or "Titanic" SUV which would slip out of the parking gear or have its emergency brake insecurely set is liable to roll down the embankment and into unsuspecting parents and children. The outcome would be obvious. Too many times over the past year, I have seen harried parents un-piling their cars with eager young athletes and too many times I have seen young children placed unattended in vehicles to stay warm on a cold Fall/Spring day. Although I am sure that the probability of a tragic happening is low, it is remains a possibility.

I take great pride in being a resident of this town and find it to be efficiently run. I hope, therefore, that I do not present myself as a needless alarmist. I believe, however, that providing pre-cast concrete parking curbs is an inexpensive proactive measure to address this potentiality. I ask that you give this request serious consideration.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Michael J. Kearney

Real purpose of Monicagate - money

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Now we're getting down to the real purpose of Monicagate, if that's what future historians will choose to call that thing that's going on in Washington.

It's money.

Publishing magnate Rupert Murdoch has offered Monica a reported $3 million to write a book about her experiences as a White House intern and submit to an exclusive interview with Fox TV.

Rupert's offer tops the $2 million that was reportedly readied for the exclusive rights to her story by the publishing house of Harper Collins.

Which in turn tops the $1 million offered by the tabloid Star and the cool million Roseanne Barr was prepared to pay Monica for a single appearance on her (Roseanne's) TV talk show.

And this followed hot on the heels of reports that the pleasingly plump U. S. intern (ret.) would model in the Italian stylist Gattinoni's October fashion show in Milan for a mere $470,000.

Giovanni Ciacci, a spokesman for Gattinoni, said Monica was picked for the show because "she is ruined in the United States now. What can she do but flee to Europe?"

Even Ken Starr, author of the best selling report since "Lady Chatterley's Lover," has been offered a new job - by Larry Flynt of "Hustler" magazine.

(I can think of three reasons for her to stay put. The figure is preceded by a dollar sign and followed by six zeros.)

Monica was scheduled to model a two-piece blue dress (unstained) from the "Roma Outsize" collection, which also featured a "condom dress" of tight latex studded with blue pills symbolizing Viagra.

But Oct. 6, the date of the fashion show, passed and if Monica appeared on the runway in Milan it went unreported and I'm sure the Herald and the National Enquirer would have given it full-page-and-more treatment if she had.

A number of Bill's old girl friends are making out like bandits since they were ditched by the First Seducer.

Gennifer Flowers, the Prez's gal pal from the Arkansas days, recently moved to Las Vegas where she is working up to a singing career.

The other day, she performed for the annual conference of the Electronic Retailing Conference at the MGM Grand, singing "Who's Got the Last Laugh Now," and "Why Haven't I Heard from You?"

"I want to see my name up in those lights, up on those billboards," she said.

Did the affair with Bill aid and abet her singing career?

"Obviously, it's something that can't be ignored, but at the same time it's something that needs to be handled tastefully and with dignity," said Gennifer.

Paula Jones is not doing badly, either.

The girl who says was scared out of her wits by Bill's actions in that room at the Excelsior Hotel in Little Rock, according to reports, has been offered $700,000 just to go away but she's holding out for a million.

Even Ken Starr, author of the best selling report since "Lady Chatterley's Lover," has been offered a new job - by Larry Flynt of "Hustler" magazine.

"After a reading of the Starr report I am impressed by the salacious and voyeuristic nature of your work," wrote Flynt. "The Starr report contains more pornographic references than those provided by Hustler Online services this month."

Officials eye new occupancy law with caution

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The town of Hopkinton is a rapidly growing community sitting way out on the Route 495 belt. Tremendous residential and commercial growth in the last few years has placed a massive strain on the town's municipal services. Hopkinton has become the first Massachusetts town to approve a home-rule petition adopting a state law that allows the town to assess the value of new property upon occupancy. Traditionally, property assessments are fixed at certain times of the year with no deviations allowed. But in fast-growing towns like Hopkinton, town officials feel they need to assess property values immediately to make sure they are receiving adequate tax money to run municipal services.

Assistant Assessor Cheryl Pooler confirmed that she has examined the Hopkinton plan, and recommended that Cohasset wait and see how assessment upon occupancy works for that town.

"I see this bill as well intended, but not thoroughly thought out," Pooler said. "I recommend a wait-and-see approach. Maybe after one or two

In fast-growing towns like Hopkinton, town officials feel they need to assess property values immediately to make sure they are receiving adequate tax money to run municipal services.

tax cycles, the town of Hopkinton could advise as to the feasibility of this new legislation."

Tax assessments can be a little confusing, but state laws dictate when a town can or cannot assess or "fix" the value of a property to determine the owner's local tax bill. If a town collects taxes twice per year, then properties can be assessed only on January 1, meaning that the value of the property remains unchanged for one year until the following Jan. 1. Towns that bill quarterly, like Cohasset, can assess property values twice per year: on Jan. 1 or June 30.

"Because Cohasset bills quarterly, we have through June 30 to assess property values," Pooler said. "How a property sits on June 30 is how it be assessed for the rest of the year. Most houses are built in the spring and we can pick those up in June. Towns with semi-annual billing have it harder because the way a house sits on Jan. 1 is how it will be assessed for the rest of the year."

This can become a problem in communities experiencing a lot of new construction, Pooler said. If a property has only a foundation laid on Jan. 1, then that is what is assessed for tax payments. Even if the entire building is completed four weeks later, the town collects only the taxes assessed on the foundation until the next assessment period. If a town bills twice a year, then it has to wait until the following year to fully assess projects completed after Jan. 1.

The rules also affect homeowners. If a homeowner demolishes a house, the tax bill remains the same until the next period even though the value has decreased. The same holds true for a devastating fire, much like the one that destroyed a $1 million home on Atlantic Ave. recently. Homeowners can ask for adjustments, but assessors rarely award rebates and are not required to do so by law.

"Last November, there was a property on the corner of Forest Avenue and Jerusalem Road that the owner moved to Hull," Pooler said. "The owner filed for an abatement but was denied by assessors. Statutorily, the assessors are not supposed to grant abatements like that."

Another problem with the Hopkinton plan is that it never allows financial planners to close out their books and make projections for the future.

"We work in cycles throughout the year, but with this plan it would be a never-ending process," Pooler said. "If [this] bill were adopted, it would require assessors to constantly change the tax rolls anytime during the year. The tax roll would never be finalized. We try to project new growth for budgeting purposes, but we would not be able to project new growth."

Busing issues still on school board agenda

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

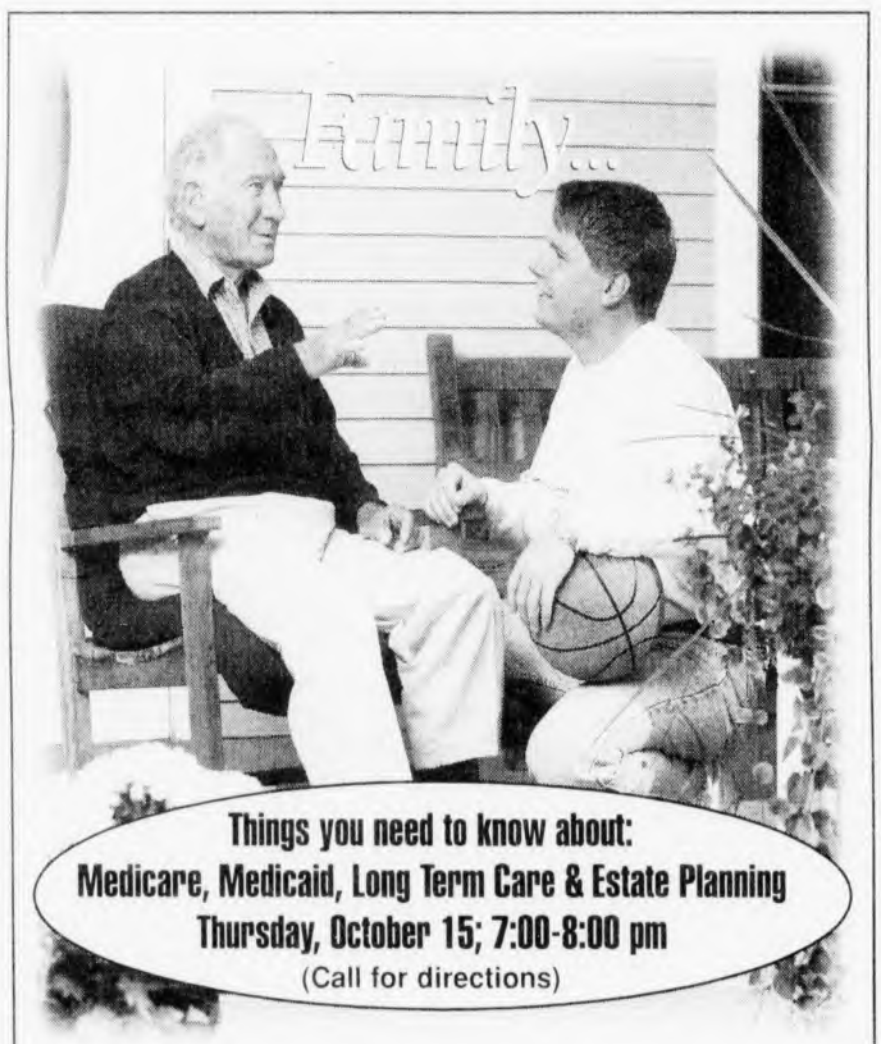
Two busing issues remain before the school committee: Lamberts Lane and handicap-access conversion.

At this time, the only thing standing between Lamberts Lane schoolchildren and a safer pick-up is designating stops along the mile-long stretch.

School Superintendent Ted Malvey informed school committee members at the Oct. 1 meeting that efforts to find bus stops on the lane are currently underway.

The addition of Lamberts Lane to the bus route will add 12 minutes to the schedule but will provide a safer ride to school for the children there. Their narrow, winding lane has no sidewalks, which makes their walk to the present bus stop at Route 228 dangerous for them. Compounding their risk is the delivery truck traffic brought in to the area by the Cohasset Golf Club and a nearby construction business.

Through the organizing efforts of school committee member Mark DeGiacomo, arrangements have been made with golf club president Cliff Mitman to use a gate at the club for the bus to back up to for easier turnaround. A volunteer Lamberts Lane parent will be present each day to act as guides for the bus driver's back up and turn.



"I just want to make it clear that there will be no bus stop that children might stray from near that turn-around site," said Malvey.

Also raised by Malvey is the ongoing consideration of how best to create handicap-access on a large bus so that all students can travel together.

Currently, students requiring handicap-access receive front door pick-up and drop-off from a small bus equipped for their needs.

The committee would like to see one bus from the school's fleet converted so that wheelchair-bound students can at least travel with classmates on school trips. However, it would require losing 12 seats to convert the bus. The Osgood route for the large bus, should all students show up for pick-up, would be full to capacity.

Malvey will continue looking into reconfiguring the Osgood routes so that less children will board the 77-seat carrier.

Planners okay Jerusalem Road Estates

But proposal still faces obstacles

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Sounds of frustration and disbelief spread across the roomful of neighbors as the planning board approved a proposal for 23 homes off Jerusalem Road last week.

It seemed to the almost 20 concerned residents in attendance that the planning board, and especially chairman Al Moore, would oppose the plan. Only moments before casting the tie-breaking vote, he expressed strong reservations about the project.

"I've been on the board for a while and I don't think I've ever seen an application so universally opposed by residents, with stacks of correspondence and a tick list," said Moore. "I'm saying, maybe this just isn't the right thing to do. I've been wrestling with this issue for two weeks."

Moore explained to disappointed neighbors that he was concerned about potential litigation and protecting the town's ability to maintain some control over the project.

Planning board members Terry Atherton and William Good said an approval would allow the board to define conditions, such as the road slope, which is steeper than allowed; waivers needed for the 800-feet-longer than permissible cul-de-sac; as well as issues concerning the two access roads, one of which would go over a pre-existing well.

Moore also pointed out that should the developer Steven Corey of Weymouth go to court on this issue and win, the board would no longer be able to set conditions.

"Let's say we draw a line in the sand with this and say, 'No, we're just going to reject it outright,'" said Moore. "Then Corey can go to court and we could end up with a court judge that sees us as too restrictive and might let him go ahead and build as filed in court."

While the planning board decision clears a hurdle for the developer, the project still faces obstacles from both the conservation and sewer commissions.

The sewer commission said it won't allow the development to connect to the new sewer line that will link North Cohasset to the Hull sewage treatment plant.

Corey may sue if the subdivision is denied access to the sewer, according to his attorney, Charles Humphreys of Cohasset. North Cohasset's wastewater will be sent to Hull and treated in their municipal plant," explained sewer commission Chairman Ted Guild. "We have a contract with Hull for 85,000 gallons per day of treatment capacity and if we exceed that, the town is subject to certain penalties. Therefore, we cannot tie in more than we've already committed to with Hull and that's the reason we can't tie in Jerusalem Road Estates."

The development needs the hook-up to because many of its acres are on wetlands and ledge, with little land suitable for on-site septic systems. So in order to be workable, the houses must have hook-ups to the sewer.

The sewer commission has adopted the basic policy that any excess capacity for sewer access should go to homes already existing. "A lot of our homes shouldn't have been built because the land is so rocky—but they are built so our policy is to benefit the existing homes," said Guild.

The conservation commission said that the proposed project is next to Rattlesnake Run, which is classified as a perennial river and therefore protected under the state's Rivers Protection Act. "Development of permanent structures is restricted within 200 feet of a perennial river's annual mean high water mark," said commission vice chairman Sue Cope.

Humphreys has said that he can prove the run was dry during a non-draught period two years ago, which disqualifies it as a perennial river.

"Naturally, the neighbors would have preferred the land to stay in its natural state, but it's time for it to be developed."
—CHARLES HUMPHREYS

At least one neighbor may also prove to be an obstacle.

William Chisolm, 605 Jerusalem Road, whose home is situated just across from the proposed development's driveway, said he will appeal the planning board decision.

Other neighbors expressed concern about the soundness of the plan, too.

"I have concerns about their ability to follow through on things they've promised," said Roger Gregory, 600 Jerusalem Road. "Given the volatility of the economy today, why are they pursuing this? It's a major commitment of money on their part and they need to make sure they meet certain requirements."

"To the best of my knowledge, the water has always been there," said another Jerusalem Road resident about Rattlesnake Run, who spoke on the condition of anonymity. "I don't know what [Humphreys] means by 'dry.' Does the entire riverbed have to be dry or just part of it?"

Humphreys said the project should move forward.

"This is not an easy thing," he acknowledged. "Naturally, the neighbors would have preferred the land to stay in its natural state, but it's time for it to be developed. The planning board worked out a compromise between the right to develop the land with a consideration for the concerns of the neighbors. We tried to accommodate those concerns as we went along."

Moore said neither the developer nor the planning board can be blamed.

"It's not the applicant's fault or the planning board's fault," said Moore. "If people want to know how these things happen, they should go to the small hearings and make themselves heard."

Moore pointed out that if there's a bad guy in this whole thing it's the board of trustees of the Curtis Estate who, somewhere along the way, didn't follow the trust and decided they wouldn't use the estate for the purposes it had originally been set aside for.

In early 1988, the original trustees of the 55 acres belonging to the estate of the late Judge George E. Curtis had petitioned the probate court and the state attorney general for permission to supersede provisions of the will by selling the land to a private developer. Curtis had wanted a home built on the site for disabled women who could live there free of charge. A group of residents formed the Curtis Estate Action Committee to try to convince the trustees to forfeit the sale of the land and donate the acres to the town through the housing authority or another agency such as the South Shore Association of Retarded Associations.

Moore pointed out that if there's a bad guy in this whole thing it's the board of trustees of the Curtis Estate who, somewhere along the way, didn't follow the trust and decided they wouldn't use the estate for the purposes it had originally been set aside for.

After three years and more than 20 applications by Corey, the planning board is ready to move on to other matters.

"I've spent more time on this than I'd care to," said Moore, about the acreage he once referred to as a "chunk of granite with 10 million years of seagull dung on top of it."

Former Scituate High soccer star Debbie Beal has crossed enemy lines and taken over the Cohasset girls varsity soccer program.

Beal adapts well to rigors of coaching

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High girls soccer coach Debbie Beal can't help but be a tad bit envious when she watches the Lady Skippers going through their drills and scrimmages during practice.

It wasn't so long ago that Beal, in her first year as head varsity coach, was in their shoes, rather cleats.

So what's Beal's advice to her players? Enjoy the game while it lasts because as the years go by, other commitments surface and you won't have nearly as much time to get on the field.

"I could be playing in so many different leagues right now with my friends," the personable Beal explained, "but everybody has different work schedules that it's tough to get together."

Beal, a physical education teacher at Cohasset High, made the most of her soccer, both in high school and college. A 1991 graduate of Scituate High School, Beal was a key player on the Lady Sailors' squad and two-time South Shore League All-Star. She went on to attend the University of Rhode Island and made the team as a walk-on.

Beal played three seasons at the midfield position before switching over to sweeper as a senior. Beal had a solid final season at U.R.I., and was selected the team's Most Valuable Player.

The Lady Rams had a sound team, but at the Division 1 level, played against some stiff competition. The squad's talent wasn't always reflected in its overall record.

"We had great athletes," said Beal, "but we played teams that were nationally ranked."

After graduating from U.R.I., with a physical education/exercise science degree, Beal intended to get into the rehabilitation field, but decided instead she wanted to teach.

Along the way Beal "fell upon" the JV soccer coaching job at Scituate H.S., which she held for three years. She thoroughly enjoyed the coaching side of soccer and her Cohasset squad competes against many of the players Beal coached for those three seasons.

"My first year I had a great team," she said. "They're all on the varsity team now."

Skippers experiencing the winds of change

By David Wolcott

Enough was enough for the members of the CHS boys varsity soccer team.

After starting out the season playing not as well as they had expected coming into the year, the 2-6-2 team reached the boiling point after a recent South Shore League tie to Hull.

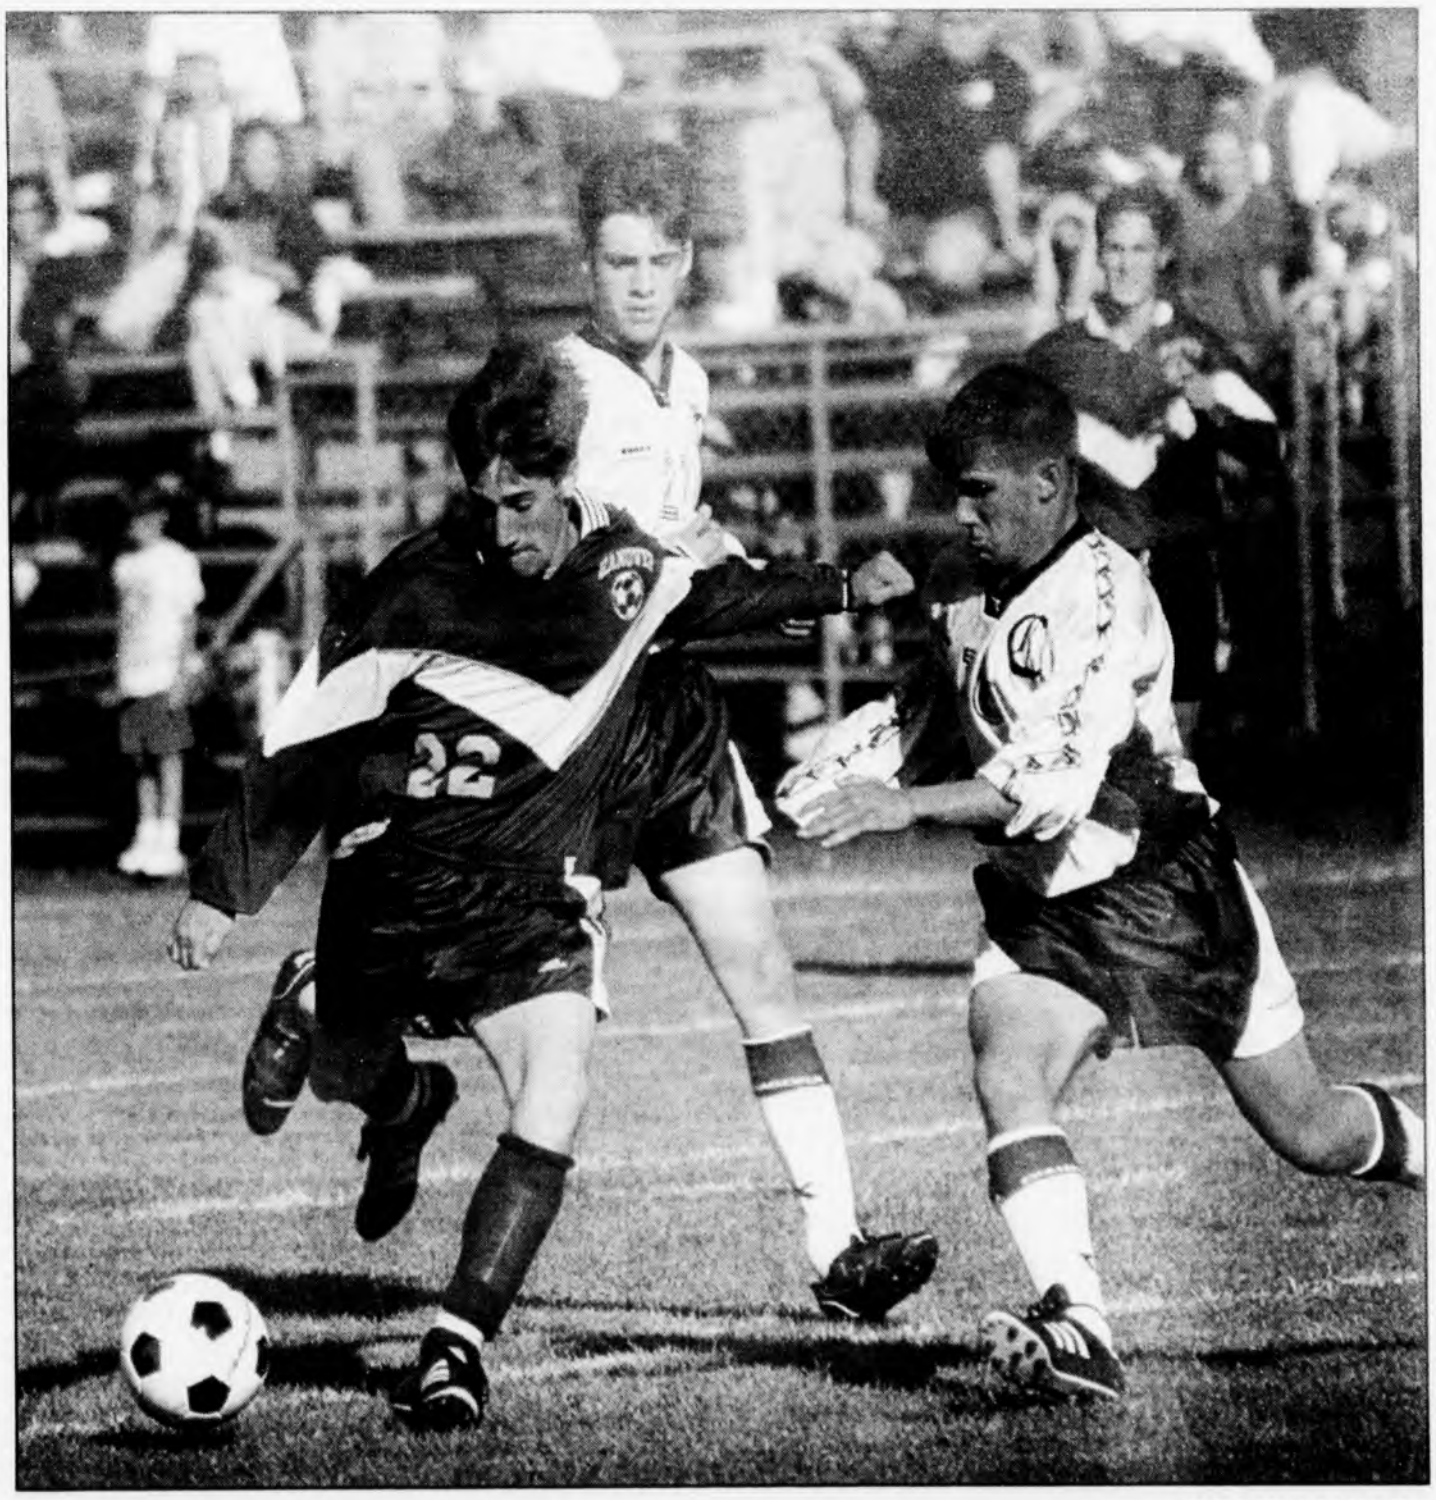
"The day after that game the team came together and challenged each other to make a commitment to the team and play better than what we had been showing on the field," said second year head coach Jeff Martell. "Ever since then it's been a change for the better. They've come together as group."

Hull was an especially emotional game for the Skippers, who controlled most of the play and were up 4-2 with less than five minutes to go but let down in the end and the Pirates were able to get a couple goals past Kevin DeVito to tie the game.

The new togetherness was never more evident than Tuesday afternoon when the squad faced Carver and took home a 2-2 tie against the Crusaders, a team that had given them a good thrashing when they met earlier this season.

"The boys had it in their mind to make up for that game. They beat us pretty bad back then," said Martell. "A win would have been a big help to us, but the tie is what we got. We played them fairly equal and both teams had a chance to take home the win."

Jake Motley and Dennis Rooney got the scores for Cohasset, who are back in action Thursday at Hull as part of a doubleheader and then travel to Middleboro on Friday and then to Abington next Thursday.



As they got through their South Shore League schedule the second time around, Martell said opponents should bank on seeing a different Skipper squad than the first run through.

""We are a different team now and we are a better one at that," said Martell. "Ever since that tie with Hull we seemed to jelled much better as a unit. We are working together, playing crisper and everything just seems to be a little bit more effective that it was earlier in the year.

"This team hasn't given up on the tournament yet," he added. "We need to win some game, but we still think that we are going to be in the hunt."

To stay in the hunt, the Skippers are going to need continued production from top scorer Steve Sceery as well as the continued strong play from their top defensive unit, also known as Three Ben's and a Baird.

"There's not really a superstar player there, but they work very well together and are very good at covering for one another," said Martell of Ben Bixby, Ben Littauer, Ben Peterson and Mike Baird. "They do a good job of working together as a unit."

Gridders hope to get back on track tonight

Skippers washed away by Green Wave

By Tony Costello
CORRESPONDENT

If Christopher Columbus had encountered such foul elements that the local high school football teams faced this past holiday weekend, would there be a New World today?

Would there be a Columbus, Ohio? If not, then the Buckeyes could not possibly hold the number one ranking in college football. There would be no Columbus Clipper baseball team that the New York Yankees could have recalled the now legendary Shane Spencer up from.

Not to fret, dear reader. The local gridiron action went one as planned, with some slight delays. Abington's Green Wave football squad had to wait a couple of days, but for their opponent, the Cohasset Skippers, they could not delay the inevitable-a 20-6 South Shore League loss to the Green Wave.

Marcus LaPointe navigated his way through the sloppy conditions at Memorial Field in a manner that Columbus could appreciate. LaPointe picked up 133 yards rushing along with a pair of touchdowns as the Green Wave improved to 2-0 in the SSL, 3-1 overall.

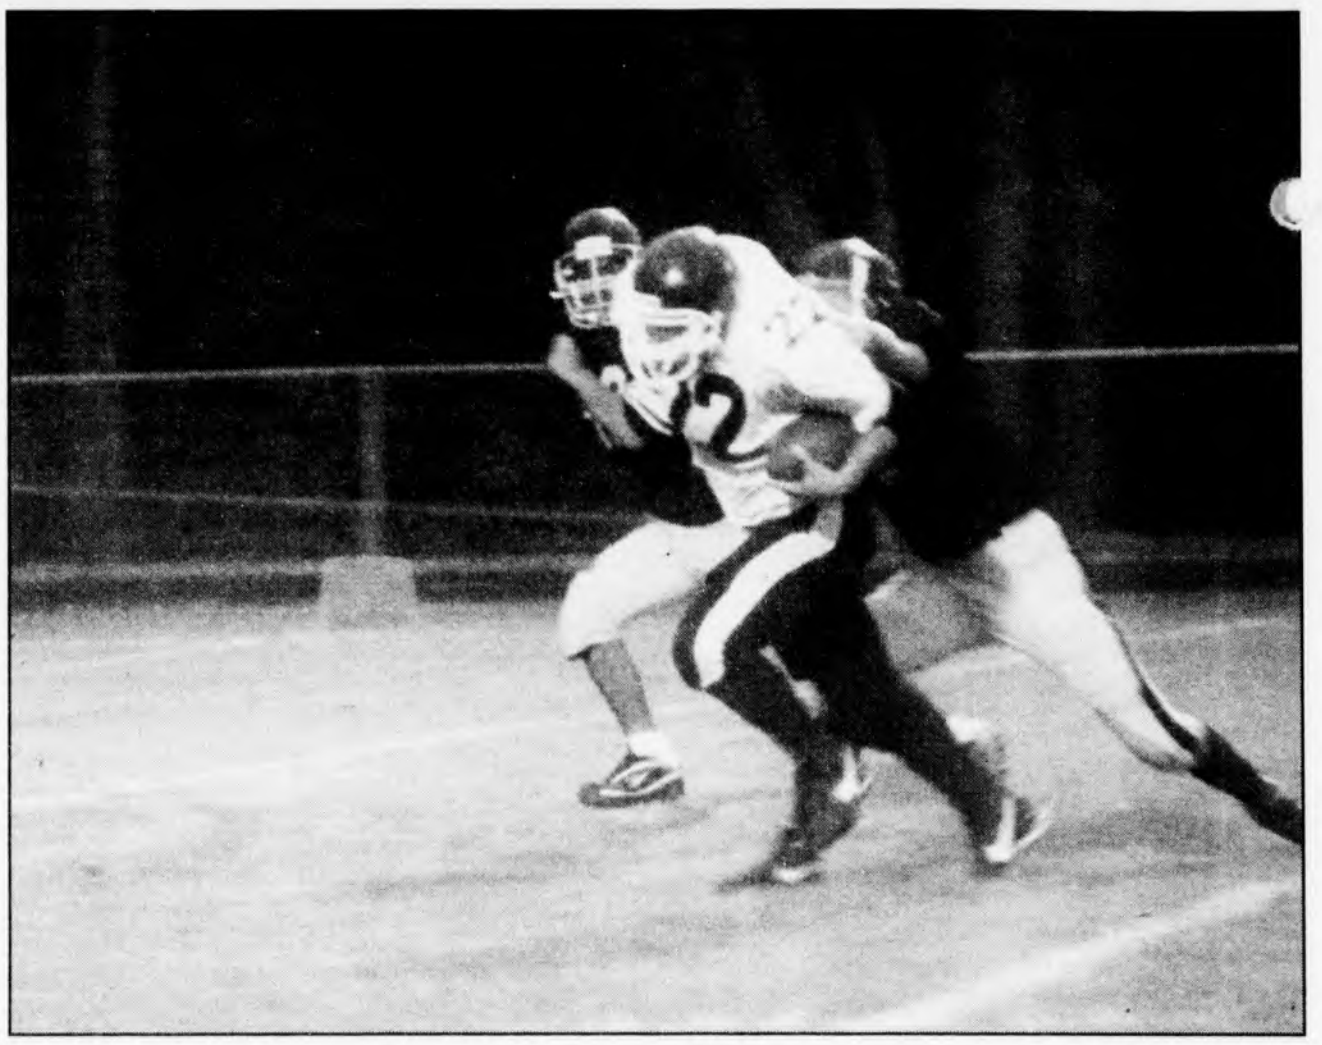
The Skippers fall to 0-2 in league play, 1-3 overall. They look to get back on the winning side of things tonight (Thursday) when they host Norton in a special mid-week matinee. Kick-off is at 5 p.m.

Cohasset did manage to keep things v-e-r-y i-n-t-e-r-e-s-t-i-n-g, as Arte Johnson was once fond of saying. (No, he didn't serve in Columbus' crew.) The Skippers actually led for most of the first half, compliments of their talented sophomore tailback, Daniel Trowers.

Trowers ran one in from eight yards out and Cohasset led 6-0 in the first quarter. But that initial drive proved to be Cohasset's last threat. Abington's defense shut down Cohasset the rest of the way, not yielding another first down until the waning seconds of the game.

Cohasset clung to their advantage and had the Green Wave pinned deep in their own territory, at the 15 to be exact. But a 42-yard dash by Dan Miller ignited the hosts. QB Mike McCreary's sneak from the one capped off the drive. Chuck Alexander's PAT gave the Green Wave a lead they would not relinquish.

Abington dried off (as much as possible) and proceeded to wash away any hopes that the Skippers may have entertained about reclaiming any momentum. On the second play from scrimmage in the third quarter, LaPointe took off and outraced the Cohasset secondary for a 57-yard touchdown run and a 13-6 Green Wave lead.



LaPointe had a hand at both ends of the final Abington touchdown. His brutal hit forced a Cohasset fumble that was pounced on by Jon Watters (the most appropriately named player in this contest). LaPointe capped off the 30-yard drive with a plunge from the one. Alexander nailed the PAT and that was it for Cohasset, who fell to 0-2 in league play.

UP NEXT: Abington will make the trek to the northern tip of the South Shore League on Friday night, taking on the Hull Pirates with the kickoff set for 7:00 PM. The young Pirates feature a talented running back in Adam Littlefield. SE Brian McNamara is a deep threat in the Hull attack.

The Pirates got whacked by defending SSL champ Norwell last week, suffering a 34-14 setback. McNamara hauled in a 70-yard touchdown pass for the Pirates in the loss. Hull was victimized by Brian Fabrizio, who ran for 200 yards and tacked on four touchdowns as well.

AROUND THE SSL: Carver waited until the fourth quarter to make things happen, exploding for all of their points in the final ten minutes to take a 22-0 non-league win over Savio Prep.

Hanover got a combined 209 yards rushing from Andy Breda and Joe Murphy as the Indians routed the Norton Lancers, 24-0.

proach, getting on the field and taking part in as many drills as possible. She enjoys the closeness of the team [illegible] seeing the girls outside of the classroom environment.

"Just being with the kids and trying to teach them is a blast," Beal said. "They're out of school, more laid back and a lot of fun."

More importantly, Beal teaches her players without instilling the approach she took during her playing days. Each athlete, she knows, is different and not looking for the same thing from soccer.

"I'm a very competitive person and I hate to lose," Beal said. "But you can't coach like that. I want to give the kids the opportunity to excel and to have fun."

Beal believes the difference between coaching at the varsity level, compared to JV to be huge. Freshmen, for the most part, are coming off a youth program and the key is dealing with different maturity levels.

Beal has found that the great soccer player have one move that they do very well. All their moves with the ball grow from that move. During the first week of practice, Beal worked with the players on individual skills, with the goal of finding one each player was comfortable with "and growing from there."

Beal admits the team goes through some "bad days" because of the quality of competition it plays against. But she can't help but be encouraged by the players' enthusiasm on the field and desire to get better.

"They want to win," Beal said. "They're a team and do everything together. Cohasset's such a small school. You're not dealing with a thousand kids."

And as much as she likes coaching the game, Beal would love to be back on the field, helping to lead her team to victory.

"I'd definitely go back to college and do it again," she said.

Welcome to the year of the running back

EXTRA POINTS

By Mike Hardman

You know the names.

It's hard not to if you are a high school football fan.

Just listen for awhile and you'll hear the names of the top running backs on the South Shore.

And there's a lot of good ones this year.

Dave Seger: He is Duxbury High's one person wrecking crew.

Norwell High's Brian Fabrizio: He is the top scorer in the state these days.

And they are only two.

You can throw Marshfield's Marquisse Silva into the mix. Coaches and players alike fear him with the ball in his hands.

Don't leave Hanover's Andy Breda out of the picture although South Shore League coaches wish he would take a night off when it is their turn to play the Indians.

Abington coach Jim Kelliher would hate to think what life would be like without Marcus LaPointe, who is just a bull of a runner.

Don't forget to put Rockland's Rob Killinger on the list. Quietly, although how quiet can you be if you run for around 150 yards every Friday night, he has become one of the best for the 4-0 Bulldogs.

But listening to him after he ran for a touchdown and 174-yards on 17 carries as the Bulldogs ran to 14-0 win over Middleboro last Friday night at Battis Field, you wouldn't know it.

Killinger says he's having a "pretty good" season, but he would much rather talk about his offensive line. That's a smart move if you're a running back and this is one senior who is pretty bright about football.

"The line was great," he said. "We all like to run behind them. We have a lot of confidence in them. They are experienced, physical and they were tough."

Rockland head coach Ken Owen is also a pretty smart guy. He knows that when he needs to have his team eat up the clock and collect yardage, it's a very good idea to give the ball to the 5 feet, 10 inch, 205-pounder. That's what he did in the fourth quarter of the Middleboro game. Rockland was clinging on to a 7-0 lead with 7:48 left in the game, but by the time, Killinger ran for his 14-yard score, there was only a 1:38 left in the game.

"I was happy to see Rob score," said Owen. "He worked hard for the last touchdown and we wanted him to get one."

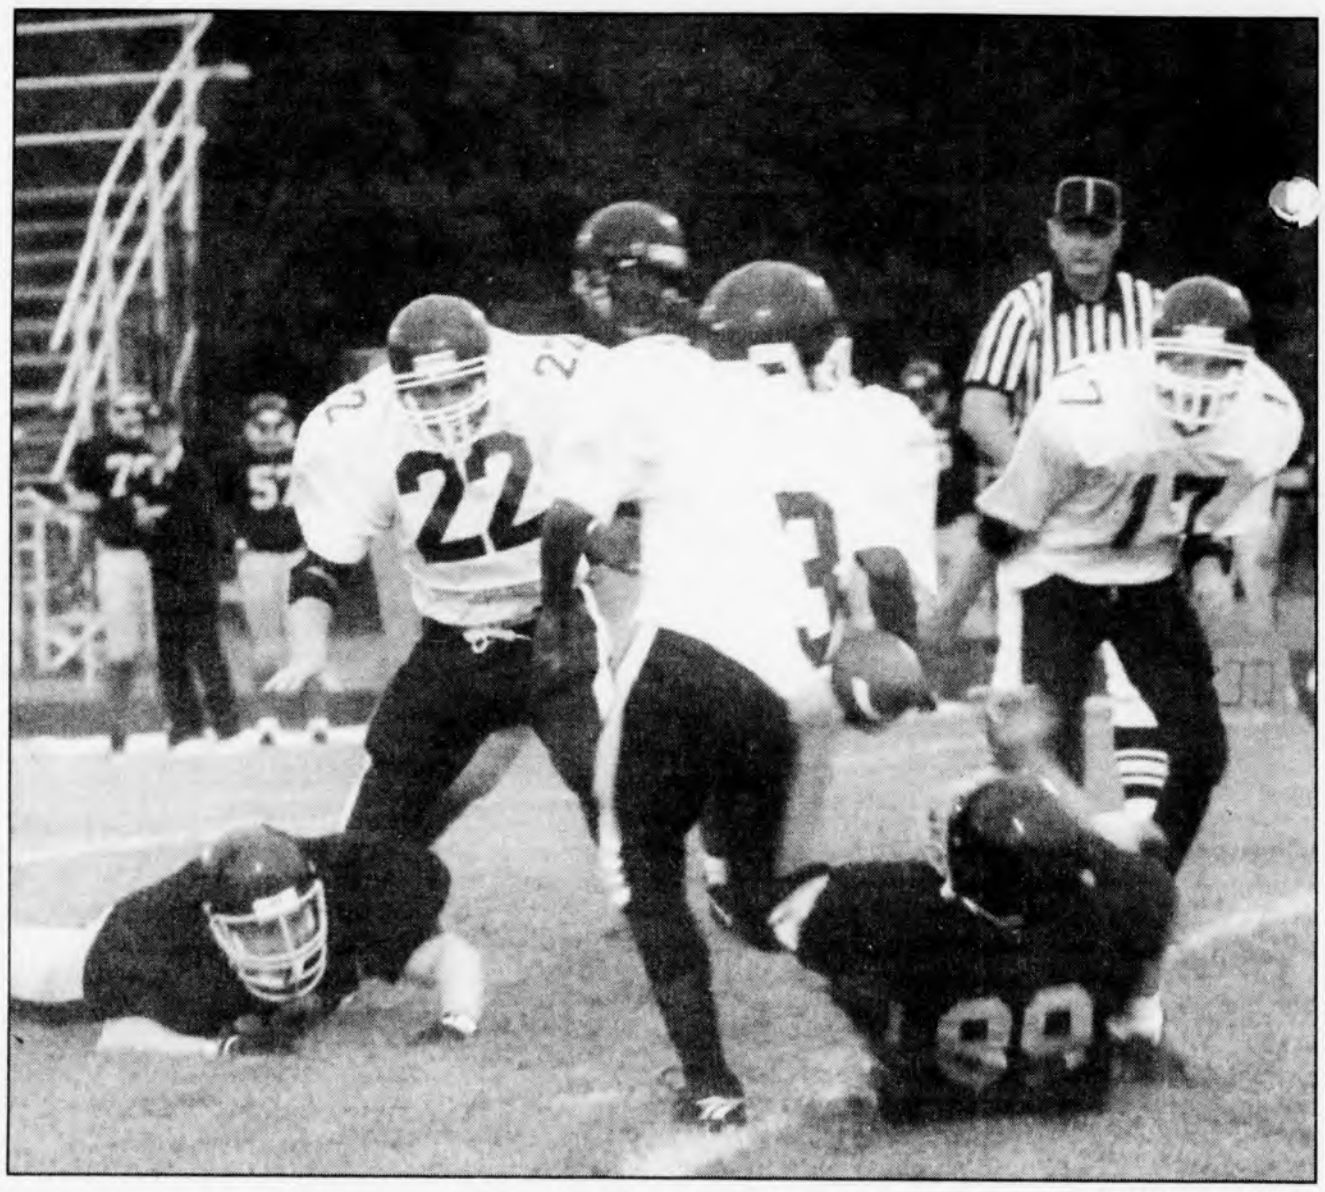
Killinger doesn't sprint away from defenders, like a Fabrizio or Seger does. Instead, he runs over them and through them.

"You're not going to arm tackle him," said Mike Thibeau. "He's strong."

Thibeau knows little bit about tackling as a former defensive back at the University of Rhode Island. He was also in charge of taking care of all the bumps and bruises that Killinger that inflicted on the Sachems on Friday night as he was filling in as the trainer at Middleboro High.

Four games into the season, Killinger has left Abington, Marshfield, Scituate and now Middleboro, battered after he was done running over them.

He likes contact. This is one running back, who isn't looking to see his name next to 80-yard touchdown runs.



There is only one stat that he is concerned about. When Killinger runs with the ball, he is just looking 10 yards ahead.

"The first downs were big," said Killinger. "That's what we try for. We don't have the breakaway back."

But, they do have a back who is looking straight ahead.

"It's been going pretty good so far," said Killinger, "(but) it's still a long season."

And he'll take it 10 yards at a time, thank you.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Deer Hill hat project underway

By Ann Berman
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Deer Hill students and seventh graders are knitting hats for the Plymouth Area Coalition For The Homeless. They are knitting warm wool hats which will then be sent to a homeless shelter for men, women and children, located in Kingston. Students are being taught to knit simple wool hats at Afterschool Art on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, and seventh graders, who learned to knit last year, are knitting away, too.

They now have 54 completed hats and are working, every day, to add more to the collection. Parents, grandparents and members of the community are welcome to knit hats as well, and the simple instructions are available at the Deer Hill School.

Last year, Deer Hill students knit 184 wool hats for Rosie's Place, a Boston area homeless shelter. At Christmas time, with the kind help of parent volunteers, we drove all the students to Rosie's Place to deliver the hats. They hope to make at least as many for the Plymouth shelter and would appreciate your support.

Completed parent/grandparent/community member hats should be labeled and brought to the Deer Hill office.

If you have questions about this project I can be contacted at Deer Hill School, 383-6115.

Commended students in the 1999 Merit Program

The principal, Curtis S. Collings, Jr., of Cohasset Middle and High School announced that Lucius K. Caldwell, Benjamin T. Littauer, James V. O'Sullivan, Stephen M. Reynolds, and Steven R. Sceery have been named Commended Students in the 1999 National Merit Scholarship Program. A Letter of Commendation from the school and National Merit Scholarship Corporation (NMSC), which conducts the program, will be presented by the principal to these scholastically talented seniors.

Some 34,500 Commended Students throughout the nation are being honored for their exceptional academic promise. Although they will not continue in the competition for Merit Scholarship awards to be offered next spring, Commended Students placed among the top five percent of more than one million students who entered the 1999 Merit Program by taking the 1997 Preliminary SAT/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test.

AP Scholars named at CHS

Nine students at Cohasset High School have been named AP Scholars by the College Board in recognition of their exceptional achievement on the college-level Advanced Placement (AP) Examinations. Approximately 23 percent of America's graduating seniors have taken one or more AP Examinations. Only about 13 percent of the more than 635,000 students who took AP Examinations in May 1998 performed at a sufficiently high level to merit such recognition.

The College Board recognizes several levels of achievement based on the number of year-long courses and exams (or their equivalent semester-long courses and exams). At Cohasset High School:

Three students qualified for the AP Scholar with Honor Award by earning an average grade of at least 3.5 on all AP Exams taken, and grades of 3 or higher on four or more of these exams. These students are Kathleen Buckley, John Flanagan, and Alison Kinchla.

Six students qualified for the AP Scholar Award by completing three or more AP Examinations, with grade of 3 or higher. The AP Scholars are Jane Flaherty, Amanda Gontarz, Lindy Holway, James O'Sullivan, Andrew Ross, and Kelly Tufts.

AP Examinations, which students take in May after completing challenging college-level courses at their high school, are graded on a 5-point scale (5 is the highest). Most of the nation's colleges and universities award credit and/or placement for grades of 3 or higher, and more than 1,400 institutions award a year of credit (sophomore standing) to students with a sufficient number of qualifying grades. There are 32 AP Examinations offered in 18 subject areas, each consisting of multiple-choice and free-response (essay or problem-solving) questions.

Ripley Media Center upgrades

Recent improvements at the Ripley Media Center at Cohasset Middle High School have upgraded the look of the facility. A new rug, clean painted walls and a new library media specialist have contributed to the changes. Joan Gallagher, a veteran of both public and school libraries, has set her goal for this year. She wants to expand the materials collection and work with staff and students to use both traditional and newer research tools to their fullest.

Parents or other Cohasset residents who would like to volunteer to assist with ongoing, as well as, special projects are invited to call the Ripley at 383-2447 for details.

LIBRARY CORNER

Flowers at the Library

The flower arrangement now displayed on the main service desk in the rotunda of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library were given in memory of Wilma H. Husband, of Springfield and Orleans, who died in July,

The library is always happy to accept flower arrangements donated as memorials or as simple gifts. Prominently displayed for both staff and public to enjoy, the extra color and beauty are very much appreciated.

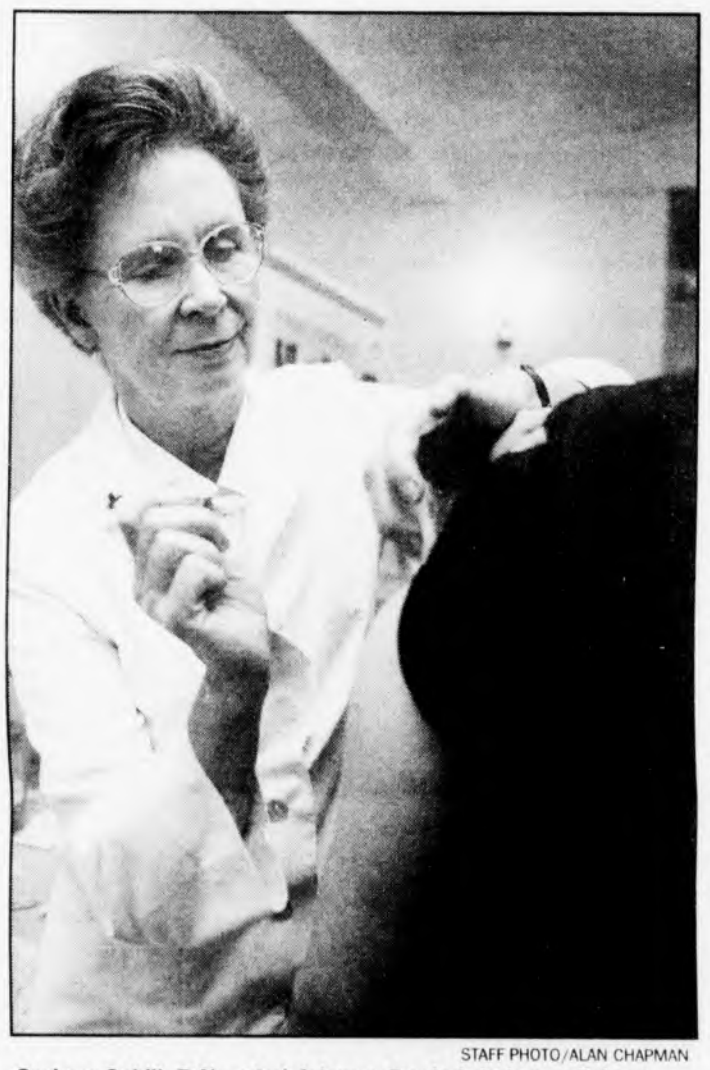
Anger takes the stage at Cohasset High School

Be a part of the anger and tension in the jury room as 12 people try to reach a unanimous decision that will determine the life or death of a boy convicted of murder.

Winner of television, film, and stage acting awards in both the 1950's and the 1990's, Twelve Angry Men will be presented in a revised version that makes use of a jury composed of both males and females on Oct. 16-18 by the Drama Workshop at Cohasset High School.

Adding to the tension of Twelve Angry Men and Women is the fact that the audience will all be in the jury room (or at least as near to the actors as possible) because they will be seated on-stage in a theatre-in-the-round set-up with nobody more than ten feet from the jurors as the play unfolds.

Drama Workshop director Ron Emmons feels that this plays demands this type of staging.



"There should be no tricks here, " he said. "The play only works if the audience feels that they are there as the tension builds. They can't escape the decision any more than the characters can."

Appearing in the cast are a number of Drama Workshop veterans including seniors Jordan Fiore, Ron Nicynski, Meredith O'Hayre, Jim O'Sullivan and Steve Reynolds, junior Grace Gardner, and sophomores Elizabeth Ingber, Julia Lovallo and Ashley Ulmer. Nicynski returns to the CHS stage as an actor following a year directing successful productions of Annie and Into the Woods for the Players by the Sea. Except for Nicynski, the veterans appeared in the joint British and American Through Our Eyes or Godspell last year with O'Sullivan and O'Hayre winning acting awards for their work on the Drama Festival version of Through Our Eyes. Making their CHS debut Twelve Angry Men and Women are seniors Ryan Long, Jake Motley, and Patrick Murphy, Stephanie Perkinson. Stage manager for the show is Liz Hassan.

Because of the intimate nature of this production only 60 seats will be available for each performance. Tickets may be purchased for $5 from any cast member. They may reserved on-line at EmmonsR@aol.com but will only be held at the box office until one half-hour before show time. Twelve Angry Men and Women will be performed at 8:00 on Friday and Saturday, Oct. 16 and 17, with doors opening at 7:30 and at 7:00 on Sunday, Oct. 18, with a 6:30 opening. The audience is reminded that all seats be general admission so that early arrival is advised.

Later this month the Drama Workshop will again perform with six students from Southend (England) High School for Girls in a new dramatization of Edgar Lee Masters' Spoon River Anthology. In January a revised version of What You Will, a comedy by the Workshop director based upon Shakespeare's Twelfth Night will be presented and will be repeated as the Cohasset High School entry in the Massachusetts High School Drama Festival in late February.

Corinne Cahill, R.N., administers a flu shot during a clinic at the Second Congregational Church. The clinics are sponsored by the Social Service League and Board of Health.

October flu clinics planned

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League announce the October Flu Clinics:

It's time to "winterize and immunize!" The best way to protect yourself from the flu is a yearly flu shot. Who should get a flu shot?

People who are 65 or older.

Children or adults with chronic lung disease, heart disease, diabetes or other chronic health problems. Children or teens who, for medical reasons, take an aspirin every day.

People who live with or take care of someone who is at risk of getting the flu (health care workers, primary care givers, etc.)

Anyone wanting extra protection during the winter months from the current flu strains.

There is one remaining flu clinic specifically for seniors:

Friday, Oct. 16, 10 a.m. to noon at Harborview, 60 Elm St.

Community flu clinics for all Cohasset residents are: Saturday, Oct. 17, 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave.; Saturday, Oct. 24, 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave.; andTuesday, Oct. 27, 7 to 9 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave.

Note: Please wear a short sleeve shirt.

Any seniors who have not received the pneumonia vaccine or who have not had a tetanus booster for 10 years or more, may call the league office at 383-0771 or 383-0821 for our walk-in clinic hours. All vaccines are free for Cohasset residents.

Halloween Fair set for Oct. 25

Spooks and cartoon characters of all shapes, sizes and ages will want to be ready to take to the Common Sunday, Oct. 25 when the annual South Shore Community Center Nursery School Halloween Fair steps off with it's traditional costume parade at 1:30 p.m. Little ghosts and goblins will want to stay around until the fair's end at 3:30 p.m. to try their hands at enchanting games of skill and luck, special craft activities, the moon walk, playport, goblin target game and of course lots of refreshments.

Tickets for all games and activities may be purchased throughout the day on the Common. Tickets are three for $1 with most games and activities requiring two or three tickets to participate.

Proceeds from the fair benefit the South Shore Community Center Nursery School including the school's scholarship and program funds.

For more information about the Fair of the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, contact Lynne Sheridan at 383-0036.

OBITUARIES

Margaret A. DeRosa

Margaret A. (Pizzimenti) DeRosa, 73, of Cohasset, a retired secretary, died Wednesday, Oct. 1, at home.

Mrs. DeRosa worked as an administrative secretary for the principal of Weymouth South High School for 17 years, retiring in 1987.

Born in Boston, she lived in Weymouth most of her life and moved to Cohasset in 1977.

She graduated from Girls High School in Boston and attended Northeastern University.

Mrs. DeRosa leaves her husband, Anthony P. DeRosa; two sons, Richard DeRosa of Cohasset and Robert DeRosa of Orange; a daughter, Linda DeRosa-Coakley of Cohasset; a brother, Paul Pizzimenti of Revere; a sister, Grace Smedberg of Malden; four grandchildren; and several nephews and nieces.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset directed the arrangements.

Boston Magazine's Montgomery to return to radio

Tim Montgomery

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Cohasseter Tim Montgomery announced his plans to step down after 10 months as Boston Magazine publisher so that he can return to his original love, radio.

"By and large, it's been a wonderful experience and I've enjoyed it," he said, looking back on his foray into the publishing world.

When the owners of the magazine approached Montgomery a year ago, he was a little skeptical at first. "I'm a radio guy, but it seemed like an interesting and exciting venture."

During his time with the magazine, the publication ran some controversial pieces that stirred discussion among Boston and suburban residents.

The "Head Negro in Charge" headline used by the magazine for Cheryl Bentsen's featured article on Henry Louis "Skip" Gates Jr., chairman of the African American Studies Department at Harvard University stirred up debate in the African-American community and throughout the nation.

The phrase "Head Negro in Charge" is new African-American intellectual parlance for someone like Gates who "was effectively anointed premier black intellectual in the United States... and chief interpreter of the black experience for white America" by The New Yorker magazine editor, Tina Brown, according to Bentsen's article.

Indeed, Gates was named one of the "25 most influential Americans" by Time magazine last year.

Following the swirl of media coverage about the issue, magazine editor Craig Unger expressed his "regrets and genuine sorrow if I have inadvertently caused anyone any pain." Unger explained that he had discussed the headline with African-American friends and associates. "None of them found it offensive," he said.

Cohasset Interruptus was another unsettling article, with its perhaps too personal description of an inappropriate relationship between Michael Kennedy and a much younger local girl that also created some controversy for its very personal nature.

"That's all behind us," said Montgomery. "Some of the editorial issues, sometimes I would like to have been able to control more," he said. "But you can't do that or the magazine wouldn't have editorial integrity. You need to create an environment where the editorial people feel challenged to do their job. Still, that sometimes was a little frustrati- "

Montgomery is keeping [illegible] his future plans but hints tha[illegible] may be in radio, from which he ca[illegible].

"I've spent my whole career in radio," said Montgomery, who once owned a group of radio stations. "I kind of miss it. I'm reasonably certain I'll be returning to radio."

Montgomery explained that the pace is different in radio, with its daily deadline, as opposed to the monthly deadline of magazines.

During his tenure, he organized the sales department and brought revenue up higher than it had ever been. "I think I've worked in the community very hard to make people understand that Boston Magazine is an integral part of the Boston community. For someone who grew up in the area, I think that helped build trust with advertisers and community leaders."

"It's been a great year, working with a great staff and reporting on the life of a great city every month," said Montgomery. "I think we all had a good time."

Speedy special town meeting is hoped for

But it's unlikely, moderator says

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

If Town Moderator George Marlette has his druthers then Monday's special town meeting will run like clockwork.

But this is Cohasset where the venerable form of open town meeting government thrives and issues of all kinds can usually get an airing.

In his six years as moderator, Marlette has only presided over one town meeting — his first, a special town meeting in Oct. 1992 — that lasted only one night.

Still Tuesday, he was optimistic that this one — which gets underway at 7 p.m. Monday at the middle/high school auditorium — could also make it into the record books.

"I think we could have a stab at it," Marlette said.

"I will gavel the meeting to order the moment we have 100 bodies registered," he added about the required quorum before business can get underway. The meeting is scheduled 30 minutes earlier than usual and Marlette hopes voters will be prompt so all can take advantage of the extra 1/2 hour.

But Wednesday after what he described as a "grueling" 2-1/4 hour pre-town meeting session with town officials, Marlette conceded "it's going to be a two-nighter."

"We tried to resolve differences and simply the process," he said.

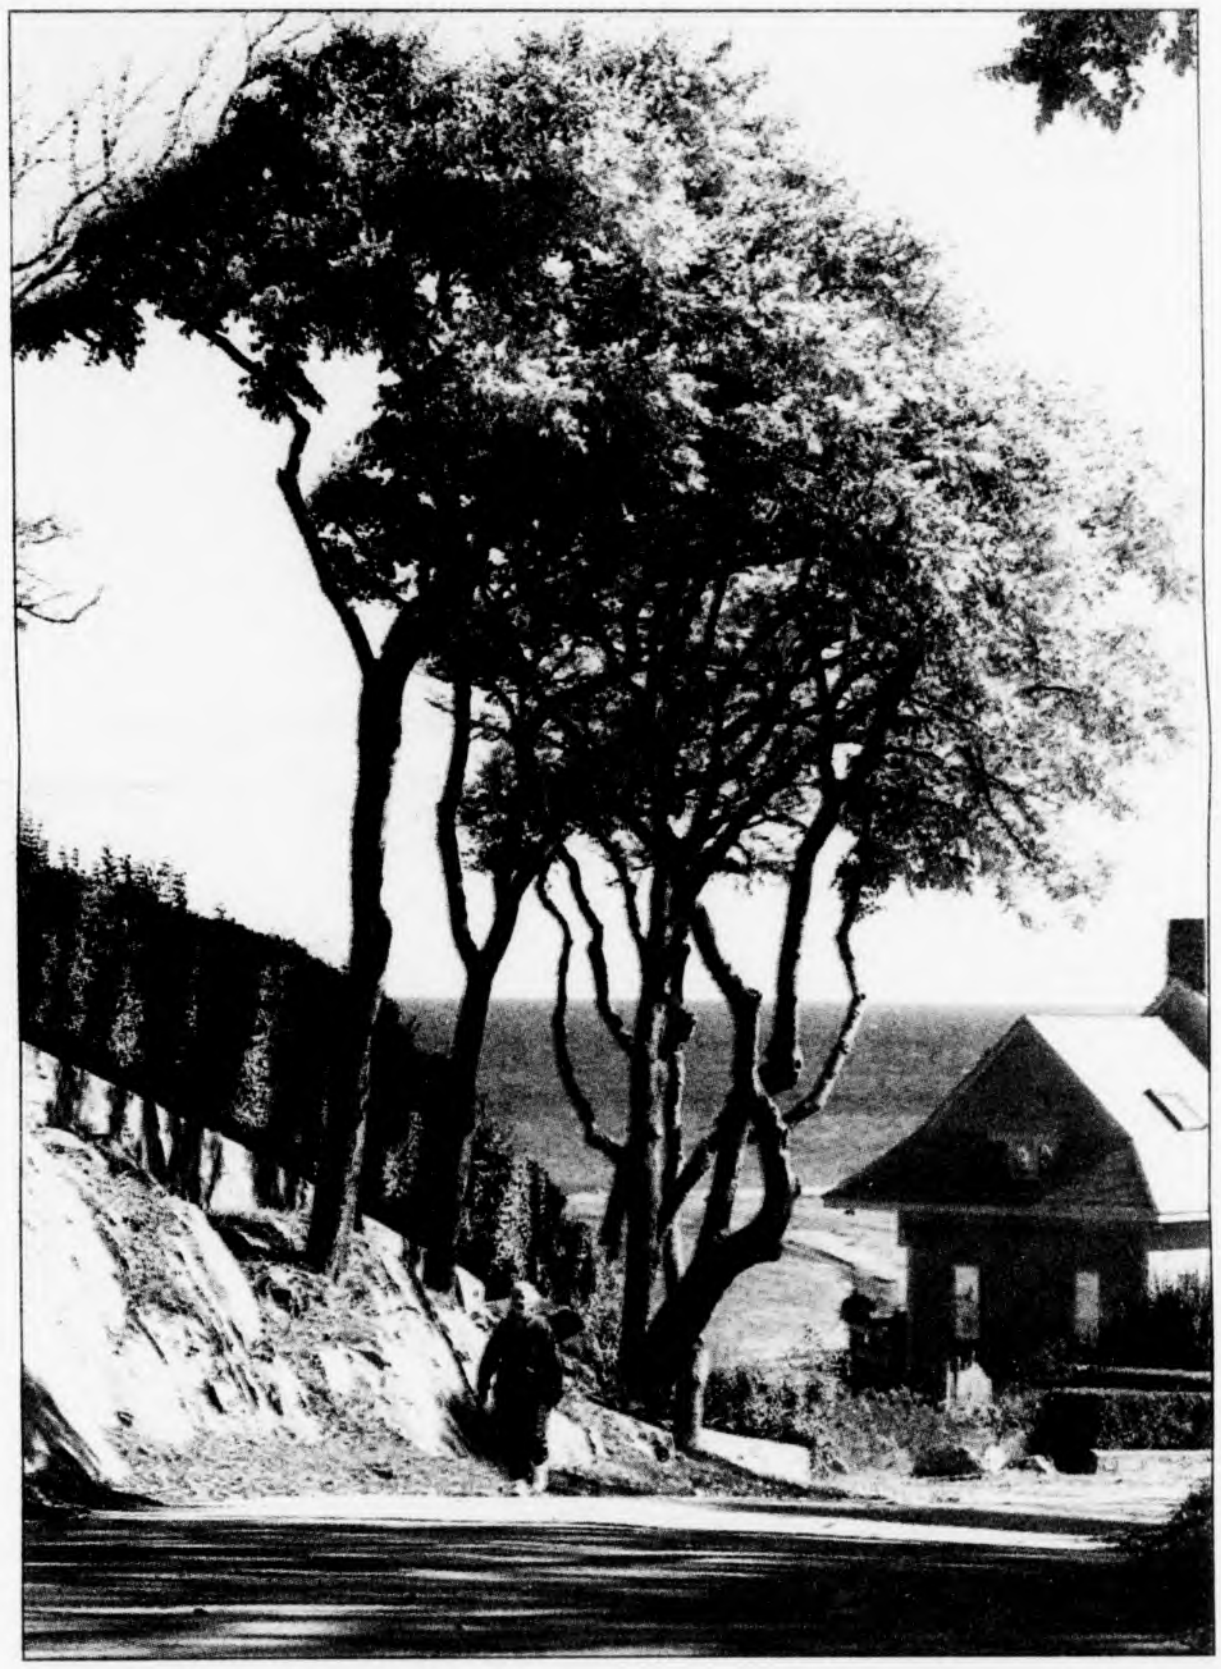
Old fire boxes up for grabs

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Residents may have a once-in-a-lifetime chance to get their hands on one of Cohasset's 112 fire boxes. Since the early part of this century, residents could report a fire by pulling the little white lever on one of pole-mounted fire boxes in town. Alarm boxes would alert fire fighters, who would respond to the box location and look for the fire or emergency. But it's a different world in 1998. Cellular telephones, beepers, faxes, e-mail, the Internet and the proliferation of communications equipment have made the little red boxes obsolete.

Alarm boxes would alert fire fighters, who would respond to the box location and look for the fire or emergency.



Now the boxes have been decommissioned and removed from telephone poles, leaving the town with a new problem: what to do with the little red devices. Selectmen are interested in seeing whether the public is interested in getting ahold of one of the red boxes, possibly for a fee or maybe at no cost. Residents interested in getting a box should contact the selectmen's office by mail as soon as possible.

Officially known as the "municipal fire alarm telegraph system," the pole mounted boxes and master boxes in commercial buildings have served the town well for decades. But few people have used them in the last decade, around the same time E-911 came into use. When a dispatcher receives a 911, the caller's name, address, telephone number, and apartment number appear on a computer screen. Even if the call is interrupted, the information is transmitted as long as a telephone connection is established.

When Fire Alarm Superintendent Steve Wigmore announced his plans to retire two years ago after 32 years on the job, the time seemed right to eliminate the boxes and the $65,000 in annual maintenance costs. Selectmen successfully petitioned the Legislature to eliminate the wire inspec-

Victim's family sought suspended sentence

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Judge Mark Coven said he took the wishes of the victim's family into account when meting out the punishment for the driver in a fatal accident that occurred last spring in Cohasset.

William Leigh Atherton, 18, received 2-1/2 years supervised probation and loss of his driver's license for 10 years after pleading guilty to motor vehicle homicide by reckless operation at what was described as an emotional hearing before Judge Coven in Quincy District Court on Friday.

Atherton of Clay Spring Road was the driver in a June 9 car crash that claimed the life of his friend and Cohasset High School classmate, Bourke Corcoran just four days before graduation. Corcoran, 18, was killed when police said the 1995 Nissan 200 SX, Atherton was driving, careened out of control and crashed down an embankment on King Street.

Police said Atherton's car was traveling in excess of 70 mph - which is 40mph over the speed limit on the narrow, winding road — when the accident occurred at about 11 p.m. that night.

In addition to the 10-year loss of license, the district attorney's office had asked for 2-1/2 years incarceration, with one year served and the balance suspended with supervised probation.

A victim's impact statement was read before sentencing, District Attorney Jeffrey Locke's office said.

"The only reason the case did not go to trial is because the victim's

Open space and concom volunteers needed

The selectmen are seeking a number of local residents to serve on the open space committee. At Tuesday's meeting, selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said she would like to see more citizen involvement on the open space committee. Selectman Tom Callahan also pointed out that the conservation commission is seeking alternate members. Anyone interested in the open space position or serving as a conservation commission alternate should contact the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

King Street speed limit gets partial approval

The Registry of Motor Vehicles has approved a posted speed limit of 30 MPH on King Street. But before residents get excited, they should understand that the Massachusetts Highway Department still needs to approve the posted speed limit, an unlikely event according to Town Manager Mark Haddad. Mass Highway rejected the town's request to ban truck traffic on King Street, a measure Haddad was sure the state agency would approve. Haddad said King Street does not meet the state's minimum requirements for a truck exclusion or a 30 MPH speed limit.

Selectmen approve town meeting articles

The selectmen have decided to support all three sewer articles—articles 11, 12, and 13— as well as articles 27 and 28 for school technology funding. One final article that was approved will request $7,086 to pay Town Counsel Paul DeRensis' office for an overdue bill from last year.

Harbor dock moratorium possible

The Cohasset Harbor Committee has asked the selectmen to place a one-year moratorium on new docks while members seek a grant to hire a consultant for a master plan. Harbor committee Chairman John Bertolami said the moratorium would apply only to new permits for docks for one year while his committee pursues the grant.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said she was concerned that the moratorium might affect plans to reopen the Charthouse as the Atlantica Restaurant. Other members worried about how the plan would affect the Hagerty Property project. Bertolami said the moratorium would affect only the dock at the Hagerty Property, and he didn't believe that part of the plan would be ready within a year. But Bob Davenport pointed out that the Hagerty Committee could be ready to [illegible] dock permits in less than one yea[illegible]

Selectman Tom Callahan said he wasn't sure the town had the authority to place a moratorium on docks, which fall under state jurisdiction. McMorris asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to get a legal ruling from town counsel determining whether the town could implement a moratorium.

Absentee ballots available for state election Nov. 3

Absentee ballots for the State Election, Nov. 3 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Monday, Nov. 2 at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only: Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open: Physical disability; and Religious beliefs which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Nov. 3 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the OVAL to the right of your choice, follow directions as to the number of candidates for each office, and to vote for a person whose name is not printed on the ballot, write the candidate's name on the line and completely fill in the OVAL.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

D & A drug hotline starts

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee is starting a new Drug and Alcohol Information and Referral Hotline on Tuesday, Oct. 27. Persons needing help with a drug or alcohol problem may call 383-4120. All calls are confidential, and staffed by a trained drug and alcoholism counselor on Tuesdays between 6 and 10 p.m.. On other days and at other times callers may leave a message.

The Drug and Alcohol Committee will post flyers throughout the town with the Hotline number on them.

Schools gear up for information age

Phase II of school technology plan before town meeting

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Town officials pondered a wish list of computer technology at a multi-board meeting last week to bring Cohasset schools into the — well, '90s.

The $350,000 price tag attached to what is called Phase II of a four-part plan to bring Cohasset schools into the information age will go before voters at the Oct. 26 special town meeting.

Schools Supt. Edward Malvey said Cohasset needs to remedy the situation if its students are to be able to keep up with their counterparts.

"As a new superintendent coming through, I do have better manners than coming in at our first meeting and asking you for $350,000," said Malvey. "But I'm not so sure we're in the curve at all. We're hoping the funding will get us into the curve and maybe even around it."

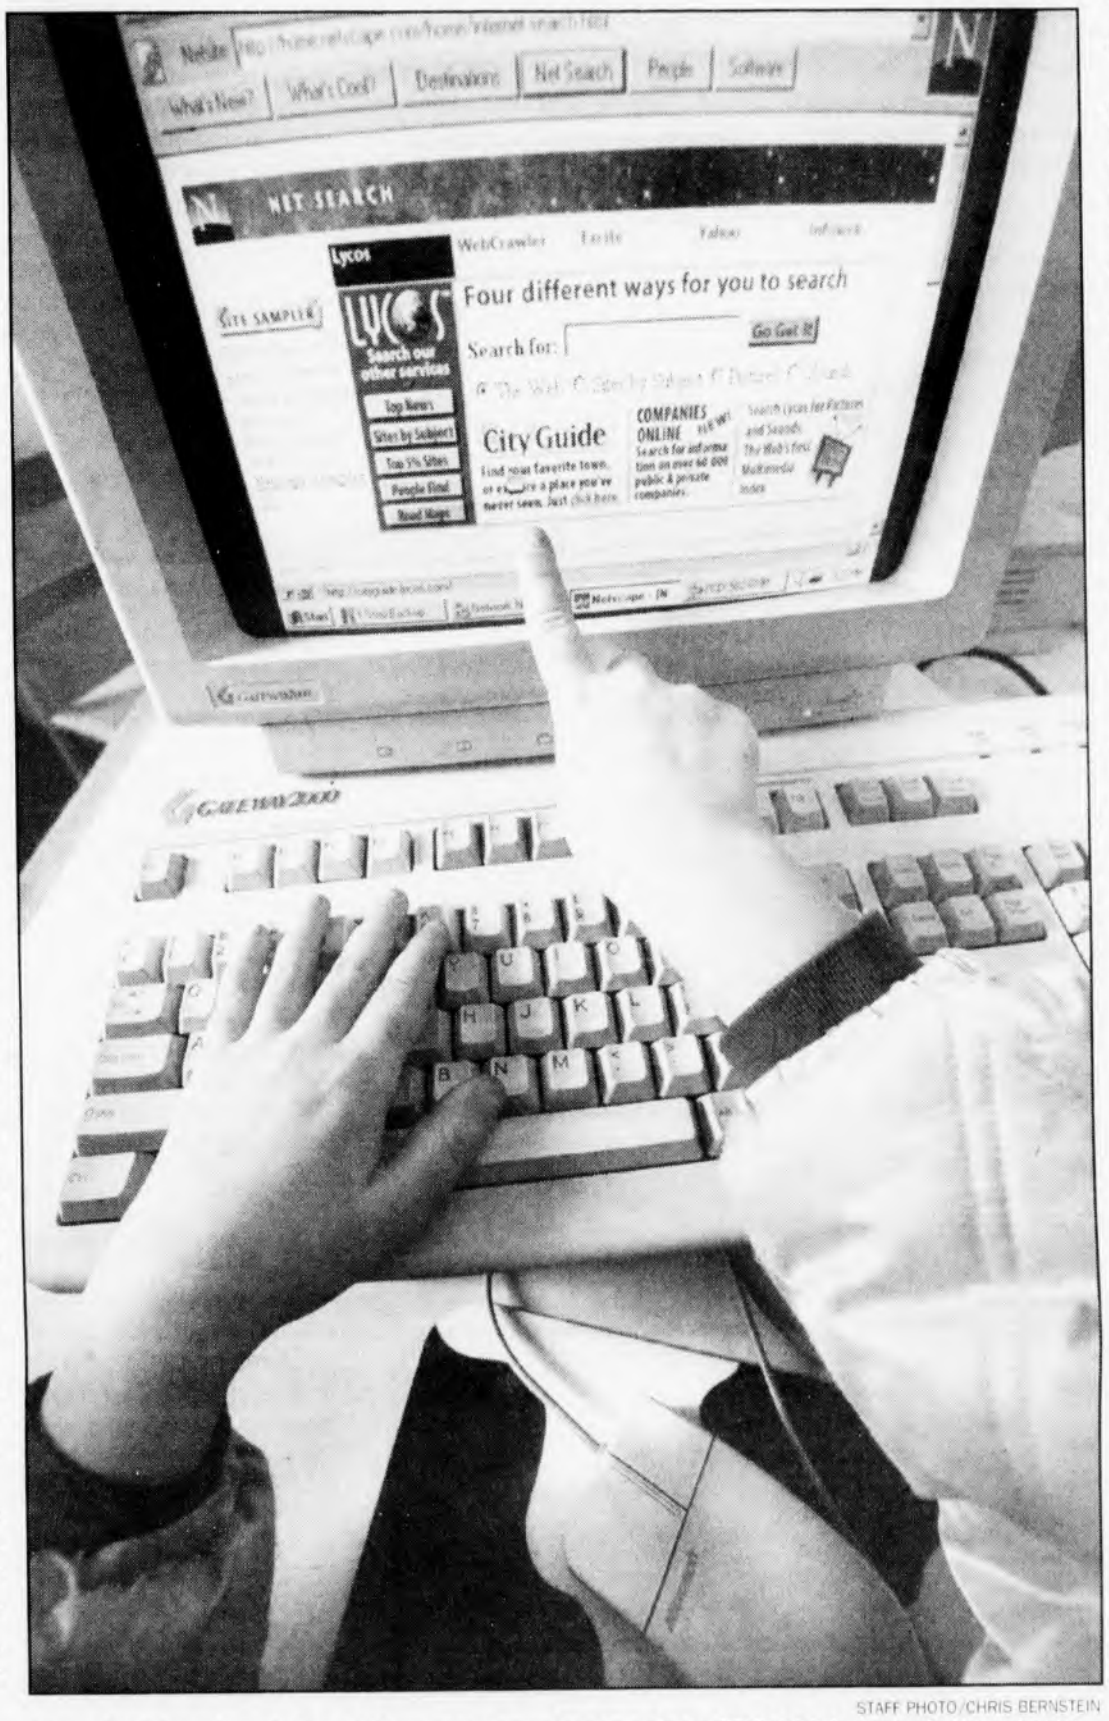
Cohasset is not alone in facing expensive technology upgrades for its schools. Under the five-year-old Education Reform Act, school districts across the state must bring their schools technologically up to speed.

The Education Technology (ET) bond bill, submitted by Governor Weld in 1995, assumes that education technology is primarily a local responsibility, but that the state can provide incentives and leverage for local spending by making limited amounts of state money available; can use incentives to promote the drafting of high quality local technology plans in the service of education reform; and can provide central network resources as a safety net to ensure that no one is left out of the technology loop.

Indeed, the Department of Education granted a total of $54,000 for wiring and training in response to Cohasset school district's technology plan.

Ironically, Massachusetts is a high-tech state with schools that are woefully low on technology. Massachusetts ranks 39th in its number of computers per classroom and 49th in computer networks through school district buildings. While Texas annually allots $30 per student for technology, Massachusetts spends $6.

What technology ideally should do for students in this age of education reform is provide curriculum frameworks, enhance professional development and recertification and improve administrative efficiency.



"According to a state Department of Education report from June of this year, Cohasset placed 209 out of 350 school districts, give or take a few," explained school committee member Joe McElroy, who is liaison to the education technology committee.

"The Department of Education is recommending that, as a rule of thumb for fiscal year '98, about $350 per student is necessary to support technology within a typical school district," he added. "We spent $88 per student last year. We're recommending less than $350 per student to do some catch-up. We're not gold-plating our request."

Last year, Cohasset voters approved $100,000 for Phase I to wire the Deer Hill and middle-high school, setting the stage for high-tech computers and software considered at Thursday's meeting which included selectmen, the advisory committee and capital budget committee in addition to the school committee.

The schools will need to spend a grand total of $800,000 over four years to fully implement the Education Technology Committee's plan.

Article 27 on the Oct. 26 Special Town Meeting warrant requests $200,000 to purchase equipment and Article 28 requests $150,000 for a "multi-year basis computer hardware, software and related equipment, including training."

The school department will ask town meeting voters to ante up $350,000 to upgrade the schools' computers.

The articles were split in two so that more money wouldn't be borrowed than needed and so that there would be flexibility to do more than just buy equipment. "Certain items that have longevity are good to buy but others might be better leased," explained McElroy. "We split our request into two articles so we would have the flexibility to do more than just buy equipment."

According to Malvey, the PCs will be used in class, library and lab settings. The new technology would allow the schools to link into on one comprehensive system, allowing easier communication and management. Teachers will use e-mail for easier inter-office communication and can also retrieve lesson plans from the Internet. Students will learn how to use the Internet to research subjects and problem-solve. Video, CD ROM and televised instructional programs will be able to be seen by all students in the different school buildings.

"We need to do more to make our students competitive because they will be sitting beside students in college who've come from high schools with updated technology."
— Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey

The new technology will bring Cohasset students up-to-date in the academic world.

"Any of us who have put kids through college know that computers have changed college in terms of learning," said Malvey. "Computers are now used as a selling point, such as a computer-to-student ratio. We need to do more to make our students competitive because they will be sitting beside students in college who've come from high schools with updated technology."

"The state Department of Education Technology Department encourages a ratio of four or five students to one computer for the last couple of years as part of its education reform policy," said McElroy.

Currently, Deer Hill has six classroom computers, four administration computers and 22 lab computers. Under the proposed Phase II request, there would be 18 classroom computers and seven administration computers, complete with software packages and Internet access.

The middle-high school has 30 classroom computers, 15 math lab computers, 11 library computers, 14 English lab computers and six technology lab computers. The Phase II money would add 25 Math lab computers, 25 humanities lab computers, 10 library computers, five technology computers, and 25 middle school lab computers, also complete with software packages. Furniture and installation will cost additional money.

Pre-kindergarten through third-grade students of the Osgood School will receive computers bought with what is left of its construction budget, once construction there is finished. The new school was already wired for Internet access.

These changes would bring the student-to-computer ratio for Osgood students to 9:1; the Deer Hill student-to-computer ratio to 6:1 and the middle-high school ratio to 4:1 at the end of the four-year technology program, according to school committee Chairman Rick Shea's calculation.

Capital budget committee member Stacey Weaver wanted to know about the research behind the $350,000 request.

"Did you research this?" asked Weaver. "Because for every dollar spent on hardware, there will be $4 to $5 on implementation."

"We have a number of technologically-savvy people in place now," explained Malvey, describing how staff will provide training to students and other faculty. "I've authorized the hiring of an additional aide for the year and a new system-wide director will also be brought on."

A within-budget computer installation package by Gateway computer company will help to the schools' computer system up and running.

"If both warrant articles are turned down by the town, I think you would have a situation that would be extremely disappointing to students, their parents and to the faculty," said Shea. "It would also be a potentially demoralizing situation."

Technology purchases have been put on hold for the last couple of years while the technology plan was put in place by wiring the schools for Internet accessibility. The schools are now hooked up, but lacking the computers to make use of the upgrade.

"The Education Reform Act pushes for use of technology in the curriculum through inquiry-based and discovery-based instruction rather than relying solely on lectures with note-taking," explained Shea. "Many of the kids are now doing this at home, but not all the kids have this access at home and they need to learn how to utilize the Net through teacher instruction at school."

Shea believes that getting the new computers to teachers is critical, not just for administrative purposes, but also because of the cost-savings involved in teachers updating their knowledge through research, sharing their findings with other teachers and holding computer-based "faculty meetings."

"More and more, teaching has become a profession of collaboration with special needs teachers, with other teachers in teams and with a curriculum coordinator," explained Shea. "Having a networked PC for these teachers will greatly improve their productivity and will allow teachers to collaborate without having to meet face to face, which is currently an issue with the teachers because of time issues."

There is also the morale aspect. A recent visit to Whitman-Hanson schools during the superintendent search brought school committee members face-to-face with the wealth of technology available to students in the less affluent town. Students attending a Mashpee athletic event this year were also wowed by the computer technology there.

Ironically, Massachusetts is a high-tech state with schools that are woefully low on technology. Massachusetts ranks 39th in its number of computers per classroom and 49th in computer networks through school district buildings. While Texas annually allots $30 per student for technology, Massachusetts spends $6.

"These upgrades are being done all over the state and it would be very unfortunate if Cohasset were not also willing to get the second phase of this technology plan funded," said Shea.

"I'm optimistic, not just hopeful," said McElroy. "We really have to do this. It's part of our way of life It offers tremendous potential for both managing the school district more effectively and making more effective available curriculum resources and facilitating learning for students. I'm 100 percent behind catching up and giving Cohasset students a competitive edge."

business before town meeting — which include a handful of housekeeping matters, such as unpaid bills, which Marlette hopes to pass with a single motion to speed things up.

If history is a gauge, then the sewer articles could stir considerable debate. The sewer commission is asking the town to appropriate about $2.7 million to complete the North Cohasset sewer project. The money would be paid back entirely by the users but many expect an amendment to be launched from the floor which will ask taxpayers to pick up 50 percent of the cost.

Also on the agenda is the disposition of the old Osgood School. A majority of selectmen back selling the building to a private company, Keen Development Corp. of Cambridge, which will turn the former elementary school into condominiums for senior citizens.

Voters can expect a presentation from Keen as well as from the library trustees who are lobbying hard for the town to consider the school as the site for a new library. The trustees will ask town meeting for money to proceed with construction drawings for their project.

"The reuse of Osgood is a big issue."

SELECTMEN CHAIRMAN RONNIE MCMORRIS

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said she thinks Osgood will generate the most interest.

"The reuse of Osgood is a big issue," she said.

Voters will also be asked to accept a handful of private ways as town roads. There's a chance those on private ways left off the list will let their views be known. The town can't use state money to maintain private ways, many of which have been neglected over the years, a situation which upsets their residents who note they pay the same amount of taxes as those on town streets.

The school committee is asking for $350,000 for the second phase of the technology plan to gear the schools up for the 21st century by adding computers and software (see related story page 3). While the advisory committee, selectmen and capital budget committee have been briefed on the plan, some voters may wa[illegible]id h the issue explained before considering approval of such a large sum.

Marlette said he will likely adjourn the meeting at about 10:45 p.m. unless there is very little left to discuss. If the meeting goes to a second night, it will reconvene Tuesday in the high school auditorium

Atherton's license cannot be reinstated for any reason within the ten years.

"There is no opportunity for hardship," Locke's spokeswoman Nina Flaherty said.

Atherton, whose lawyer is Daniel O'Malley of Quincy, also pled guilty to operating recklessly so as to endanger, for which he will undergo psychological evaluation and counseling. He was also guilty of failure to stay within marked lanes and speeding.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said in this case, probation is a more severe punishment than a suspended sentence because if the probation is violated, Atherton can be sentenced to the full 2-1/2 year term.

"If the Corcorans are satisfied with the sentence, then we're certainly satisfied," Noonan said.

The Registry of Motor Vehicles indefinitely revoked Atherton's license June 11. Before the June 9 accident, Atherton had had three speeding tickets and one written warning for speeding and had been involved in a single-car accident last winter. His license was suspended in Aug. 1997 for having three moving violations within a year. It was reinstated two months later.

Old fire boxes up for grabs

Fire boxes used to be a familiar sight in town.

tor's position, and Wigmore spent many of the waning days of his wire inspector's career removing the fire boxes.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said she wants to give away the boxes to residents on a first-come first-served basis. The selectmen did agree to give away one box to the Cohasset Historical Commission, either the device with the lowest number or the one the commission wants the most. If more than 111 residents apply for the remaining boxes, Sullivan suggested a lottery.

"I don't think we should charge residents," Sullivan said.

But fire boxes have some collector's value. Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to gauge public interest and see if people would be willing to pay for the boxes. Haddad said that Hull decommissioned its boxes last year and was able to sell the devices to local fire fighters and to a company contacted through a trade journal.

Police department receives grants

Cohasset police received two grants this week.

A $12,081 grant from the state Executive Office of Public Safety will continue to pay for the town's PALS (Police Assisting Local Schools) program, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

Another state grant for $16,000 will support the department's fiscal year 1999 community policing program.

Noonan said the grant will continue to support the bike and marine patrols and pay for the addition of a police website which is being developed.

St. Anthony's breaks ground for new center

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

A 10,500 square foot parish center at St. Anthony Parish is well on its way to becoming a reality. Construction workers broke ground on Oct. 15 and the ground has been stripped so work can begin on the foundation and building. The construction marks the end of a one-year effort by church officials to build the new parish center. Neighbors were concerned that the new building would exacerbate flooding in the area, but the church's architects considered those fears and presented a well designed plan. The Rev. John R. Mulvehill, pastor at St. Anthony's, said the construction company estimates it will take 240 days to complete the project.

"This will be the largest hall in town with capacity for 325 people," Mulvehill said. "We told all the different town agencies that it will be available for their use if they need to hold community meetings."

Mulvehill said he hopes the parish center will serve the whole community, but there is one snag. At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, some members of the board delayed a request from Town Manager Mark Haddad to waive the building permit fees for the center. Haddad said he thought the fee was around $12,000, but he wasn't sure of the exact figure.

The parish center will add eight classrooms, a 2,352 square-foot auditorium, a religious education office, and a parish office.

"I thought we would waive the policy because they are a non-profit agency," Haddad said.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris asked Haddad to see what the town had done in the past about waiving building permit fees for non-profit agencies. Selectman Diane Sullivan asked Haddad to find out the exact fee and report back to selectmen at their next meeting.

Church officials have been working on the parish center plans for the past five years. St. Anthony Parish needs the center to accommodate increased membership at the church. On a typical weekend, more than 1,200 people attend mass at the church. Currently, St. Anthony's offers religious education classes to 650 children, yet has no formal classrooms for instruction. Classes are held in the church basement, the rectory, and the "crying room" in the back of the parish. Parishioners also need an auditorium for weddings, meetings, social gatherings and other church functions.

The parish center will add eight classrooms, a 2,352 square-foot auditorium, a religious education office, and a parish office. The new building will face Sankey Lane, and the architecture will match the exterior of the existing church.

St. Anthony Parish was set apart from St. Paul Parish in Hingham in 1886, according to a small history compiled by Mulvehill. He said a church dedicated to St. Anthony of Padua had been built in Cohasset in 1875 and parishioners from St. Anthony Parish used that structure as their house of worship for the next 89 years. In 1964, church officials built a new St. Anthony Parish at its current location on the corner of Summer and South Main Streets. Parishioners used the old church's basement for a meeting room until the building was demolished in 1979. Since that time, church leaders have known they needed to locate a new meeting place. In 1993, Father John Keohane, the late pastor of St. Anthony's, started planning the new parish center.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor

THROWN A CURVE

Children should be regularly checked for signs of scoliosis, an abnormal curvature of the spine that may assume any of a number of curved forms. It is important to note that the condition can worsen over time. Once diagnosed, however, the chiropractor can encourage the spine to assume a more normal posture by adjusting vertebrae back into their correct positions, stretching the patient, and generally working in the opposite direction of the scoliotic curve. The goal is to take pressure off the compressed areas of the spine so they may grow more normally.

During October, "Children's Health Awareness and National Spinal Health Month," we would like to stress the importance of regular chiropractic care. Fortunately, many can be helped to conquer their pain and live a more active life without the need for drugs or surgery. The entire staff of SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC is specially skilled in treating spinal misalignments. Let us help you raise a healthy, drug free family. Improve your family's natural immunity. Call us at 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor.

P.S. A scoliosis evaluation should involve views of posture both from the back and the side.

Tinytown Gazette

Truths about Education Reform:

What Garrett Bradley doesn't want you to know.

...When we looked at Garrett Bradley's ad a little more closely this week, we were disheartened. Garrett's "facts" about Rep. Mary Jeanette's votes weren't wrong. Those were her roll call votes, exactly. But what he attempted to imply about Rep. Murray just wasn't true. And the only reason we knew it didn't ring true is because those facts are part of our early history.

Educational Reform, like the Tinytown Gazette, was in its infancy in 1993 - the details were still being debated and discussed. We went to those early meetings.

Rep. Murray may have voted the way Garrett said she did, but a lot of other democrats voted with Rep. Murray on those roll calls. The Reform sponsors just couldn't establish solid dollar amounts to fund the program. Here are a few of the locals: now former State Senator Brian McDonald (D, Weymouth), Janet O'Brien (D, Hanover) Vice Chairman of the House Committee on Education, Paul Haley (D) Chairman of Ways & Means Committee, Frank Hynes (D, Scituate, Norwell)

Also, Garrett's ad states that Rep. Murray voted against the increased state aid for public schools provided for in the Educational Reform Act.

In fact, Rep. Murray voted to increase school aid over the original bill's figures (the one she voted down) in an amendment which surfaced during the debate on Ed Reform.

She didn't like the aspect of a powerless school committee turning over all its hiring responsibilities to its employees, and she said that loudly and clearly at the time. She, along with the legislators who voted against the reform, knew Ed Reform would be doubly hard on middle class taxpayers living in affluent communities, because those middle class taxpayers would be paying up the ying yang for their own schools and everybody else's. History has proven Rep. Murray and her fellow democrats to be sages.

She didn't like the aspect of a powerless school committee turning over all its hiring responsibilities to its employees...

...We happen to know that Hingham and Cohasset school systems and taxpayers aren't all that happy with their Ed Reform lots. Their percentages are minimum compared to other towns.

In fact, on the front page of a recent Fidelity newspaper, where Garrett probably got the figures for his ad, a headline appears stating:
SUBURBAN SCHOOLS STRUGGLE WITH EDUCATIONAL REFORM — Enrollment increases and spending caps put schools in pinch.

In fact, the slices of the pie may have gone up, but Educational Reform cut State Aid to the bone for suburban school districts.

Next Bradley factoid. Did Rep. Murray really vote to allow the diversion of taxpayer funds from the public school system to support private schools as Garrett claims? No, again.

She voted "Yes" to take the question to a referendum. She wanted to give the people in Massachusetts the opportunity to vote directly on this issue. Mary Jeanette feels strongly about giving her constituents their voice in their government. Only a ballot could have clarified the question.

In 1995 and again in 1997 MJM voted against additional funding for UMass because she felt school administrators were not controlling their budgets. The vote was 105 to 47 AGAINST. This was the same time Billy Bulger was anointed as chancellor at UMass...and attempted to build a plush UMass skyscraper office in Boston so he could be closer to all his old State House cronies. All the newspapers screamed.

We publishers do owe our readers our opinions every now and then. Seldom do we change anyone's mind, they respect us so little. But we do watch politics, and we are historical participants in the sense that we write about stuff, think about it, and have an historical perspective...

AROUND TOWN

THANK YOU, ANNA!

Anna Abbruzzese deserves every accolade possible for a job well done—what and ending to the Farmer's Market season! There was everything imaginable on the Common last Thursday, with every age group being fulfilled to the brim with happiness. The music was grand (Deer Hill Band was on hand), the games for the kiddos were oh-so-much fun, booths, raffles...the list goes on. Once again Anna outdid herself, and she should be proud. She always gives 110 percent, and we are the ones that benefit from all her hard work. Be sure that you tell her how appreciated she is when you see her "around town"!

AN INSPIRATION

While we are speaking about residents that do nice things for our town, how about Mickey Patrolia and his wife? They are spotted all over the downtown area, picking up litter and debris that has been scattered into brush and by the side of the road—the whole town parking lot and all the surrounding area is always spotless, and now you know who to thank. An inspiration to all, that's for sure!

LOOKING GRAND

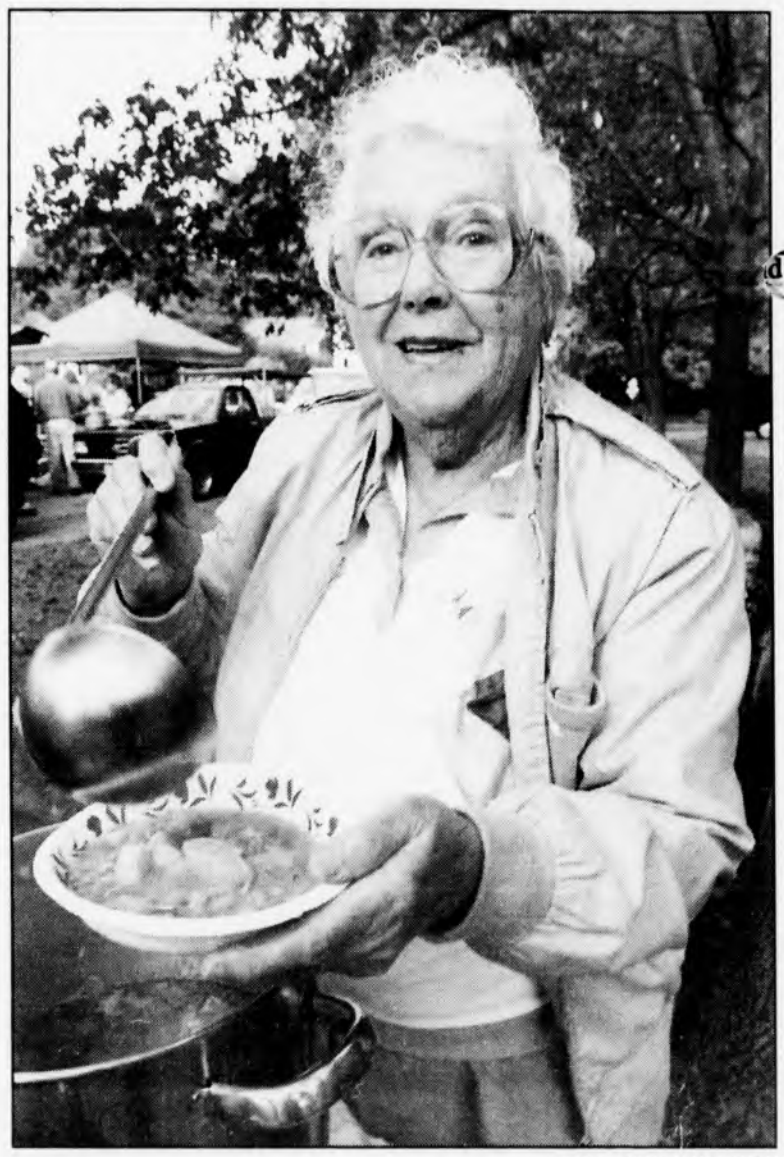
The Cohasset Teachers Association held a reception for Dennis Walsh last week, thanking him for three years as their President. All is well with Dennis, who looks positively super, and he will be back at his teaching helm real soon. And, his hockey program is underway, so that should make everyone feel great!

SONNY'S IN TOWN

Sonny Lance is in town for a couple of weeks, and he is glad to be here! Sonny was a member of the CHS Class of 1959 who now lives in Tennessee; formally of North Main Street fame, where he was known as a "Northender" when they were growing up. If You haven't seen him yet, be sure to be on the "lookout", he would love to say hello to you and you can give him a welcome back hug!

ON THE MEND

We are happy to report that Carl Sestito Sr. is home resting comfortably, after recent surgery. He celebrated his 90th birthday while he was a patient at South Shore Hospital, no one there could believe it! In fact, he is so young and spry, he came home way ahead of schedule. But then anyone who knows him isn't one bit surprised by that! The next thing on his agenda is his annual flight to Florida, where he will recuperate—in the spring he will return to continue his good deeds...rather like the swallows and Capistrano! And, you can bet that all await his return! He is LOVED!



BIRTHDAY WISHES

Happy Birthday greetings go to Ken Fone, we hope his day was a magical one, full of fun and laughter! Here's to many more, Ken!

10 YEARS!

Speaking of reunions, the Cohasset High School Class of 1988 is planning theirs. Ten years, does that seem at all possible? It is to be held on December 26, 1988, at 6:00 p.m. at the Cohasset Lightkeepers House. For information please call Holly Pompeo (617) 630-5790 or Erica Ford (781) 925-5894.

MMM, MMM GOOD!

SIMMONS

GRADUATE SCHOOL FOR HEALTH STUDIES

Why has the least qualified candidate for sheriff initiated the negative attack ads?

Where is Michael Bellotti? Why has he begun using smear tactics in his attempt to become Sheriff. And why won't he debate?

Apparently he doesn't get it.

Norfolk County voters want facts, not false impressions. The truth, not half-truths.

By throwing mud, Michael Bellotti may hope to distract voters from seeing his own inadequacies. But he's fooling nobody.

There's one glaring fact he can't hide.

He doesn't have the qualifications.

✘ He has no experience in corrections, law enforcement or criminal justice.

✘ His key business experience consists of a failed attempt at self-employment.

✘ He lacks education relevant to the job, with just a bachelor's degree in English.

✘ He did little to distinguish himself during three terms in the legislature and held no leadership positions.

Michael Bellotti has made outrageous statements with little regard for the facts. When challenged he runs away.

He ignored early debate requests, then never showed up at the one he did agree to. What is he hiding from, the truth?

Norfolk County deserves better.

Sheriff Jack Flood respects voters and believes strongly in their right to an open, honest discussion of issues–based on facts.

He has brought his integrity, his ideas and his professionalism to the job. Under his leadership the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office is rated in the top one percent of corrections departments nationally.

Those are facts. And voters deserve them.

Osgood reuse options

You don't have to be a town meeting groupie to find the venerable form of democracy interesting. Cohasset government still includes open town meetings during which any citizen can speak out on an issue.

Monday's special town meeting gets underway at 7 p.m. at the middle/high school auditorium and judging from the town warrant, promises lively debate on several matters.

But one of the most critical issues before Monday's session is the disposition of the old Joseph Osgood School. A few years back, town meeting charged the Osgood Reuse Committee with finding a way to put the school on to the tax rolls to offset the cost of the new $10 million elementary school which opened its doors last month.

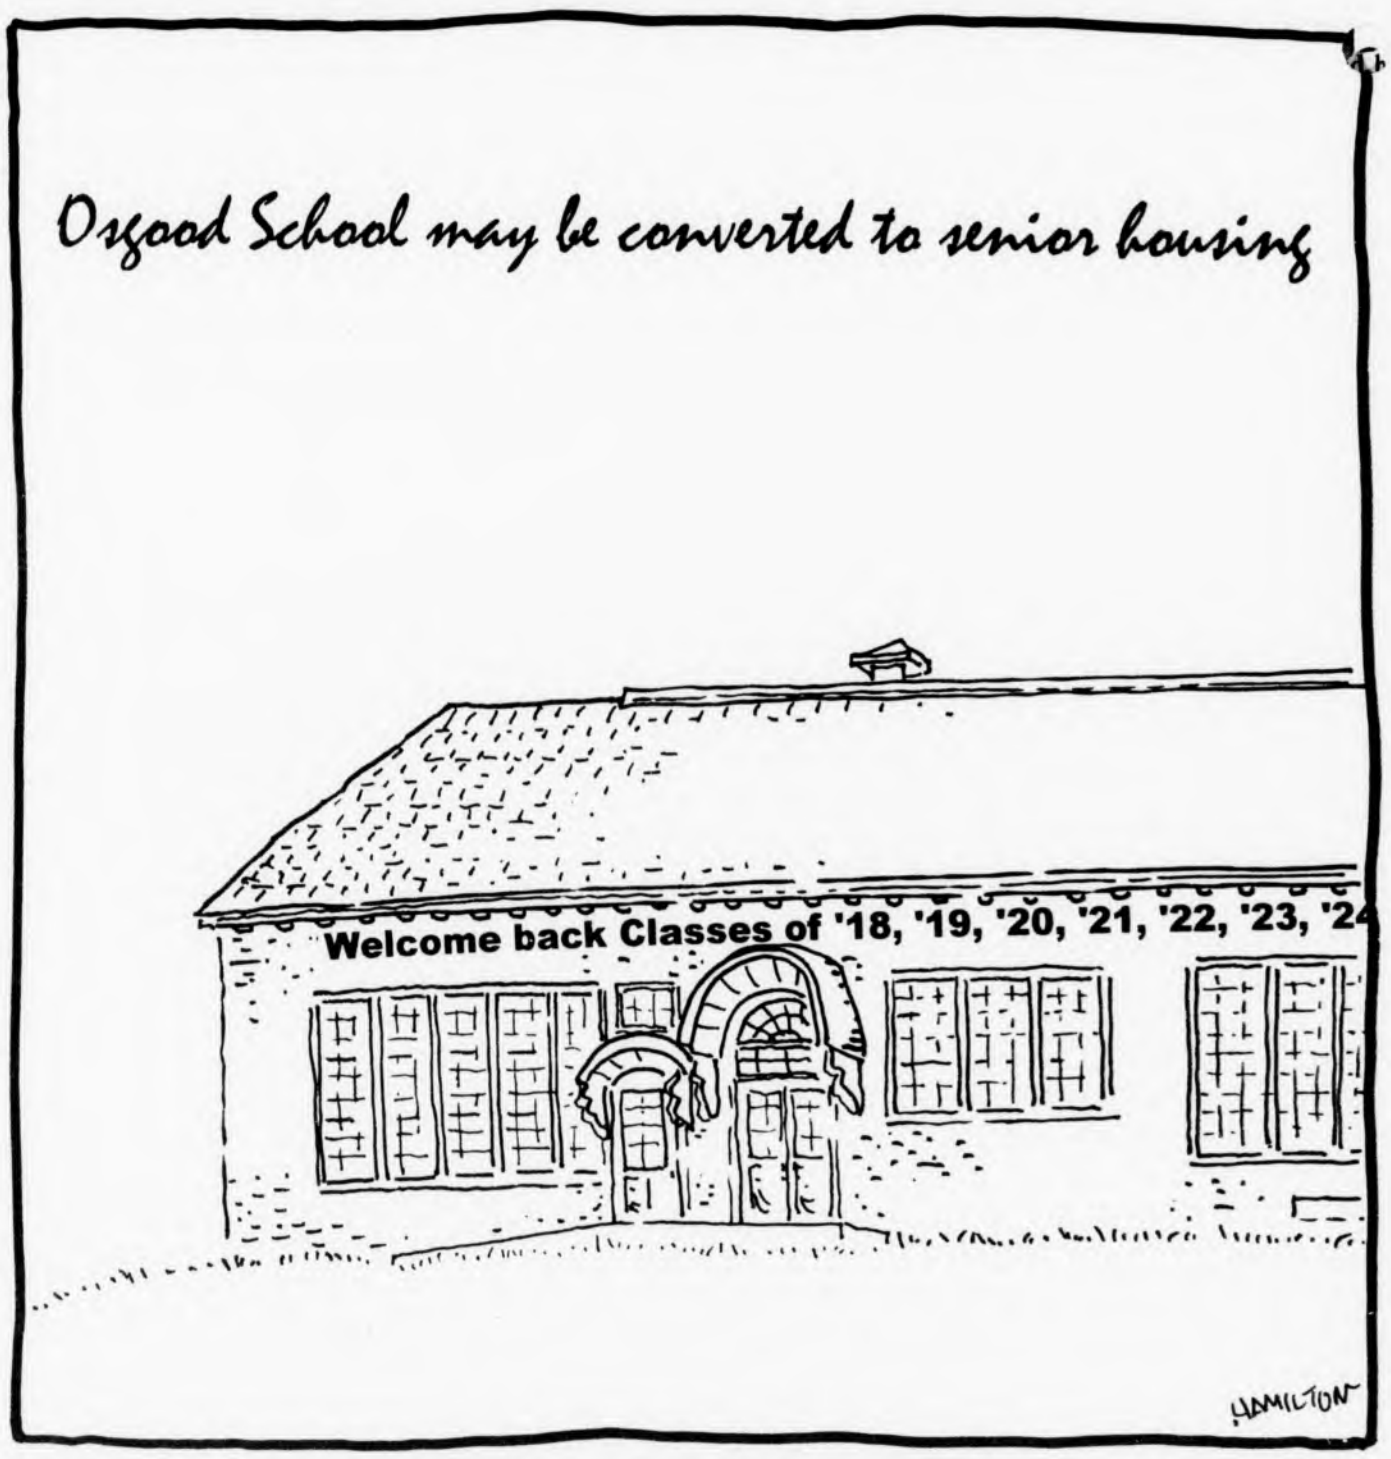
The committee did its job and will recommend the building be sold to a private developer who plans to turn the structure into about 29 condominiums for senior citizens.

Selectman Diane Sullivan thinks the building should be sold to a non-profit company which would construct more affordable units in the building.

And the library trustees are also lobbying for the building and recommend it be refurbished into a new, expanded town library. They suggest selling the Paul Pratt building instead of Osgood.

The town of Hingham debated selling its vacant Central Junior High School to a private developer about seven years ago to turn it into an assisted-living complex. Needless to say, that didn't happen and last Saturday, town officials cut the ribbon to open a magnificent new Hingham Town Hall in the renovated school building— a project that survived several town meetings, price overruns, and other hurdles before coming to fruition.

No doubt voters on Monday night will hear presentations from all sides of the Osgood reuse issue.



We urge you to attend with an open mind. Once the Osgood building is sold, it is gone forever.

We think the library trustees' proposal deserves careful consideration. The trustees argue that everyone in town benefits from the library. They also point out the Paul Pratt building faces expensive handicap-accessibility upgrades if the library stays there.

If you feel strongly about the need for housing for senior citizens, please go to town meeting and let your voice be heard.

Over the years, we've found town meeting provides the best forum to become enlightened on the issues and to cast an informed vote.

Official response to Hingham

Ms. Katharine Reardon, Chairman
Hingham Board of Selectmen

The Cohasset Board of Selectmen is in receipt of a letter dated Sept. 26 from Alexander Macmillan, who represents himself as the Hingham Greenbush Coordinator. In his letter Mr. Macmillan questions the position of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen relative to seeking alternatives to the proposed Greenbush Line and seeks a clarification of the Board's position. Please consider this letter as an official response from the Town of Cohasset.

To begin with, the Cohasset Board of Selectmen finds this letter from Mr. Macmillan offensive and totally inappropriate. The Town of Cohasset joined together with the Towns of Hingham and Scituate in an effort to mitigate issues of mutual concern between the three Towns. Specifically, the Town of Cohasset was interested in mitigating the issues of air pollution, noise and vibration. It is clear that Mr. Macmillan is attempting to take a leadership role in this issue with the intention to undercut the Greenbush project. Please understand that Mr. Macmillan does not speak for the Cohasset Board of Selectmen. The Board of Selectmen made a commitment to the community to do the best possible job with mitigation and will continue that effort.

The Town of Cohasset is willing to continue to work with the Towns of Hingham and Scituate on mitigation matters in a cooperative effort. The Town looks forward to continuing our efforts in solving the many mitigation matters. Please feel free to contact the Board of Selectmen to discuss this matter in more detail.

Mark W. Haddad
Town Manager

Editor's note: this letter was in selectmen's correspondence.

State funding for library construction

TO DIANE SULLIVAN, SELECTMAN :

Your are quoted in the "Cohasset Mariner" issued Oct. 15, as saying "There is no state funding, which means there is no 40 percent return as it was canceled and it is not on the drawing board to be reinstated." This is a possible $940,000 short changing of the taxpayers of Cohasset—almost a million dollars that will go to another town's library.

The Board of Library Commissioners (MBLC) expects the Library Construction Program to continue well into the next century. Instead of not being on the drawing board to be reinstated the fact is that the MBLC will introduce, in January, legislation requesting $160 million for the Library Construction Program. The planned wording is the same as Senate Bill 2103 submitted last year. It will be introduced in the Senate and then referred to the Committee on Appropriations for study. Last year the bill was reported out favorably and was promptly passed in the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives. The Board anticipates a repeat of previous grant schedules which would be as follows:

October of 1999 Program notices to all libraries

January of 2000 Deadline for completed applications

April of 2000 Review panels will evaluate applications

May of 2000 Funding recommendations to MBLC

July of 2000 State funds available for reimbursement

The MBLC expects to be funding this round of grants over the next eight years. They are enthusiastic about Cohasset's possible application and they are unequivocal in stating the sooner we apply the sooner we will be funded.

As we all know, the town faces many millions of dollars in handicapped accessibility and maintenance costs and the status of Cohasset's library services will be effected for the next 40 years by our ability to obtain this library construction grant to reduce this burden. It is the joint responsibility of the Selectmen and the Trustees to bring these funds to Cohasset not to presume they are unlikely. To that end the Library Trustees will continue to provide courteous, accurate information about the state of the library and how to fit its needs into the town's overall financial plan.

Chair, Board of Library Trustees

More village benches needed

TO THE EDITOR:

I have a slight problem with the town of Cohasset and I would like to present it to you for your observation and possible help.

I feel this problem is of equal importance to all disabled people regardless of age.

I am a senior citizen living at Harborview, the Senior Housing complex. I like to walk to the center of town but I have difficulty doing this as there are no places to sit down. There is one bench just past the corner of our complex and not another bench until you are almost to the Senior Center and that bench has three legs which I don't trust.

We need places to rest when we are trying to enjoy our town. Disabled people of all ages are faced with the same problem. No place to stop and rest.

Towns like Scituate have put benches all along Front Street and they not only look pretty but everyone is enjoying them. Lexington and I believe Newburyport have added imitations of the old fashioned gas lamps and they really look so nice. Sort of old fashioned and quaint looking.

Can't we do something like this in Cohasset? Am I asking too much?

We would still like to enjoy our town as much as we can. Surely someone can help us out and I can't believe some of our young artists wouldn't be willing to paint them. Please help us out, we are still concerned caring citizens and would like to continue to enjoy our town

Thank you for listening to me and please don't turn a deaf ear to our plea. We still care about Cohasset and would like to be able to enjoy it as much as we can.

Osgood School re-use

TO THE EDITOR:

As one of the 23% of people over 60 years, in the Town of Cohasset, I would like to state my objections at the campaign to voters regarding the re-use to eliminate Senior Housing and to use the Osgood School totally for the Library.

The sale of Paul Pratt (part of Library plan) a major historical and beautiful building was against the advice of their study committee. Can't you picture, Condos and Office space, with the traffic and sewerage which it would generate. The Town of Cohasset has already lost some of its most historic and beautiful buildings.

Secondly, the last minute presentation of plans by the Library is a reminder of the tactics of the Music Circus vote for the new school. The Selectmen of the Town of Cohasset should follow a rigid schedule for the capital projects that their appointed committee has put forth.

The original plan for re-use was for senior congregate and affordable housing. The bid for proposals was changed to include the Library.

The Town of Cohasset voted to put the building back on the tax rolls as quickly as possible. The bids presented at only a selectmen's meeting were in number two. One bid by South Shore Housing was not considered, and in my opinion was the only bid for affordable housing.

With the transportation improvements in the region, this could also generate a population boom and potentially increase the demand for affordable housing units. Also, many people of Cohasset, owners of large homes, as taxes increase and maintenance becomes a factor, would like to down-size and stay in the home town.

In summation, the Town of Cohasset and voters, need to be pro-active on the matter of housing and not reactive.

Townspeople also know that Town Meeting votes can be swayed by a well prepared presentation, but also realize in decisions regarding needed monies, the final decision is made on a ballot question.

All citizens benefit from library

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset will decide this week the disposition of the Joseph Osgood School facility. It will be either for housing development or for the much needed facilities expansion of the Paul Pratt Library. Apart from the limited net value of additional tax revenue and the interest of a developer, the Osgood facility is a one time opportunity to expand our library in a now-in-place building perfectly suited for library needs. On the other hand, the present housing for the elderly has only little relative pressure from Cohasset citizens.

Only 65 % of the present occupants at 60 Elm Street were Cohasset citizens. Further, the vaunted five year wait by 40 applicants for housing has only four from Cohasset.

The value of additional elderly and low cost housing is clearly not focused to help our present citizens.

The demand rather is outside our town. The Paul Pratt Public Library is desperately in need of expansion which will otherwise be a great expense in the near future. By selecting the Osgood School building now for library expansion, the town will be an immense beneficiary. All its citizens will enjoy its benefits including the elderly.

Osgood library use supported

TO THE EDITOR,

On Oct. 26 the voters of Cohasset will have a unique opportunity to enhance the educational welfare of all our citizens. The library needs more space, a problem most of us did not appreciate a year ago. That space is now available at the old Joseph Osgood School at a probable ultimate cost of $710,000, a much wiser investment than the one time bonanza of $800,000 from a developer who will leave us with no ready space for our library and the need still with us.

After the move to the new facility the sale of the Paul Pratt building should recoup most of the lost $800,000, so I can see no sensible reason to delay providing for the intellectual well being of all our citizens.

I urge you all to vote yes on article 8 in favor of a new library. The educational enhancement of all our citizens, and the sharing of knowledge in our public library should remain our primary goals.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Bradley campaign builds momentum

Former assistant district attorney and Democratic nominee for state representative Garrett Bradley continued to build momentum in his bid to unseat incumbent Mary Jeannette Murray this week with the announcement of endorsements from Treasurer candidate Shannon O'Brien and former Congressional candidate Phil Johnson. These endorsements come on the heels of similar shows of support last week from Congressman William Delahunt, Lt. Governor candidate Warren Tolman and Bradley's former opponent in the Democratic Primary, Josh Cutler.

Bradley has also been endorsed by a large number of local elected officials, Democratic Party activists, community leaders, and district residents. He has also earned the support of the AFL-CIO, a number of local unions, MassNARAL, and Commonwealth Coalition, which is a group composed of labor, environmental, social service and educational organizations.

Murray champions elder and veteran issues

Some of Mary Jeanette Murray's most heartfelt moments as a state Representative come when she can give voice to the needs of senior citizens and veterans.

"It's easy in our youth culture to neglect, even ignore, the needs and special circumstances of our senior citizens," says Murray, who has served on the Elder Affairs Committee, "and it's equally easy in peacetime to forget about our veterans, forget about the sacrifices these men and women have made in the pursuit of freedom. I bring a valuable perspective to the discussion of elder and veteran issues and a commitment to make their lives a little more comfortable."

She has made improving elder housing a priority, has worked tirelessly to expand the availability of home health care and cosponsored legislation to establish assisted living residences.

"We worked hard to secure votes for the housing package which provides money for public housing repairs," says Mary Jeanette. "Many public housing units are senior units in desperate need of repair. It's shameful that these units have been allowed to deteriorate to a point where they pose a danger to elderly residents."

Veterans, too, have a champion in Murray, a Marine, V.F.W. auxiliary member, American Legion member, past-president of the American Legion auxiliary and recipient of the Disabled American Veterans' "Certificate of Merit." She was appointed by Gov. Weld to the Massachusetts Women in Military Service Foundation for which she served as chairman of fundraising for the Women in Military Service Memorial at Arlington National Cemetery.

Until recently, Massachusetts was one of only two states in the country which taxed military pensions. Murray worked to remedy that wrong and to exempt veterans' pensions from state income tax, a change in the tax law that, she says, was "long, long overdue."

Her effort to honor veterans with plaques in the State House has been a particularly gratifying personal project.

Rep. Murray welcomes your thoughts and questions. She can be contacted at (781) 383-1000 or at her State House Office at (617) 722-2400.

Chat live with Garrett Bradley

Voters in Hingham and Cohasset will have an opportunity to question state representative candidate Garrett Bradley as part of the Hingham Journal and Cohasset Mariner live online chat session.

Bradley, a resident of Hingham, will field questions and concerns from voters as he goes on line live Thursday, Oct. 22, from 7 to 8 p.m.

Readers can log on to the papers' web site at www.townonline.com. Once there, readers will find a banner ad and they simply click on the banner to chat live with Bradley, a Democrat who is challenging longtime Republican incumbent Mary Jeanette Murray in the Nov. 3 election.

Murray, a Cohasset resident, declined the papers' invitation to chat on line with voters. She said she could not work out her schedule.

Candidates on cable

"On the Mark" with Ilana Marks' is offering any candidate running for office in the November elections, the opportunity to join our Open House live broadcast on Wednesday, Oct. 28 at 8 p.m. This will give them a last opportunity to get their message out to the voters. "On the Mark" is broadcast in Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Hanover, Norwell and Marshfield.

Now it's a billion that makes you rich!

"A man who has a million dollars," John Jacob Astor once said, "is as well off as if he were rich."

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

John Jacob, who got his start in the fur industry at the turn of the 19th century and moved on to downtown New York real estate, was entitled to say that because he may have been America's first billionaire. That's billionaire, with a "B."

There are 189 of them in the States now — billionaires, that is — according to a survey by Forbes magazine.

There would have been 29 more, the magazine figured, had not the stock market taken a turn for the worse during the summer. It's an iffy business, this being a billionaire, if 13 per cent of them can be wiped out when the market hiccups.

Geez, it wasn't too long ago that we were oohing and aahing over the $121 million Shaq O'Neal was to get over seven years just for playing a child's game for the Los Angeles Lakers.

The richest man in America is Bill Gates, the chairman of Microsoft, who managed to keep $58.4 billion of his fortune, even after his net worth took a reported $9 billion beating in the market between July 17 and Aug. 31.

Gates is so far ahead of the No. 2 billionaire, investor Warren Buffett with $29.4 billion, that Bill probably picks up the check when they meet for a beer at the corner pub after a tough day of defending their billions on Wall Street.

Sam Walton, the founder of the Wal-Mart stores, who divvied his billions up with family members, would have come close to topping Gates had he not died in 1992. His five heirs, Alice, Helen, Jim, John and S. Robson, ranked sixth through 10th on the billionaires' list. Their total: $55 billion.

But Gates and Buffett and the rest of the 187 billionaires are penny ante compared to the old timers, known as "the robber barons," who were unencumbered by such foolishness as anti-trust laws. They don't make 'em like they used to.

American Heritage, a magazine published by Forbes, took a look at the old scalawags' bank accounts and figured that Bill Gates would be fifth on the all-time list behind John D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie, Cornelius Vanderbilt, and John Jacob Astor.

Rockefeller, the oil man and grandsire of a vice president of the United States, accumulated a fortune estimated at a billion bucks when he started giving it away, but American Heritage figures that, at today's prices, old John's nest egg amounted to $190 billion.

(The gross national product of the U. S., in 1929 was only $103 billion.)

At the height of his wealth in the 1890s, John D. Sr. had nothing better to do, so he founded the University of Chicago and endowed it with $35 million — parking meter money to the Rockefellers. In the 1930s, he was giving away dimes to the depression poor.

Astor, a German immigrant who cornered the western fur trade almost two centuries ago, was said to have been worth more than $20 million when he died in 1948. Carnegie, the Scottish immigrant who founded U. S. Steel, had enough in his kitty to give away $350 million.

Vanderbilt, who borrowed $100 from his mother at age 16, bought a boat, and started the ferry service from Staten Island to Manhattan, amassed enough money from steam boats and railroads that one of his heirs was able to import a whole Broadway play, "The Wild Rose," complete with cast and scenery, to entertain his guests at a Newport tennis week.

Hingham's Greenbush letter irks selectmen

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen recently reiterated their commitment to working with their counterparts in Scituate and Hingham on mitigating vibration, noise and pollution, which are issues of mutual concern about the train among the three towns. But they are upset that Hingham's Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan apparently overstepped his bounds in a Sept. 25 letter to the Army Corps of Engineers, the lead federal agency in the project.

Macmillan encloses with the ACOE letter a memorandum written by a Tech Environmental, a consultant paid by Cohasset, which responds to Sverdrup's (the MBTA's consultant) rebuttal of Tech's report on Greenbush.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who sits on the Cohasset mitigation committee, was particularly incensed by the matter, which was discussed two weeks ago.

"We want to run our own issues in our own town."

— Selectman Diane Sullivan

"I don't think he should be acting on behalf of Cohasset," she said about Macmillan. "We want to run our own issues in our own town."

The Greenbush Line, the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad restoration project, is stalled as the MBTA works through mitigation issues in the affected towns. Hingham is also embroiled in a lawsuit claiming the MBTA is trying to skirt federal environmental laws by paying for Greenbush with only state dollars. The Plymouth and Middleboro Lines were constructed primarily with federal money. Hingham selectmen are committed to opposing the train and Scituate walked away from negotiations with the MBTA because it could not reach an accord over layover site. But Cohasset has not taken an official stance against the train.

Three weeks ago, Sullivan and Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris refused to sign a letter from the three towns to the state secretary of environmental affairs asking for another environmental feasibility study because it contained language about seeking transportation alternatives.

McMorris said undercutting the project is not what Cohasset should be doing.

"We are committed to do everything we can to mitigate the effects of Greenbush when and if it is restored," she said.

McMorris said Cohasset selectmen would express their displeasure over Macmillan's letter to Hingham selectmen (see letter page 10).

Sullivan said the implication of Macmillan's letter is "that he is in charge of the effort and that is not the fact at all."

Safety improvements eyed for intersection

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The state police don't need much convincing that the corner of Beechwood and Route 3A is a recipe for disaster.

According to a report by Trooper Robert P. Pitts following four days of radar enforcement last month at the intersection, police issued a total of 81 citations and 38 seat-belt violations.

Cohasset police have said the intersection is one of the most dangerous in town since it was widened to four lanes on Route 3A after the construction of Shaw's Plaza.

In Oct. 1997, Police Chief Brian Noonan wrote to the state highway department asking for several changes to make the area safer. The state agreed to post signs indicating traffic light ahead and to reposition signs warning of a lane drop but did not agree to dedicated turning lanes.

Police hope to convince the state otherwise at the traffic committee meeting at 7:30 p.m. tonight at town hall. State highway engineers and state police have been invited, Safety Officer Richard Yocum said.

Yocum said vehicles are traveling at an average speed of 53-58 mph through the intersection. The speed limit is 35 mph.

Interested citizens are encouraged to attend the meeting.

In another traffic matter, police said they have issued a total of 38 warnings on King Street in just two days following the installation of the new four-way stop King and Pond streets Oct. 15.

Many cars aren't stopping and police will start issuing citations, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

New town history fund created

The town has established the new Town Historical Commission Book Fund to collect tax-deductible contributions toward the creation of a third volume of Cohasset's history. The creation of the fund was formality that will allow everyone who donates money for the book to deduct the amount from their taxes.

Selectmen wrestle with $2.7 million sewer article

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's sewer problems stole the show at yet another public meeting on Tuesday night when the selectmen rejected the possibility of changing the motion for a town meeting article. The sewer commissioners met with the selectmen to request their support for three town meeting articles, including a major change in one motion. Sewer Commissioners Ted Guild and Henry Rattenbury asked the selectmen to support a change in the motion for Article 11, which asks the town to approve $2.7 million to cover cost over-runs in the North Cohasset sewer project. The original motion which appears in the town meeting warrant asks voters to approve the project through sewer betterments. The new motion would have asked voters to approve the project with 50 percent town funding through a Proposition 2-1/2 override.

The selectmen voted 3-1 to support the original language as it appears in the town meeting warrant. Selectman Tom Callahan cast the dissenting vote; selectman Merle Brown did not attend the meeting. Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said changing the language in the motion would jeopardize the entire project.

"I think you're jeopardizing a public project by putting in the 50-50 funding language," McMorris said. "There's an element here of changing what the article is about."

Guild said he believed there would be enough support at town for 50-50 funding. He also said that 50-50 funding would be the most equitable solution to dealing with the extra cost.

"Town meeting can either vote it up or down," Guild said.

The new language would have asked voters only to support the project with 50-50 funding. Guild said changing the motion would expedite the discussion and give voters a chance to address the question of 50-50 funding. If town meeting rejected the new motion, then Guild planned to have someone in place to call for reconsideration of the article as it appears in the warrant. Reconsidering an article requires a majority vote of those present at town meeting.

But Town Manager Mark Haddad was nervous that voters would reject the new motion, reject reconsideration of the original motion, and leave the town without a solution to the North Cohasset cost over-run.

Selectman Callahan also disliked the idea of preparing someone to call for reconsideration in advance of town meeting.

"I can't believe you're sitting here talking about how to rig the vote at town meeting," Callahan said. "I'm going to speak at town meeting to defeat this. It's the same article town meeting defeated last year."

Rattenbury said placing the 50-50 language in the motion would be less confusing than reading an amendment on the floor of town meeting.

"As soon as someone starts reading an amendment, people cringe," he said. It's confusing."

Lisa Bumstead of the citizen's group CEES (Citizens for equitable Environmental Solutions) offered that changing the motion and handing it out at the door of town meeting would confuse many people.

"I think it's important to recognize how people shape their votes based on the information in their warrant," she said. "People really need to be able to look at what's in the warrant. I think it's really important to keep the motion unchanged in the warrant and then change it and modify it on the floor of town meeting."

In addition to discussing the language in the motion, the selectmen grilled the sewer commissioners on other items such as the benefits of public loans versus private loans, the accuracy of engineers' cost predictions, and whether the town should even consider paying for 50 percent of the sewer project. At one point, the sewer commissioners left the meeting with about a half-dozen residents in tow to hold a mini-meeting in the hallway.

The two sewer commissioners returned still supporting their position, however Guild agreed to stick with the original motion as a way of showing unity among town officials.

"If we go with the new motion, I fear that it is possible we could jeopardize the project," Guild said. "It will take no time at all to amend the motion to 50-50 on the floor of town meeting."

Salute to Jean and Dan Cotton Postponed

The Oct. 25 reception planned to salute Dan and Jean Cotton for their tireless dedication and involvement in the town of Cohasset has been postponed.

The committee had planned to surprise Dan and Jean with a monetary gift in their name for the Social Service League's Annual Scholarship Fund and plant a tree marked with a plaque. Both will be small tokens of our appreciation for Dan and Jean's good deeds, civic accomplishments and kindness to a multitude of Cohasset citizens. We also hope you will send notes wishing them well directly to their home at 27 King St., Cohasset, 02025.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Murray champions quality of life issues

"One of my priorities as a legislator," says Mary Jeanette Murray," is to attend to the quality of life issues that define a community's character, that make a community an attractive and healthful place. What we call progress is not always, in the long run, progress. We have to think through every change we make and ask ourselves how it will ultimately impact our quality of life."

For Murray, a quality of life issue can be making works of art available for display in public buildings or sponsoring her "Scent Bill," now law, which encapsulates perfume samples in magazines mailed to homes.

"At first, people snickered at that bill," remembers Murray, "until they began to understand how many thousands of people with respiratory illness were suffering every time the mail was delivered. For me, that bill was a quality of life issue."

Another quality of life issue was casino gambling — and its deleterious effects — which Murray opposed when it was proposed for Hull. She also worked closely with local officials to preserve and restore open space, the Sapponaro property at Turkey Hill, the South Shore Country Club and the Nantasket Beach Reservation, and to clean up our roadsides with her strong support of the Bottle Bill.

Murray welcomes your thoughts and questions. She can be reached at (781) 383-1000 or at her Statehouse office at (617) 722-2400.

Bradley responds to Murray on gun bill

Recently in the candidate's corner section of the Hingham Journal and Cohasset Mariner, Murray responded to former assistant district attorney and current state representative candidate Garrett Bradley's request that she explain her position against the assault weapons ban that was signed into law this summer. Rep. Murray indicated that she voted for an earlier draft, but changed her vote when it came time to vote on the version that was actually signed into law. As reasons therefore, she indicated that many changes took place and she was uncomfortable with the bill. Specifically, she has stated in these papers, and on a WATD radio debate, that one reason she voted against the bill was that there was no exception for veterans who carry firearms while marching in parades. She was asked if she brought this up when the bill was debated. Her response was that she did not know about it at that time. This begs the question, then how can you claim this as a reason for voting against the bill? It is also important to note that she was the only legislator to switch her vote.

It is true that the bill failed to leave an exception for those veterans who carry firearms in parades. However, it was amended, and that amendment will take effect the same day the law goes into effect on Oct. 21, 1998. Rep Murray called Bradley naive for not recognizing the true intent of the bill. Those type of statements detract from a strong issued based campaign and are simply unfortunate. It is also unfortunate when those statements are supported with inaccurate facts.

Murray's voting record is clear on assault weapons. She has consistently voted against banning them:

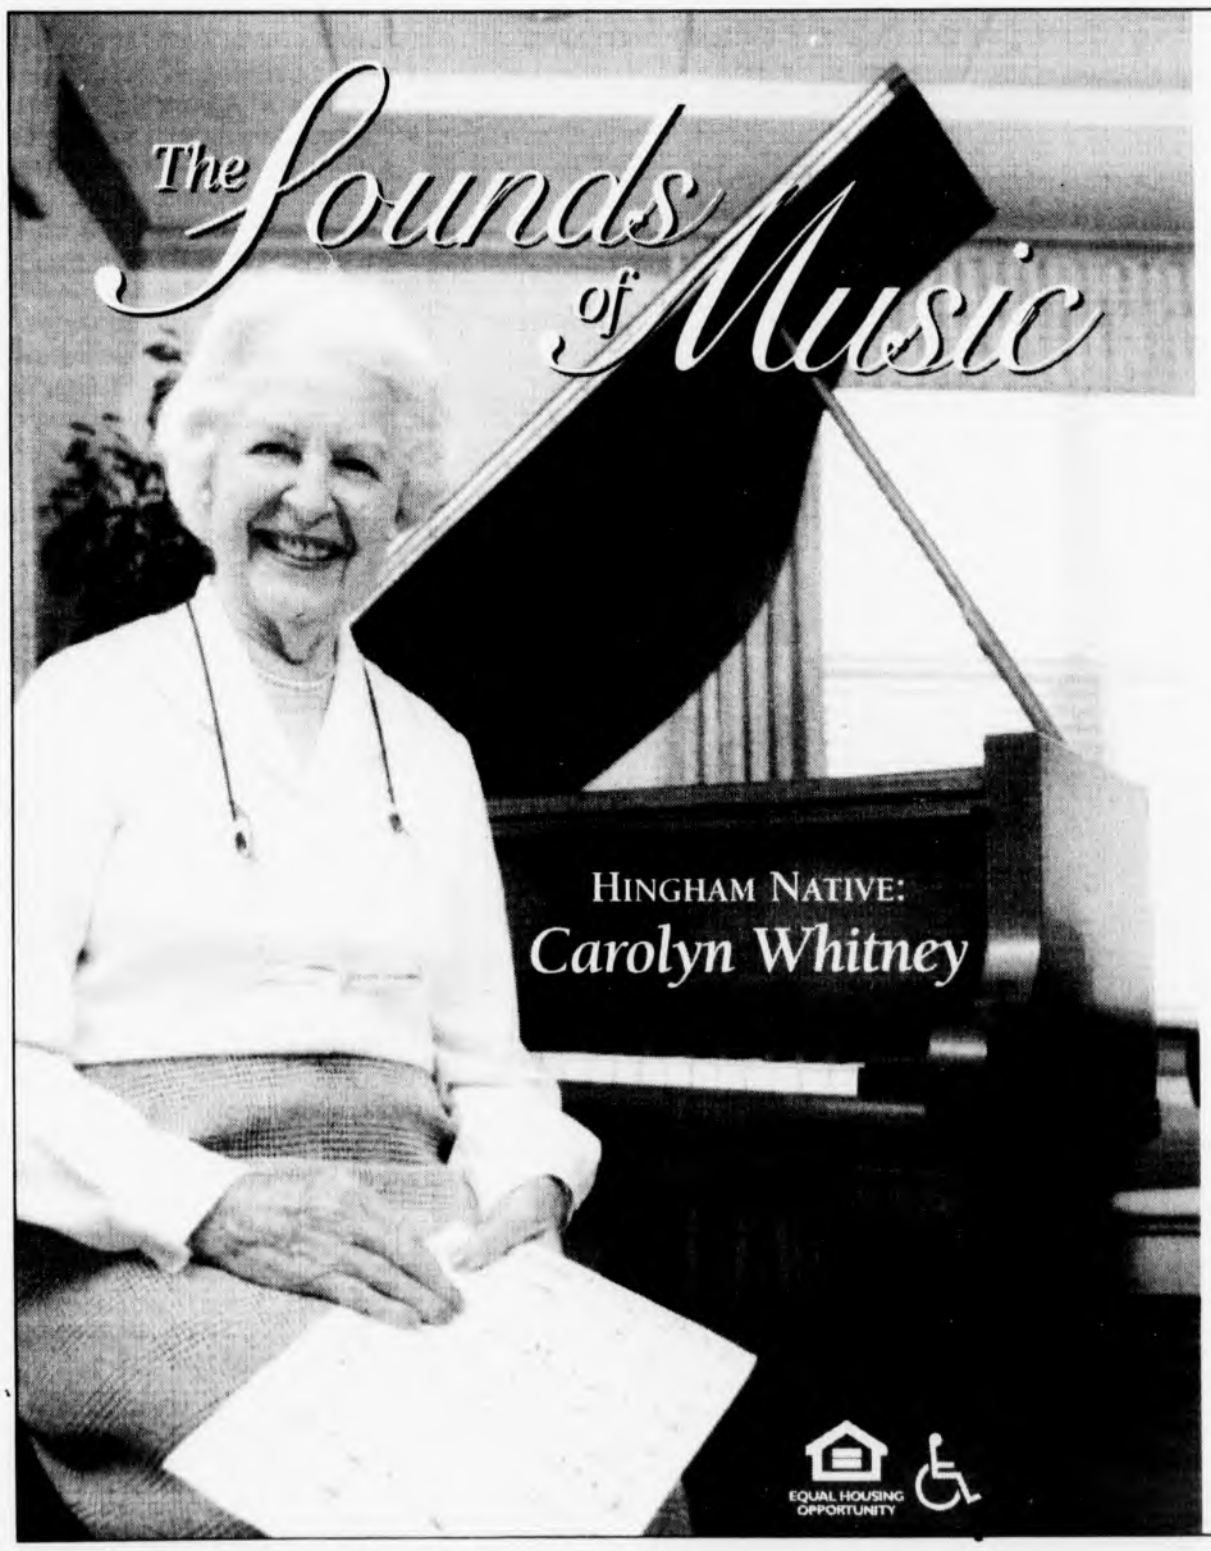
Lack of leadership on education

Democratic Nominee for State Representative Garret Bradley cited Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray's lack of leadership on education issues as a significant problem for the communities of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. Bradley pointed to a number of key Murray votes against education improvements, including a vote against the landmark Education Reform Act.

Bradley cited Murray's 1993 vote against the Education Reform Act as the most significant of her anti-education votes. Against the wishes of Rep. Murray, the bill passed and brought significant improvements and additional funds for our public schools. Since passage of the Reform Act, Hingham has seen a 69 percent increase in state aid per pupil, Hull has seen a 97 percent increase and Cohasset has benefited from a 61 percent increase.

Bradley also pointed to Rep. Murray's votes against providing communities with an additional $380 per low income high school student (1993), for diverting taxpayer funds from public schools to support private schools (1994), and $60 million for education technology projects (1996) as further proof that our district needs a representative who will work hard to improve the public school system in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. Murray even voted against additional funding in 1995 and 1997 for the University of Massachusetts.

For more information on the Bradley campaign call (781) 741-9998.



Murray says education a top priority

Long a voice on Beacon Hill for quality education, State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray says that quality education begins with the resolve to make education a priority.

"As a society, we have to stand up and say that education matters," she said "We have to really mean it, have to defend a policy of zero tolerance towards drugs, weapons and intimidation in the schools, and have the political will to follow through. It means acknowledging the unique and crucial role that teachers play in preparing our children for productive, responsible citizenship.

Murray has been vocal in her support of increased local aid to cities and towns to fund state mandated programs. She sponsored a bill — that became law — requiring criminal background checks for school employees and has called for swift and severe penalties for anyone carrying weapons at school. She has defended school choice, called for an expanded after-school program, and has been a vocal proponent of parental involvement in education.

Learning the ropes

High school course provides alternative to classroom

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

It was seven years ago that the director of Cohasset's alternative school, Jack Buckley, thought it would be great to teach his students the ropes. Literally.

"I came up with the idea for Cohasset," explained Buckley. "But it's a long-established teaching tool with Outward Bound, a program in which people are put into physically challenging activities in the outdoors that require them to work together as a group to complete the experience."

The Outward Bound-derived rope course seemed perfect to Buckley, who was at that time searching for a team-building activity for his students.

A visit to Project Adventure, a Wrentham-Hamilton area company that builds and promotes ropes course activities, wowed Buckley and his students.

"I had taken the students there for a physical education type of activity and left thinking it would be a nice thing to have one on our own campus. I just started trying to make that happen and, luckily, people were receptive to it right from the beginning and I had no trouble getting it started."

Overall, Buckley found the administration to have always been supportive of that program and the alternative school, overall, despite the recent decision to discontinue it.

"The alternative school ended last winter, primarily because under the new Education Reform Act, all youngsters have to pass MCAS state-standardized tests to prove academic proficiency," explained high school principal Curtis Collins. "The program was so small that we only had one teacher, essentially. There was no way we could organize that program in such a way that we could get teachers to teach some of the courses and have Jack to do all the rest. There were eight to 10 kids in the program and I needed to make sure they placed in the proper courses so they had a chance to pass those tests to qualify for graduation."

Though the alternative school is no longer, its curriculum is living on under different names in standard school curriculum, according to Buckley. For example, the ropes course, which began as part of the alternative school and was built by some of its students, is now "outdoor education", an elective class open to grades 9-12.

The ropes course is carried out in a wooded area behind the school.

It offers the alternative school approach, which provided a different school experience with a little more guidance for students not satisfied with the standard curriculum, explained Buckley, who directed the school for 10 years.

"I was responsible for English, science and social studies instruction and with good reason, it was feared that the level of instruction that the students needed to pass tests for graduation couldn't be delivered by one person," said Buckley. "We needed to either cut or expand the program to include two other teachers—that's where the funding problem comes in. We just didn't have the money to do that. But the school did a lot of good since it was founded by Al McDonald in 1972 and I've enjoyed directing it since I came in when he retired in 1987."

Meg Moore starts up the ropes course with the help of Laura McAuliffe and instructor Jack Buckley during a recent high school open house.

Buckley allows that the decision was "disappointing." Nonetheless, he sees the closing of the alternative school as an opportunity to provide electives to all students that were originally open to only alternative school students.

"Throwing a written test at students is traditional," he said. "But there's always the tug between doing traditional things like test- and note-taking to legitimize a course versus the desire to do things a little differently—whether you just try to assess students in terms of their contributions in class on a daily basis or whether you need to have a more formal assessment in written work or presentation."

Buckley believes that there isn't one approach that works better than another, saying that it's like comparing apples and oranges when they're so different but are both good for you.

"I think the downfall of schools is they are so busy being institutions that they can't figure out how to incorporate some of the other things that require thinking in different ways," he said. "For example, it's a lot easier to take 12 kids out to Boston Harbor for three hours to see the missiles from the Cold War to bring the lesson alive than it is to bring an entire grade. It's also a question of values and what kind of scholastic experiences are seen as important."

Collins seems to agree. "I think incorporating some of Jack's ideas into the school is working well.. We're pretty academic and it's nice for a kid to fit something like climbing or rowing in for a change of pace and also to give them a taste of something they ordinarily wouldn't have gotten involved in. I think we should be opening doors to these kids and sometimes the kids get narrowly focused on their studies. This opens up their world and gives them some variety with Jack's program."

One way Buckley does that is through a boat-building course that incorporates engineering, design and rowing lessons.

"I think it's a nice taste for these kids of what life is all about—that's Jack's kind of stuff," said Collins.

Buckley's ropes course is taught in the same way he taught his alternative school classes—with group participation in a group effort. Through the ropes course, the students are introduced to recreational activities such as biking, hiking and climbing done as part of a team, which makes up about 50 percent of the course.

Ropes course students are taught the fundamental safety rules of climbing that can then be applied to rock climbing and even mountaineering. Students are treated to a visit to Quincy Quarry where they get to apply their skills at climbing. One small group of Buckley's students recently went to climb Cathedral Ledge in North Conway, NH.

"They loved it," said Buckley, of his students response to their first rock-climbing venture. "A few of them just came back wanting to climb more, get the gear then need and find some more rocks."

Buckley enjoys watching his students become more skillful at what they take up. "They start knowing nothing and become competent, efficient and confident climbers. You hope that newfound confidence transfers into other areas of their lives where they might need confidence, like in other new situations."

Any group interested in trying its hand at the ropes course can call Jack Buckley at the high school, 383-6100.

Skippers fired up for Saturday's Homecoming

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Coming off a tough loss to the Abington Green Wave, the Cohasset High Skippers triumphed with ease over the Norton Lancers last Thursday, posting a 24-6 victory. Quarterback Jamie DeMichele gunned a 35-yard pass to freshman Nick Bolster for the first CHS score. Sophomore running back Daniel Trowers streaked through holes shoved open by Cohasset's vaunted offensive line for two touchdowns.

But as dominant as the home team offense was, the Skipper defense was positively unyielding. Allowing a paltry 37 yards in offense, the Boys in Blue conceded merely two first downs, one of those a 20-yard TD pass which gave Norton their only points.

Senior defensive end Luke Caldwell was particularly outstanding, as he chalked up 3 1/2 sacks. Linebackers Greg Parkinson and Adam Sasso both had big games, while Raheem Shepard and Greg Taylor anchored the secondary.

Norton barely kept Cohasset from scoring early in the game, when Cohasset threw a widely varied running game at them. Like the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, Coach Rolfe's boys hit their opponents with thunder and lightning. Trowers scampered around tacklers for big gains a la Warrick Dunn, while Justin Golden did his best Mike Alstott imitation with a crashing first down carry.

Stickers faced with a must win situation

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

There's nothing like having a little bit of a flair for the dramatic.

The CHS field hockey team waited until one of the final games last season to earn their spot in the post-season tourney.

Is anyone else experiencing a little bit of deja-vu?

It's down to two wins and in for the stickers, who have to win road games against Notre Dame (Thursday) and Hull (Monday at 6 p.m.) to get back to the dance.

"These two are games that I know we can win," said head coach Debbie Bostwick. "The Hanover game (a loss on Tuesday) was one thing, but both Notre Dame and Hull are teams that we can beat if we are on top of our game."

The Skippers came into the loss to Hanover on a high note after thrashing Norwell 4-1 and playing to a 0-0 standoff with the Carver Crusaders.

"Carver was just an awesome game," said Bostwick. "We went back and forth and both teams had the advantage for stretches of time. The thing that I liked about it was that it was a total team effort on out part

"We had a number of superb chances to put the ball in the net but it never happened."

Defense was the name of the game in this contest, she added. Bostwick said her players marked the Crusaders scorers superbly, not allowing them to get in the rhythm of the game.

"You could see their forwards get frustrated after a while, but we were out there having a great time with it," said Bostwick. "We were able to hold them down."

Leading the defense were co-captains Katie Devine and sweeper Jill Magner as well as midfielder Megan Connolly, who held the fort down in front of the goalkeeping tandem of Kristin Considine and Melissa Rosano.

The good times continued to roll when the Skipper hosted Norwell, getting two goals in each half to blow past the Clippers 4-1.

"The offense really stepped up and the defense was strong as well" in keeping Considine lonely all game long, said Bostwick.

Maggie O'Connor opened the scoring 18 minutes into the game when she scored on a feed from Andi Shaughnessy.

It would be 2-0 nothing five minutes later when the Skippers worked a corner hit play to perfection, Jenn Mehan assisting on a Katie Devine goal.

"I was so thrilled when that play worked," said Bostwick. "It's something we'd been working on in practice and they executed it perfectly."

After Norwell scored to make it 2-1 five minutes into the second half, O'Connor (with an assist to Shaughnessy) and Shaughnessy (set up by Connolly) scored two minutes apart to put the game away for Cohasset.

When two teams become one

CHS/Norwell to form a combined gymnastics squad

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Last season they were rivals on the gymnastic mats of the Pilgrim League.

This season they're going to be teammates.

With a unanimous vote of the Cohasset school committee Thursday night, the towns of Cohasset and Norwell will field a combined gymnastics team this winter.

According to Cohasset athletic director Clark Chatterton, the move very well could have saved the gymnastic programs at both of the schools.

"We were looking realistically at not having enough kids to field a team this winter and I don't think Norwell was in any better of a position," said Chatterton. "I'm thrilled that we were able to do something before we had to consider not fielding a team.

"The parents that I've spoken to are also very pleased we were able to get something done," added Chatterton. "The kids and their parents have put a great deal into the program and they deserve to have a program at the high school."

The Cohasset/Norwell entry will compete in the Pilgrim Conference Division 2 with Hingham, Randolph, Scituate and Hanover. Cohasset is considered the host town for this squad and veteran coach Ruthann Ardizzoni will continue leading the team.

GYMNASTICS, PAGE 18

The CHS gymnastic squad, seen here relaxing last season before a meet, will be bolstered this season by some friends from Norwell High. The two schools decided to combine their teams after it looked like low participation might force the elimination of both programs.

When two gymnastic teams become one

The towns will evenly split the cost of running the team this year, which is expected to be between $7,500 to $8,000 in all.

Chatterton stressed that the reason for the arrangement was simply to be a able to field a viable squad.

"There has been some concern that towns may form agreements simply to have a better team, but that in no way is the case here," he explained. "This is being done only to keep the programs running."

Chatterton added that their is some investigation being done to see if similar arrangements would benefit the hockey and spring track teams at the school. Discussion is still in the early stages for those program and the earliest that any changes could take place would be the fall of 2000.

Small towns like Norwell and Cohasset are faced with making such decisions to keep some of their athletic programs alive. Smaller sports like gymnastics, wrestling, track and hockey are usually the first to feel the crunch at schools which have smaller enrollments.

Holbrook and Avon combined their forces to put together a football team last season and similar agreements are not uncommon between some of the smaller towns on the North Shore.

Cohasset abandoned their girls softball program after fielding a JV only team this season because of lack of interest. On the brighter side, the hockey program at the school will regain its varsity status this winter after a year of playing only JV games.

"What really hurt us is when we officially changed to a grades 9 through 12 school," said Chatterton. "Not being able to use seventh and eight graders to help fill out some of the spots on the teams was a big blow to take."

elements to add. DeMichele ran the option straight from the textbook and used his speed to gain first downs, and Shepard spelled Trowers in the backfield to pick up several yards.

But the ball refused to go in the end zone, and Cohasset turned over on downs. Strong defense, with notable tackles by Sasso and Parkinson, forced the Lancers to punt. The two squads traded punts until Bolster dove and gathered in DeMichele's hurl on his fingertips for his first varsity touchdown and his team's first points. Golden bashed through the line for the two-point conversion.

Norton staved off Cohasset for the rest of the half and the hosts took an 8-0 lead into the locker room. A holding penalty and a Caldwell backfield tackle forced second down and 26 on the Lancers. The visitors punted, but penalties and tight defense brought up third down a long 20 for the Skippers.

Trowers got the call and followed blocks from Golden, Caldwell, J.P. Laugelle and sophomore Craig Davis to romp 51 yards to paydirt. DeMichele's keeper on the conversion attempt doubled the Cohasset lead to 16-0.

Norton began their next drive on the Skipper 22-yard line after a successful reverse on the kick-off return. A penalty on Cohasset brought the Lancers down to the 11-yard line. Alex Russell and Sean Parkinson stuffed the ballcarrier for no gain and a Caldwell sack handed Norton a third and 22 situation. A short gain was stopped by Taylor and Greg Parkinson, but the touchdown pass put Norton on the board, making the score 16-6.

Russell fell on the onsides kick to give Cohasset the ball and DeMichele picked up a first down on a nice 13-yard scramble. A Skipper turnover ended the third quarter, but the Lancers had already exhausted their scoring ability. The Boys in Blue would score one more TD when Trowers capped a drive with a one-yard run behind blocks from John Considine and Golden, a mere formality.

Coach Tony Rolfe was pleased with his team's play, particularly that of the offensive line and the defense.

"Our defense played exceptionally well. They gave up 17 yards besides that touchdown.

Our offensive line played very well. We really pushed them around up front. Those guys are at the point now that they pretty much know where to go and what to do.

"We have to play the game rather than just go through the motions. We did that last week. And I think Jamie DeMichele has his best game. I know he did. He's really playing the position now."

Rolfe's comments gave credit to the offensive line, one of the most under-appreciated units in all of sports. While the Cohasset running backs are excellent, their impact would be minimal if not for the size, strength, and ability of this year's offensive line. With four seniors, the O line has paid its dues and is now reaping the benefits.

Cohasset plays one of its biggest games of the year Saturday as they square off against Nauset at Cohasset's Alumni Field.

HOMECOMING

THE GAME: Nauset (3-2) at Cohasset (2-3, 1-2 in the South Shore League).

THE PERTINENT INFO: At Alumni Field, Cohasset, on Saturday, Oct. 24. Kick-off is at 1 p.m. Homecoming festivities will take place at halftime.

THE SKINNY: Cohasset will be trying to build on their impressive dismantling of Norton last week with another big effort in front of the Homecoming game crowd. Nauset may be at the bottom of the Atlantic Coast League, but when you play with teams like Duxbury, Whitman-Hanson, Plymouth North and Marshfield that's not exactly an unexpected place to be. The Skippers will need continued impressive efforts on both sides of the football if they want to come out on top in this one.

For over 40 years men from Cohasset have competed in the game of flag football. The games are held on the front field at Cohasset High each Sunday at 9:30 a.m.

All are welcome to play.

Free sports websites available

The Cohasset Mariner and Town Online, the online service of the Community Newspaper Company (CNC), are offering free web sites to all high school, youth and recreation sports organizations and teams.

CNC will provide the web site and train organization representatives in web page design and building, using self-publishing internet software that is accessible from any computer. Most people only need one 2 1/2-hour training session to get the hang of it. There are no hidden fees and no catches.

Each group and team will build and maintain its own site. Post game results, schedules, a calendar of events, bulletin board, lists of officials and team rosters, photos and/or directions to fields. Coming very soon - each group will have the capability of holding its own online chats.

This is a great way for sports teams and organizations to get their results and message to the public using the web through Town Online.

The program is available to all youth, adult, recreational and high school sports teams and organizations. Even groups who already have websites are invited to join in and be a part of a growing web network that receives over 1.5 million hits a month...and growing.

For more information on this exciting new program, contact Wayne Braverman at (781) 433-7842, or email wbraverman@cnc.com.

SHOW AND TELL

You can bet Caitlyn Nesbitt was the envy of all her friends when she brought her prized catch in to show her school chums. Nesbitt was enjoying a quiet day of fishing over the Labor Day holiday when the small Perch she was reeling in was swallowed whole by this 4 lb. 3 oz.- 20-inch long Bass. After a struggle she was able to land both of her catches.

Mariner launches sports e-mail site

In an effort to be more in touch with area sports fans, the Mariner has established an e-mail site. The address to is: mariner.sports@cnc.com

The Mariner encourages youth coaches and organizers, high school coaches, players and parents (who have access to an e-mail system) to send us your sports information, stories and schedules at this address.

Our deadline for publishing is Monday morning at 9 a.m.

In addition to our e-mail address, the Mariner also has a fax line at 781-837-4540.

Big city rewards. Small town appeal.

Community Newspaper Company (CNC) is greater Boston's fastest growing media company. From this facility, we publish 19 weekly newspapers, 18 weekly shoppers and a variety of niche publications. Come and grow with us. We offer competitive wages and a comprehensive benefits package including a 401(k) plan.

We currently have the following Marshfield-based positions available:

Advertising Manager
We seek an aggressive, experienced sales professional to direct a team of highly motivated retail advertising representatives. Primary responsibility is revenue growth, therefore the successful candidate must be able to hire, train and develop a climate which fosters individual initiative within a team concept. Prior experience with goal setting, performance appraisal and the ability to develop and mentor sales reps is essential. The ideal candidate has experience in cross selling a diverse product line (internet, weeklies, niche products) to maximize company revenue and customer response. Excellent opportunity for those who seek a challenge. Unparalleled financial opportunity for an aggressive overachiever.

Editor FOR NORWELL, HANOVER AND ABINGTON-ROCKLAND MARINERS
Looking for an organized and energetic individual to help us nurture and grow our newspapers in Norwell, Hanover, Abington and Rockland. The ideal candidate should have several years experience editing community weeklies. We're looking for a creative editor who can write insightful editorials, lead a staff of reporters (both rookies and seasoned) and give the papers increased visibility in the communities. Outstanding news judgment, proven track record of editorial innovation and strong staff management skills critical. These are dynamic, vibrant communities where readers care deeply about local news.

Sales Coordinator
Terrific opportunity to join our dynamic sales team. Provide administrative and customer service support to a team of account executives. Assist in communication with clients, coordinating advertising proofs, complete insertion orders, research billing issues and provide phone support. Ideal candidates will have previous customer service experience, excellent phone manner and proficiency with Microsoft Word and Excel.

Courier
A part-time position supporting the sales department. Responsible for pick-up at various customer locations on the South Shore. Excellent driving record a must. Hours: M-F 1-5pm.

We have entry-level and skilled positions available in our mailroom and pressroom.

On-call Sheetfed Technicians - Evenings. Work on Ryobi and Hamada two-color presses. Light stripping and bindery experience preferred. Great opportunity for self-starter.

Press Joggers - Full-time positions in our pressroom on the 2nd and 3rd shift. Stack, jog and assist in press set-up. Heavy lifting, standing and bending required.

Collators - Full-time positions in our Mailroom on 2nd and 3rd shift. Assisting with the mailing/inserting operation. Heavy lifting, standing and bending required.

EXTRA POINTS

DAVID WOLCOTT

When you talk about some of the sports movies that have been made over the past 20 years you realize that there have been some major league turkeys in the bunch.

"The Fish that Saved Pittsburgh" did absolutely nothing for the career Julius Erving and probably should have been a warning to Shaquille O'Neil and Dennis Rodman, both of whom have recently made some equally stinko flicks lately.

"Major League 2" and "Major League 3" proved that, yes, you can have way too much of a good thing.

And who could forget "I Like to Hurt People" and "All the Marbles", both of which accomplished the impossible and made professional wrestling look real.

Real stupid, that is.

But one movie that'll never be included on anyone's worst ever lists is "Bull Durham", -a true to life account of a year with a lower minor league baseball team and their trials and travails both on and off the field.

One of the best aspects to the movie was its authenticity. Take the scene where Crash Davis (as played by Kevin Costner), the grizzled veteran catcher on his last legs after getting his on shot at "The Show" is giving lessons to the latest young pitching phenom blazing up the minor league system, Nuke LaRouche (Timothy Robbins), about what being in the major leagues is all about.

More than having a burning fastball or a killer curve, Davis schools LaRouche on the necessary quotes he should know and love.

And then spout off verbatim in the general direction of anyone who approaches him carrying a notebook or a microphone.

"I'm just here to help the team."

"I'm just happy to be here and ready to give 110 percent."

You know the quotes. We sure as heck do because we hear pretty much the same ones coming from most every coach that we cover.

Finally, enough was enough and following some exhaustive research I uncovered the startling fact that those seemingly harmless quotes are actually a way that coaches communicate secret information to one another.

Believe it.

For the benefit of our readers and at no thought to my own well being and safety, I will now go about and crack the sacred code.

And you're welcome.

COACH QUOTE- "Team X is in a rebuilding year but they are always dangerous. We'll have to be on the top of our game to beat them"

TRANSLATION- "Boy does Team X stink. Not just a regular stink, we're talking about a Chinese-food-left-under-a-porch-on-a-blazing-Summer-day kind of a stink. I may just dress the cheerleaders for this game. In fact, if we lose I will personally walk through their school parking lot during Homecoming wearing only a feather boa and a smile."

COACH QUOTE- "Team X is a good team and are very underrated. It's no shame that we lost to them."

TRANSLATION- "I can't believe that I have to walk through their school parking during Homecoming wearing only a feather boa and a smile. Oh, the humanity. Darn it all to heck. Gee whiz gosh golly."

COACH QUOTE- "I know that Team X is undefeated and headed to another championship but I'm sure my boys will go out there and give it their all."

TRANSLATION- "Oh my gosh, these guys are going to kill us. They've got kids in the band bigger than my linemen and with more athletic talent. Somebody should make sure they've got more than one ambulance at the field. I think we're going to need a whole fleet of them after they are done with us. I just hope they stop the game before we get killed."

COACH QUOTE- "The team seems to have the right attitude. I think we should see a great effort against Team X."

TRANSLATION- "Have you ever done laps around the field with a Buick strapped to your back? Son, you lose this game and that's all you'll be doing for the rest of this season."

PLAYER QUOTE- "It's not just a one person show here, it's a team effort. Together we stand, divided we fall. I couldn't have rushed for an average of 233.9 yards per game without them."

TRANSLATION- "If these jerks screw up my college scholarship I swear I'm just going to break down and cry. I've got a shoe contract riding on this game and these oafs can't get out of their own way. Somebody call my agent. I demand to be traded to another high school that appreciates my talents."

Fitness Center available at CHS

Through the auspices of Cohasset High School and Dr. Mike Gill of the Health Education Department; CHS has a commercial quality fitness center.

CHS is interested in making this facility available to all residents at a nominal fee charge which cannot be determined until we have an idea of how many residents might have interest utilizing the facility. If you feel that you or members of your family might be interested in using the CHS gym, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-4109 right away.

The Rec. Dept. would like to know approximately how many residents would utilize the facility if they were able to keep it open during evening and weekend hours.

The facility includes about $75,000 worth of equipment consisting of a variety strength building equipment, two treadmills, two stairmasters, five stationary bikes and a stairmaster free-runner all of commercial quality.

The nominal fee charge would be employed to provide supervision during hours of operation, as well as revenue dedicated towards maintenance and upkeep of the equipment

The fitness center, located in the old study hall room, is currently utilized by students and staff and by CHS gym classes. Ideally, this unique opportunity could be made available to all residents outside of school hours. You may call 383-4109, 24 hours a day and if you receive voice-mail, please leave the number of people in your family who might utilize this facility if a nominal fee were charged and the facility open evenings/weekends.

Skippers look to end season on a high note

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

With the state tourney now an impossibility for the CHS girls' soccer team, it's time for them to fold up their tents and wait until next year.

Not.

To the contrary, there having a little bit too much fun to stop now.

Things are starting to come together for the young team as the year goes on, recently picking up their second win of the season, a 1-0 conquering of Norton, and then traveling to Hull to get a 1-1 tie in a physical battle with the Pirates.

The Skippers play at Abington Thursday (7 p.m. start with the boys playing at 5:15 p.m.) before closing out the year at home with Randolph Oct. 26.

After not winning a single game last season, the Skippers opened the year with an upset win over Middleboro and have been steadily improving as the season has worn on.

"We are getting there," said coach Debbie Beal. "Step by step they are starting to pull it all together and are playing some good soccer over the past couple weeks."

They're going to have to continue to play good soccer with a new face in net as former defenseman Jessie Zerendow, a junior, has stepped up as the new starting keeper.

Although she's never played the position before, Zerendow seems to have developed a knack for the spot.

Her development was never more evident than in the tie with Hull. After a fairly slow first period, she turned away shot after shot from the Pirates in the second half until they were finally able to put one past her off of a corner kick with less than five minutes to go in the game.

"We had a need and Jessie has stepped up to fill it," said Beal. "Things were a little slow for her in the first half but she really came through with some huge saves in the second half. Hull kept firing on her until they were finally able to get one by us.

"Jessie's a great athlete and more than willing to do whatever needs to be to help the team win. She's done a great job for us."

After junior midfielder Eileen Ridge curled a corner kick passed the outstretched arms of the Hull keeper late in the first half it looked like Beal and company were well on their way to their third win of the season. Although they would eventually have to settle for the tie, Beal said she was happy with the way her team was progressing.

"We are better now from when we started off the season. You can see everything starting to click between the players and everyone is out there looking to make the pass to send someone on a break," explained Beal. "We are not playing the game in a panic mode like we were in the beginning of the season.

"What we need to do now is take it to the next level and start putting the passes from foot to foot. Right now we seem to have the right idea, but the pass always seems to be one step ahead or one step behind the intended target."

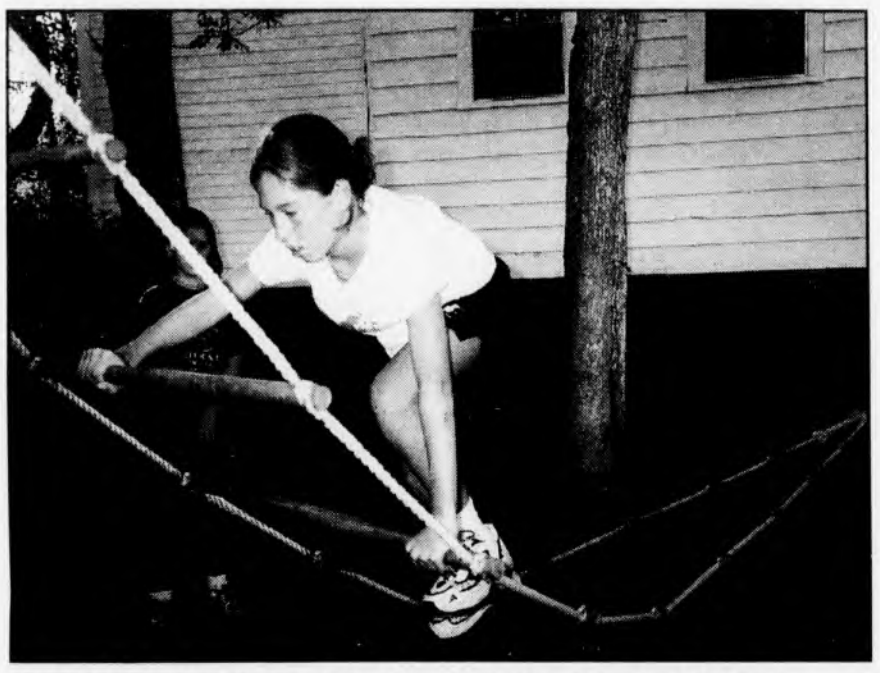
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Danielle Hajjar, Christian St. Pierre and Meaghan Rizzotti examine specimens in the "marine lab" class at Camp Bournedale.

Chelsea Richardson, Matt Baroudi and Elyse Portanova get help dissecting a dogfish from Mimi, the marine lab instructor.



The sixth graders at the Deer Hill School in Cohasset went to Camp Bournedale in North Plymouth. Camp Bournedale is an outdoor environmental educational program. The students left Cohasset on Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 30, and returned to Cohasset on Friday evening, Oct. 2.

Camp Bournedale was started by Mr. and Mrs. Gerson in 1939. Mr. Gerson was a teacher who wanted to start a summer camp. The camp is now run by their son, Arnie Gerson. Although it was started as a summer camp, it now runs from March until Thanksgiving. During the summer it is an all boys camp. The focus of the camp has changed into more of an outdoor education program, but there is still time for fishing and playing. When asked about the future of the camp, Arnie Gerson said that he hopes to continue to improve the facilities.

While attending the outdoor education program, the students participated in a variety of activities and four different classes. One of the four courses students could choose from was rocketry. In rocketry the students built, painted, and decorated a small model rocket and launched it. When launched, the rocket traveled up about 100 feet in the air. Most students were able to get their rockets back; however, some were carried off by the wind and were not retrieved.

The two mandatory classes at Camp Bournedale were Adventure Challenge and Marine Biology. In

Sixth graders attend outdoor education program

Adventure students worked with other students to solve problems such as getting into a line according to shoe size without talking to one another, or getting from one side of a "ditch" to another using only a ten-foot rope. In order to succeed in this class you had to be able to work well with a group. This class was the favorite of most people.

Sixth grader Molly Liddell said, "I liked Adventure because it was exciting and I did things I thought I couldn't do."

The part that Toby Norman liked best was the fact that "You enjoy working together for a common goal." In Marine Biology students took a bus to a nearby beach and studied the animals in their natural habitats. The instructors, Mike and Phil, were experts in this area and could identify many species of sea creatures which the students found in the tidal pools or the salt water marshes.

Another course offered to students was "ponding". In ponding students visited two nearby fresh water habitats. They scooped up animals and plants with nets and then studied them. The instructor, Jim Hanrahan, helped to identify all the animals that were found. A wide variety of insects and small fish were found. Students felt that they gained a great deal of knowledge about fresh water habitats and had a lot of fun doing it.

Students who elected to take the marine lab class had an opportunity to dissect a dogfish and observe its internal systems. Others, who enjoy working with their hands, built birdhouses.

Most students were disappointed when Friday afternoon rolled around and they had to leave. When they returned to Cohasset they were happy to see the many parents and siblings anxiously awaiting their return. Their experiences at Camp Bournedale will provide lasting memories for all the sixth graders.

Basic benefits for special needs children

The Cohasset Parent Advisory Council will be sponsoring a workshop presented by the Federation for Children with Special Needs on "Basic Rights." Basic information about Chapter 766 and other state and federal special education laws to assist parents in the planning, discussion-making and the monitoring of their child's I.E.P. To be held Nov. 3, 7:30-9:30 p.m. at the Cohasset High School, cafeteria. All parents, guardians, and teachers of special needs students are encouraged to attend. For more information contact P.A.C. Co-chairs: Kim Maynard 383-2707 or Maureen Jerz 383-6592.

Funds needed for leadership program

Three students from Cohasset High School have been chosen by the school administration to attend the Presidential Classroom leadership program in Washington, D.C.

Mike Baird, Megan Connolly and Steve Reynolds need to raise $2,700 to fund this very worthwhile educational experience. They will be selling the Entertainment '99 Book as one of their fund raising activities. The gold card and coupons provide the buyer with opportunities to enjoy two-for-one dinners at many outstanding South Shore and Boston restaurants. Kimball's By the Sea, La Dalat, Bert's Cove, The Red Parrot, Oceana at Marriott Longwharf, and Michael's Waterfront are just a few of the excellent choices. There are discounts for fast food restaurants, movie theaters, dry cleaning, sport events, hotels, and airline tickets.

If you would be interested in purchasing an Entertainment '99 Book for $30 or making a donation to the Presidential Classroom, please call Megan Connolly at 383-1248. Thank you for your time and support.

Deer Hill Band Night

Come to Deer Hill Band Night at Papa Gino's, Monday, Oct. 26 from 4-9 p.m.

A percentage of all purchases (dine-in or take-out) will go toward the Deer Hill Band program.

Cohasset PSO fall fund-raiser

Help raise money for our schools and it could be your lucky ticket to win up to $15,000.

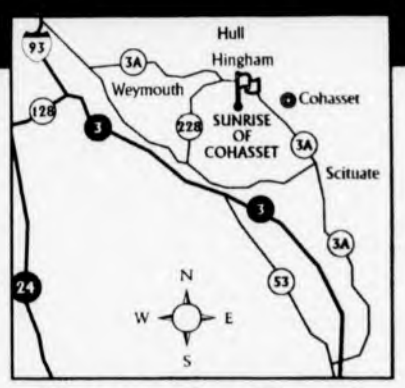
This year the Cohasset PSO has organized a 50/50 Raffle. Only 600 tickets will be sold at $50 each. The winner will receive 50% of the total sold. The fund-raiser will culminate in a two-hour Cocktail Part on Nov. 6 at the South Shore Art Center, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

So take a chance, support our schools and share an evening with friends, live music, hors d'oeuvres and cash bar. Bring your raffle ticket to gain admission to the cocktail party. The winning ticket will be drawn at the party, however the winner need not be present to win.

Raffle tickets are available at: Carousel Antiques, Cohasset Hardware, Buttonwood Books, The Good Sport and the South Shore Community Center.

For further information call Kathy Yeager 9820 or Andrea Flynn 6745.

Ripley Media Center upgrades



Recent improvements at the Ripley Media Center at Cohasset Middle High School have upgraded the look of the facility. A new rug, clean painted walls and a new library media specialist have contributed to the changes. Joan Gallagher, a veteran of both public and school libraries, has set her goal for this year. She wants to expand the materials collection and work with staff and students to use both traditional and newer research tools to their fullest.

Parents or other Cohasset residents who would like to volunteer to assist with ongoing, as well as, special projects are invited to call the Ripley at 383-2447 for details.

LIBRARY CORNER

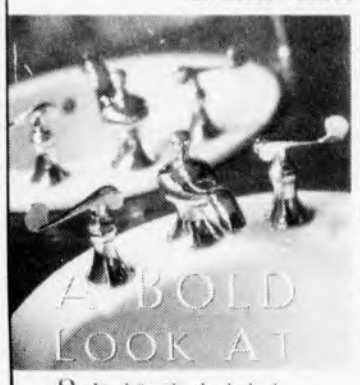
Library survey results

Results of the user survey done this summer at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library have been tallied. The most frequently requested improvements are: more videos, more books on tape, and more parking. Library Director Janet Husband said that these results confirm what the staff has been saying. "They get requests for videos every day and I wish that we could accommodate a really great collection of videos," she said.

"I am happy to say, however, that we are in the process of adding a significant number of new books on tape. In fact, we have relocated them to a spot in the New Book Room which will allow room for growth." Books on tape are used by commuters who can listen to books that they might not have the time to read and they are increasingly popular with visually-impaired readers. Husband says that more books are being published simultaneously in hard cover and on audio. The library will be trying to keep up with new titles as well as stocking a solid collection of classics.

Other results of the library user survey have been more surprising: Almost half of the respondents make heavy use of the library's magazines and newspapers. "How-to" books and books on current events top the list of specific non-fiction books used. A whole range of new or improved services were suggested: young adult programs, book discussion groups, a speaker's series, travel lectures, and public use computers.

The Library Trustees have found much to consider in these preliminary statistics and hope to glean even more information when an of the comments and suggestions made by respondents are further analyzed. They would like to thank an those who took the time to fill out the questionnaire. Better library service has always been their goal; they intend to be responsive to the needs of the library's users.



Now Free on the Internet

Here's some good news for Internet users: logging on to the Old Colony Library Network's home page (http://www.ocln.org) and using you Paul Pratt Memorial Library card, you can get free home access to many useful databases. Search Bank is a collection of five magazine databases, some of which offer full-text articles. They include the General Reference Magazine Index, the National Newspaper Index, the Expanded Academic Index, the Health Reference Center and the General Business File. This database is funded for library and home use by the Mass. Library and Information Network.

Two other databases are funded through the Old Colony Library Network (OCLN), the library network to which the Paul Pratt Library belongs. These are GaleNet, an extensive database covering topics in science, history and literature, and the Patriot Ledger Index, which also includes full text articles from 1995 to the present.

So be sure to log on soon to the OCLN Home page, (http:www.ocln.org) and click on "Search for Magazine Articles and More." Of course, you can also search the Paul Pratt Library's online catalog from home. You can even place your own holds on books by logging on to the OCLN Home Page.

LEGAL NOTICE
COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET NO. 98P2392EP

Estate of LEO M. KELLY
AKA LEO MICHAEL KELLY late of COHASSET
In the County of NORFOLK

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will of said decedent be proved and allowed and that HELEN M. KELLY of COHASSET in the County of NORFOLK be appointed executrix named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before 10:00 in the forenoon on November 18, 1998.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

WITNESS, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court, this sixth day of October, 1998.

SSCC special events

Elder Affairs Caregivers Resource Series

The series for elders, families and caregivers takes place from 7 - 9 p.m. Wednesday evenings. The suggested donation is $10 for the series. The discussion on Oct. 28 is support services: care options. The Nov. 4 discussion is legal and financial issues. Call to register, 383-9112.

Pre-Halloween Fun

Pre-Halloween fun will be held from 3:15 - 5:15 p.m. on Oct. 23 for grades K - 4. A $15 pre-registration fee is required. Children will bowl, do crafts, play Halloween games, visit the haunted house and more.

Jingle bell walk

The Fifth Jingle Bell Walk will take place on Friday, Nov. 27 (rain date Nov. 28). Join the festivities beginning at 2 p.m. as Mr. and Mrs. Clause arrive at Cohasset Harbor by lobster boat and join in the parade to the Community Center for songs, cookies and punch. The Bells of St. Stephen's Carillon will ring and the bell tower will be open to the public. Later, there will be a gathering on the common for lighting the Luminaria and tree, music and hayrides.

Make your mark on Cohasset history

In 1898 Cohasset published the Narrative History of Cohasset written by E. Victor Bigelow describing the town and the people of the time. Today that book is treasured by all who live here and own it.

In 1956 Cohasset published Volume II of the Narrative History of Cohasset written by Burtram J. Pratt describing the town and the people of the first half of the 20th Century. Today that book is treasured by all who live here and own it.

In 2001 Cohasset will publish Volume III of the Narrative History of Cohasset written by Jacqueline M. Dormitzer describing the town and its people today. That book too will be treasured by future generations.

You can be part of this wonderful heritage…

The Committee on Town History is extending an invitation to town residents to contribute to this effort in a number of ways. You can decide on which of the following you would like to do:

- Be a sponsor and have your name permanently recorded as a major benefactor of Cohasset.
- Be a contributor and have your name included in the book for future generations to see.
- Order advance copies of the Volume III of the Narrative History of Cohasset at a reduced price.
- Secure copies of Volume I and Volume II of the Narrative History of Cohasset while they are still available.

OBITUARIES

Alba M. Crossen

Alba M. (Deuterio) Crossen, 81, of Cohasset, retired secretary for the Hull Building Department, died Wednesday Oct. 14, at her home.

Mrs. Crossen worked for 15 years for the department, retiring in 1981.

Born in Boston she lived in Hull before moving to Cohasset 16 years ago.

She graduated from the University of Massachusetts.

She was active in the St. Mary's Sodality, the Red Cross and was a member of the former Hull Women's Club and Veterans of Foreign Wars post in Hull.

Wife of late Ralph P. Crossen, she leaves two sons, Ralph M. Crossen of Scituate and Joseph F. Crossen of Palm Beach, Fla.; three daughters, Virginia Harvey of Hingham, Patricia B. Tolini of Rockland and Jacqueline M. Crossen-Sills of Norwell; two sisters, Virginia Wilklis and Olga Fitzpatrick, both of Arlington; 10 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

A funeral service was held Saturday, Oct. 17, at St. Ann's Church. Burial was in Hull Village Cemetery. Arrangements were made by the Pyne Keohane Funeral Home, 21 Emerald St. Hingham.

Byzantine iconography workshop

Christopher Gosey, an artist who creates icons in the Byzantine and Ethiopian style, will offer a presentation on Byzantine Iconography: History and Methods illustrated with slides on Friday, Oct. 23 at 7:30 p.m. to be followed the next day, Saturday, Oct. 24, by a workshop in which participants can create an icon of their own, at Saint Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave. Friday's presentation will trace the development of the icon from its pre-Christian roots in imperial Rome and Roman occupied Egypt to the height of its development in Byzantium and Byzantium's spiritual successor, Russia. The admission to the presentation is free. The icon workshop will start at 9 a.m. on Saturday and continue all day until 7 p.m. Participants should bring a bag lunch. Workshop participants do not need to have attended the presentation the night before. Each participant will create a 5" x 7" icon in acrylic of Saint Mary or John the Baptist. The cost of the workshop is $85 per person which includes all supplies.

Gosey is a graduate of Texas A&M University with a degree in environmental design. He has studied the egg tempora method of Russian Orthodox Christian icon painting under iconographer and recent Russian émigré Ksenia Pokrovskaya. Gosey's icons have been exhibited in Boston and at the Harvard Divinity School. His icon of Saint Clement adorns St. Clement's Church in Philadelphia, and that of Saint Stephen at Saint Stephen's Church in Cohasset. The Greek word "eikon" means "image" and theologically speaking is defined as the word of God depicted through the use of line and color. This is why icons are often said to be written instead of painted.

For more information concerning either the icon presentation or workshop, please call Saint Stephen's Church Office at (781) 383-1083.

CHS drama club show

The Cohasset Drama Workshop will present "Twelve Angry Men and Women," this Friday, Saturday, and Sunday at CHS auditorium. Under the direction of Ron Emmons, the cast includes seniors Stephen Reynolds, Jim O'Sullivan, Meredith O'Hayre, Patrick Murphy, Ryan Long, Ron Nieynski, Stephanie Perkinson, Jordan Fiore and Jake Motley; junior Grace Gardner; and sophomores Asley Ulmer, Julia Lovallo and Elizabeth Ingber. The show times are 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 7 p.m. on Sunday. Tickets are $5 and are available at the door or through the high school or cast members. Tickets are limited to 60 seats a performance so be sure to arrive early to ensure a seat.

Cohasset Youth Resources Homecoming dance

The Youth Resources is holding a Homecoming Dance on Saturday, Oct. 24 for grades 7 and 8. The dance will be held at the Deer Hill School and will run from 7:30 -10 p.m., admission is $5.

Organist to give concert at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, St. Stephen's Church will present organist David E. Ogletree in a recital Sunday, Oct. 25, at 3 p.m. Ogletree is artist in residence at the Hammond Castle Museum in Gloucester, and is also vice president of Rodgers Organs of New England. Ogletree is a recitalist on National Public Radio and for the American Guild of Organists. He is a graduate of Philadelphia's prestigious Curtis Institute where he received a full scholarship.

A free-will offering will be taken, and a reception will follow the program.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, is handicapped-accessible, and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. For information, call (781) 383-1083.

Halloween costumes & decorations

No tricks only treats for all South Shore shoppers who come to Cohasset Consignment Shop located at Shaw's Plaza.

Manager Andi Merrill said there is a great selection of designer dresses and suits including Nipon, Escado, Emanuel Ungard, Aramani Emporio, Jaeger, and Oscar De La Renta as well as a unisex loden car coat moutoon lined from Kakas Furs. Merrill added there is a wide assortment of men, women, infant and toddler hand knit sweaters as well as cashmere sweaters from Neiman Marcus and Bloomingdale's. There is even a formal J. Press Black Tails, Brooks Brothers jackets as well as tweeds and blue blazers.

For the brides there are decorated lamps, sterling jewelry, an antique glass punch bowl with tray and punch cups, English prints with gold frames and Mikasa modern black dinner service for eight.

Proceeds from the shop provide major funding for the social service league's pneumonia shots, counseling and support groups "meals on wheels" and scholarship program for towns of Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Cohasset and Norwell.

To volunteer or to seek information call 383-0687.

Norwell Kitchen Tour is slated

On Friday, Nov. 6, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., nine of the most fabulous kitchens in Norwell will be open to benefit the Sparrell School. Antique kitchens, contemporary kitchens, kitchens designed by those who love to entertain and kitchens designed by serious gourmets will all be featured. Complimentary light refreshments will be offered at many of the homes.

Tickets are $15 and will be available the day of the tour at the Cushing Center in Norwell Center, or tickets can be purchased through Donna Delferro at 659-2863 in advance.

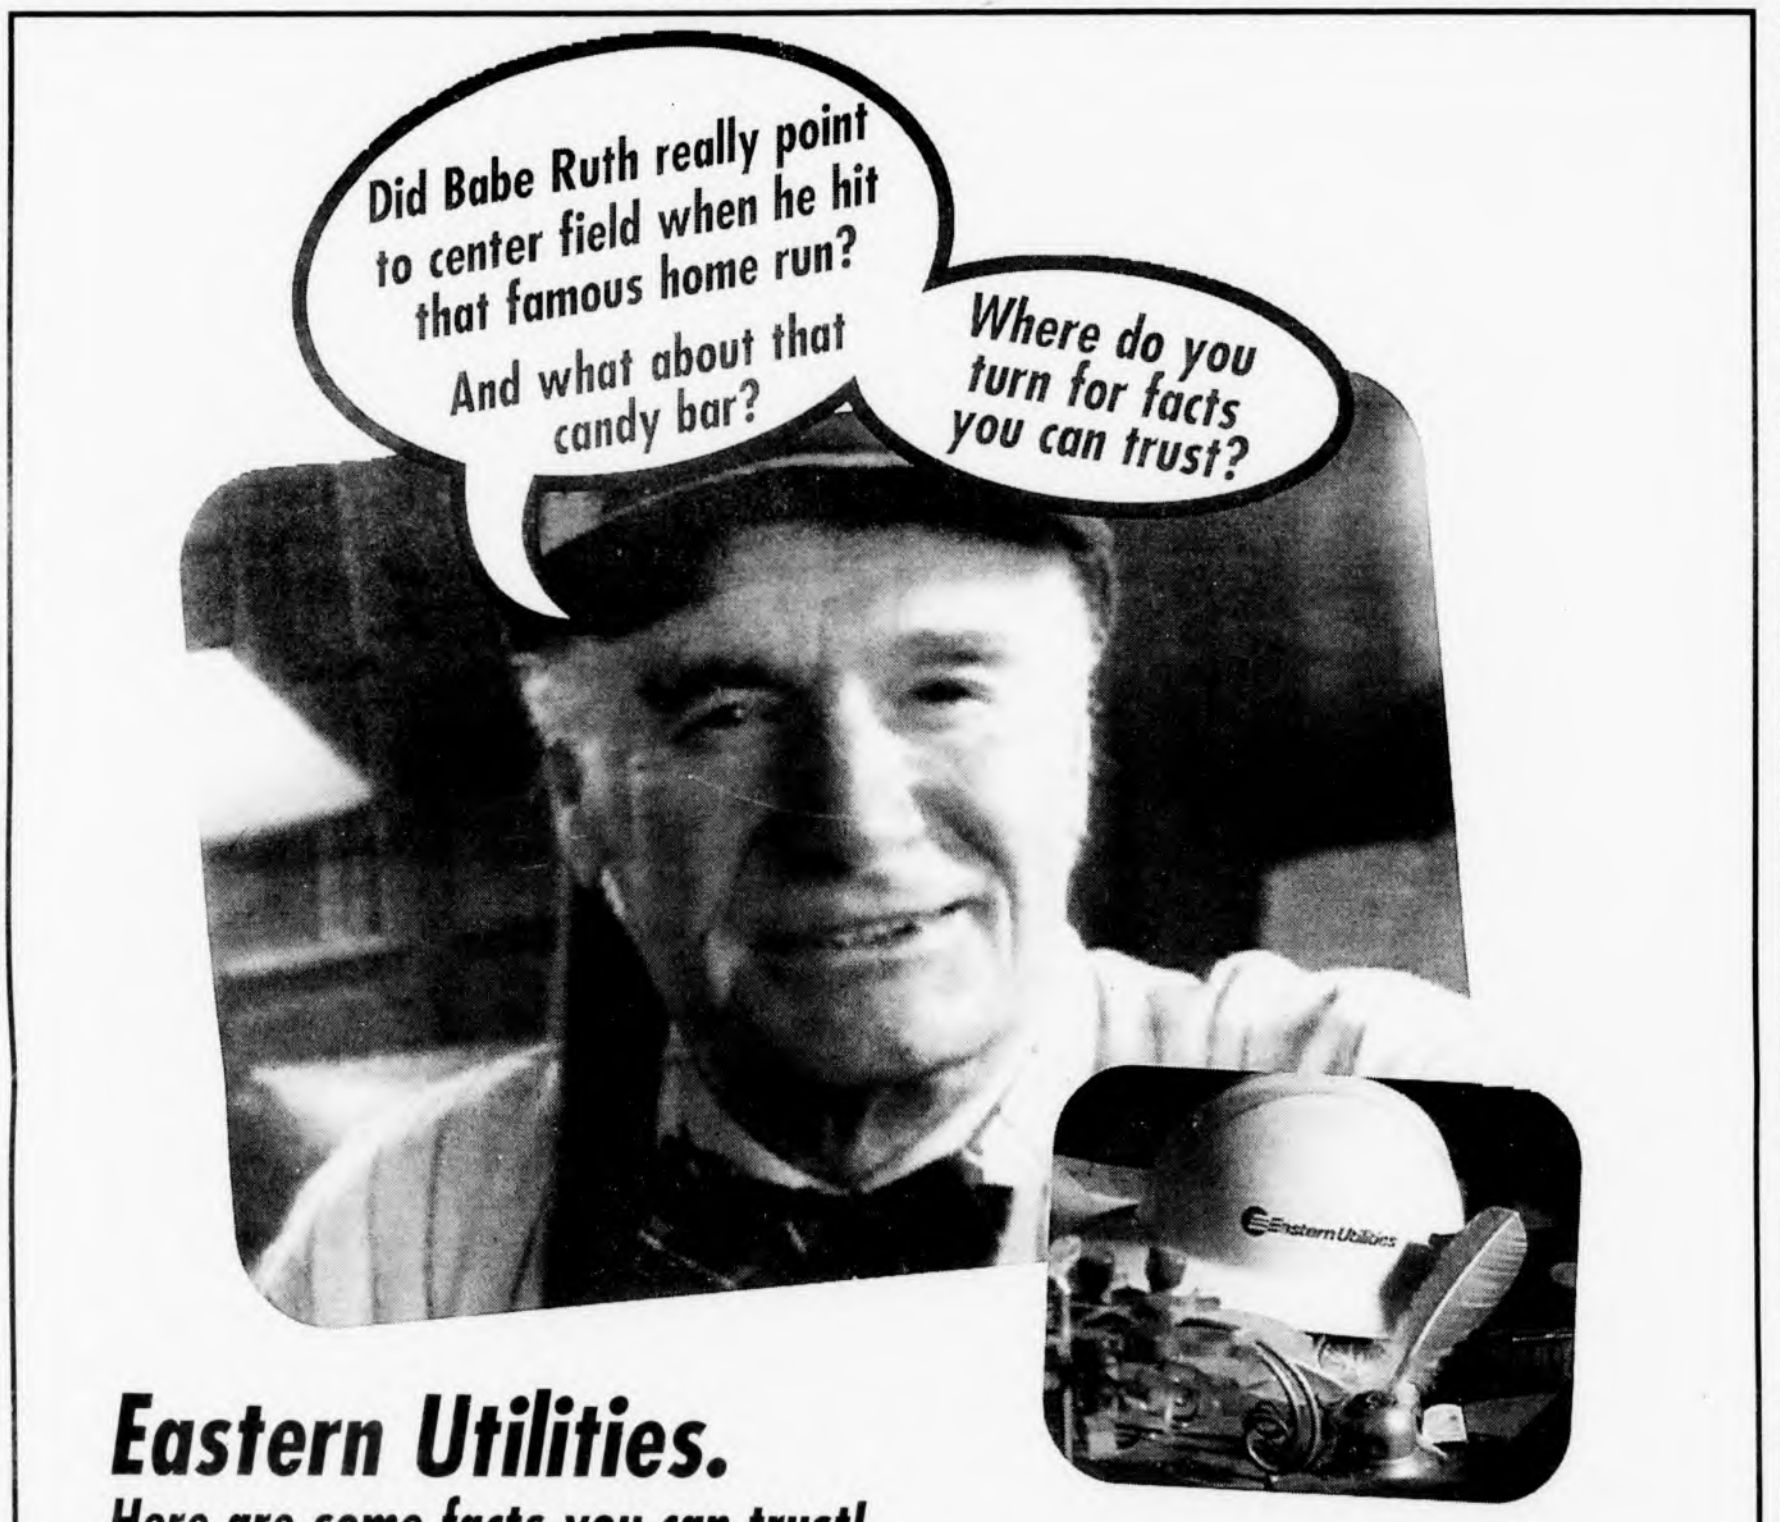
Haddad has final say on lightkeepers memorial

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Town Manager Mark Haddad will have the final word on the size of a proposed memorial to assistant lighthouse keepers Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson, killed when the structure toppled over in a gale 147 years ago. The lighthouse sat on stilts above the water's surface and fell over when it was hit by a massive tidal surge. A local resident, Herb Jason, 85, felt the incident was an integral part of Cohasset's maritime history and should be commemorated with a permanent monument. Jason received permission last year for a monument in a park on Government Island commemorating the two men who died in service to the town.

But not everyone is happy with the monument. The selectmen supported the proposed monument over the objections of the Cohasset Historical Commission and the Government Island Study Committee (GISC). The two committees preferred a memorial plaque on the side of the Minot Light Replica, saying the park is too small for such a large monument. The design review board has also examined the memorial and declared that it is too large as proposed. Town Manager Mark Haddad received permission from selectmen on Tuesday night to speak with all the interested parties and make a final decision on the size and scope of the monument.



"The design review board said it was too big, it was too this, it was too that," Haddad said. "It's a big quagmire. Let me resolve it."

Last December, the selectmen approved a 12-foot-in diameter compass rose with a polished block granite stone inscribed with a likeness of the old Minot Lighthouse and an inscription telling the story of how it fell over and killed the two men. The monument is planned to have a foundation of crushed stone four-feet deep sitting under one-foot of reinforced concrete. An additional six inches of concrete, granite and cobblestone will constitute the ground-level compass rose and serve a base for the 1,000 pound engraved granite stone.

Selectman Diane Sullivan reminded Haddad that the selectmen fully supported the 12-foot-high monument. She said she didn't want to see the proposal for the monument withdrawn. Haddad replied that the selectmen's support would weigh heavily on his decision.

Bob Davenport of the GISC attended Tuesday's meeting. Davenport originally suggested sending the proposal to the design review board because he felt the monument was too big. Davenport felt the selectmen were too quick to ignore the design review board's recommendation.

But Haddad pointed out that the design review board only advises other town committees. He said the selectmen are free to reject the board's advice.

Eastern Utilities.

Here are some facts you can trust!

- With deregulation, you will be able to buy electricity from a competitive supplier.
- But Eastern Utilities will still be your distribution or "wires" company.
- We'll still maintain power lines and provide safe reliable service.
- We'll still get you back in power after any storm or other emergency.
- We'll still manage billing and provide customer service.
- We'll still be in our communities — offering safety-education programs to children & adults.
- We'll still offer conservation programs to help you save energy and money.

By the way... As it usually is with legends, these two are a bit cloudy. As for pointing: It was the third game of the 1932 World Series, the Yankees playing at Chicago's Wrigley Field. There was no love lost between the teams – and the Cubs were taunting Ruth as he came to bat in the fifth inning. The Babe took two strikes and then held up two fingers - as if to say: "That's two!" And then he gestured out toward the mound - or maybe the center field bleachers. He hit the next pitch 500 feet into those bleachers – the longest home run ever hit at Wrigley Field. Ruth both denied and affirmed that he had indeed pointed. The acclaimed sportswriter Grantland Rice said that Ruth did point – did, indeed, "call the shot." [Source: New York Yankees home page: http://www.yankees.com/ruth.trib/br.story.p4.html] As for the candy bar: The Curtiss Candy Co. in Chicago claimed that the Baby Ruth bar was named for Ruth Cleveland, the daughter of President Grover Cleveland: she was the first baby ever born in the White House. (Ruth Cleveland tragically died of diphtheria at age 13.) However, many people (including the Babe himself) thought the candy bar was named after George Herman Ruth, the Yankee slugger. Halloween Fair set to be bigger than ever

There will be lots of games and surprises for South Shore ghosts and goblins at this Sunday's annual South Shore Community Center Nursery School Halloween Fair. Encircling Cohasset Common again this year will be a host of games of skill and chance for children of all ages including such annual favorites as Ghostball, Treasure Hunt and Donuts on a String. And as always, there will be plenty of refreshments, prizes and surprises, all planned to delight area enchanted goblins, princesses, and cartoon characters.

The Fair gets underway Oct. 25 at 1:30 p.m. sharp with a costume parade led by a very friendly witch. The spooktacular time continues until 3:30 p.m.

Tickets for all games and activities may be purchased at the Fair. Tickets are three for $1. Proceeds from the Fair benefit the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, including the school's scholarship and program funds.

For more information about the Fair or the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, contact Lynne Sheridan at 383-0036.

Friends of Paragon Carousel Halloween party

The Friends of the Paragon Carousel is having a Halloween party from 4 - 6 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 30 and a costume parade at 4:30 p.m. A pumpkin decorating contest will also be held and awards will be given to the prettiest, scariest and most creative pumpkins in the under 13 and 13 and older categories. Bradley, Murray race down to the wire

Town clerks predict healthy turnout

By Mary Ford

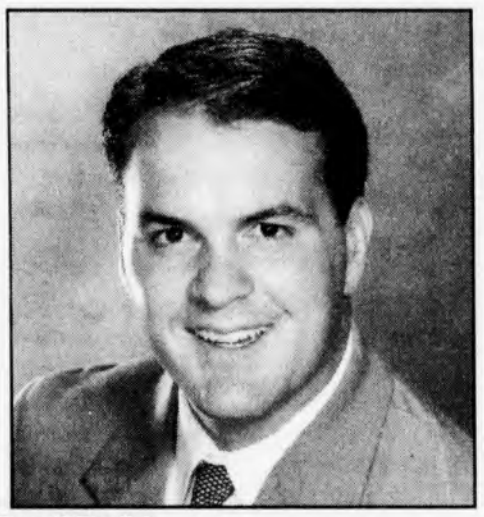
In the Third Plymouth District, even a hot governor's race is taking a back seat to the contest between Mary Jeanette Murray, a Republican, and Democrat Garrett Bradley.

Bradley, 28, of Hingham, a former county prosecutor, has worn out five pairs of shoes canvassing the district in his effort to unseat long-time incumbent Murray, 73, of Cohasset, the politician who wrote the book on constituent service.



The town clerks in Hingham, Cohasset and Hull are predicting a healthy turnout as registered voters head to the polls, which are open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Tuesday at Cohasset Town Hall, the Hingham Middle School and Hull High School.

"It's really going to be difficult to call whoever loses because we love them both," said Hingham Town Clerk Eileen McCracken.

Absentee ballots, usually a gauge of voter interest, were pouring in, in Hingham and Hull and running about average in Cohasset earlier this week.

Both candidates are expected to do well in their hometowns. Should Hingham with its

Cohasset schools make 'most advantaged' list

But study is off the mark, locals say

By Constance Pittman Lindner

ED REFORM: 5 Years Later — CHAPTER 2 —

How much does a town's socioeconomic status factor into its public education system? Plenty, according to a recent report by senior researcher Robert D. Gaudet from the University of Massachusetts' Donahue Institute.

Gaudet, the founder and former principal of the Boston Renaissance Charter School, ranked Cohasset schools fifth in the commonwealth's most "demographically advantaged" cities and towns. That list, selected out of 351 schools, included the communities of Duxbury, Norwell, Hingham and Scituate, which ranked tenth, fourteenth, twenty-first and thirty-fifth respectively.

Gaudet's study also separates the "most effective" schools from the rest. "Effective," takes into account schoolchildren of less privileged socioeconomic status whose standardized test success is attributable to school district efforts.

Generally speaking, wealthy towns like Cohasset, Marblehead and Weston are consistently considered the best in terms of standardized tests scores. That suggests that the intended equalizing effect of the 1993 Education Reform Act hasn't really been accomplished.

In Gaudet's view, affluent towns like Cohasset, where the median home price range is $284,500 have the benefits within the community that allows students to run with the wind at their back, whereas less privileged towns' students run with the wind against them. As he sees it, the Education Reform Act hasn't changed the basic boost that wealthier towns' students gain by living in a financially successful community.

"A town like Cohasset doesn't add much value to a kid's education, but so what?" Gaudet said. "If you're in the top 20 percent, you don't care how effective your schools are if the kids can still get into Harvard. And they can."

Which begs the question; does an apparently affluent town like Cohasset even need to worry about "effectiveness" when its students are doing so well, anyway?

Indeed, in the last two years, Cohasset has enjoyed a zero percent student drop-out rate,

Library prevails over condos

The wave of pink voters' slips held aloft by well over two-thirds of the packed auditorium said it all — Cohasseters want the old Joseph Osgood Elementary School to stay in town hands as the potential home for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. At this point, they do not want the school placed in the hands of a private developer for use as elderly housing.

Monday's special town meeting ignored a call from advisory committee Chairman Dick Avery to wait on the decision — and turn down Article 6, which would have given selectmen permission to sell the old school, and article 7, which would set the stage for the library to move over to the old Osgood.

"Usually, this should have an overwhelming majority of people in favor of a new library or elderly housing," Avery said before the vote. "I would like to see the town come together on this and not divide on it."

Apparently, Cohasseters felt decided enough to vote 351-99 to spend $152,500 to develop construction drawings and bid documents to turn the old school into a new library. Library trustees believe that an estimated $2.3

Absentee ballots available for state election Nov. 3

Absentee ballots for the State Election, Nov. 3 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Monday, Nov. 2 at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only: Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open: Physical disability; and Religious beliefs which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Nov. 3 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the OVAL to the right of your choice, follow directions as to the number of candidates for each office, and to vote for a person whose name is not printed on the ballot, write the candidate's name on the line and completely fill in the OVAL.

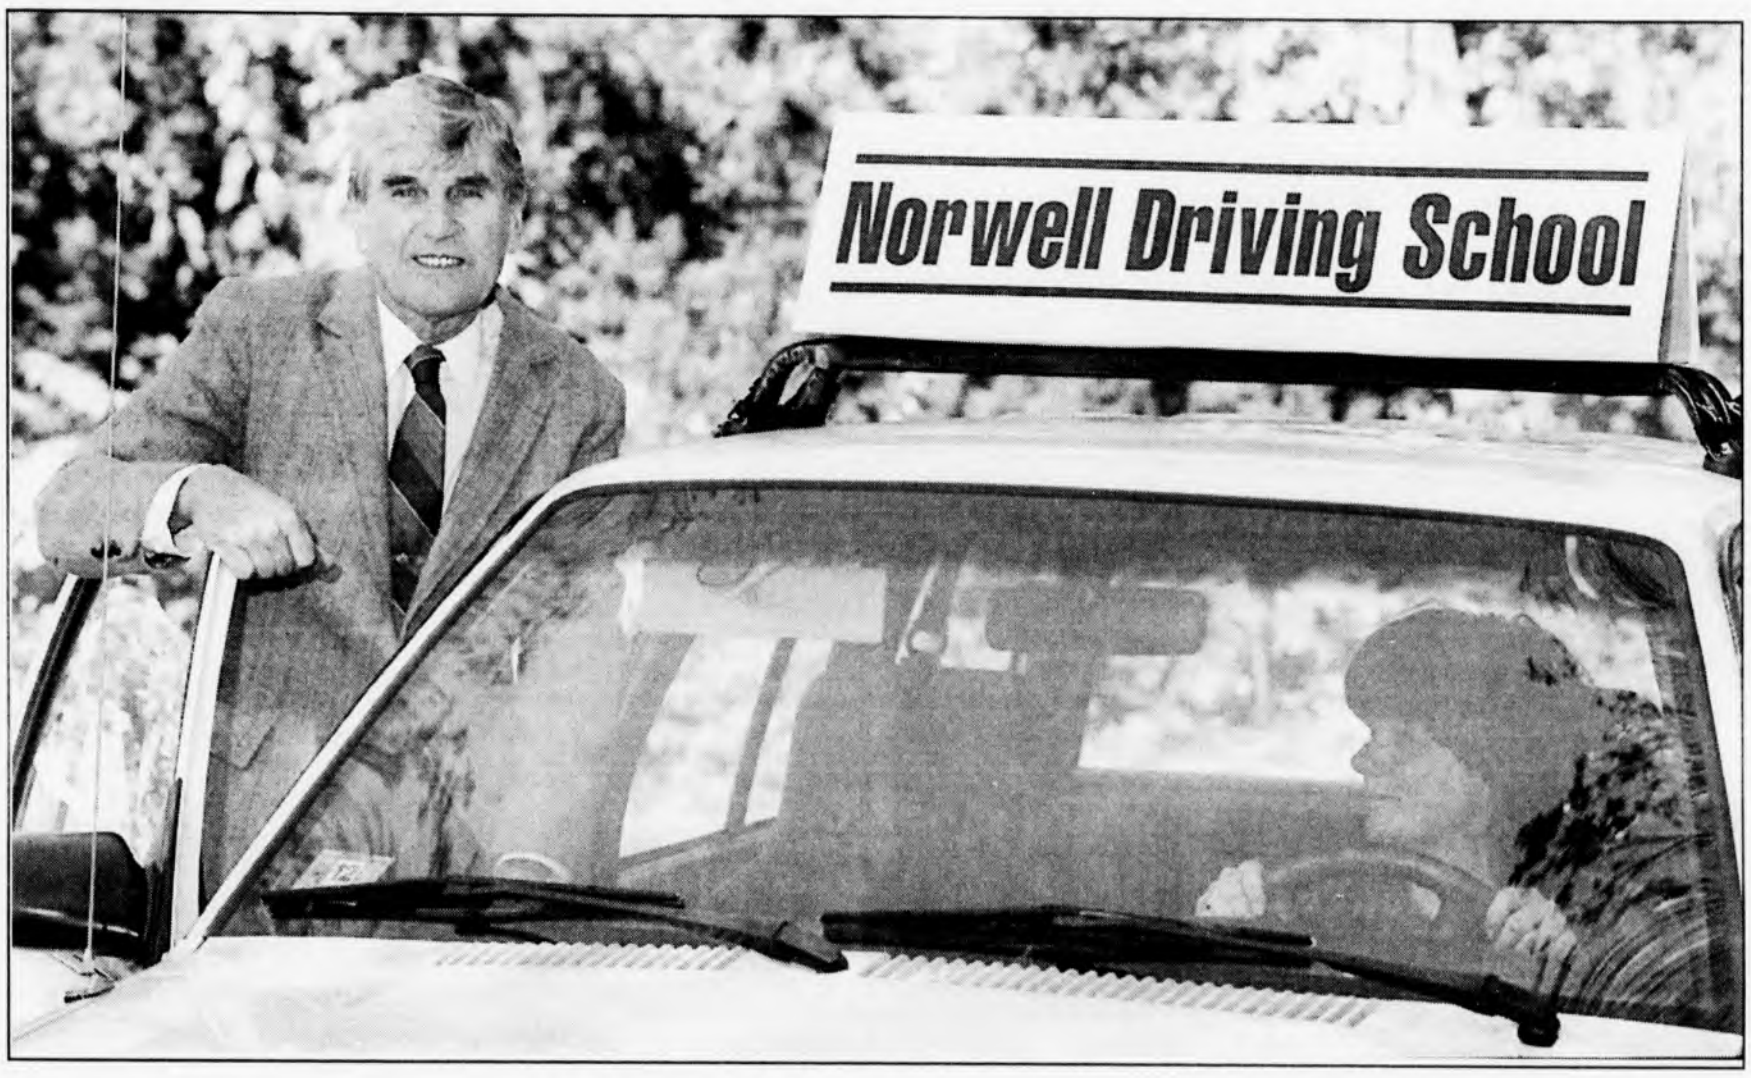
New law to curb teen drivers

Graduated licensing takes effect Nov. 4



By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

A new state graduated licensing law for teenagers has met with mixed reviews among some teen drivers, but those who crafted the bill hope it will help save young lives.

Massachusetts is the 11th state to implement a full graduated driver licensing system. The intent of the new law is to ensure new teenage drivers gain more on-the-road experience and expands parental involvement once a teen obtains a license.

Any inconvenience is offset by the hope that teens will now be better drivers with more experience behind the wheel, supporters say.

"Teenage drivers must be realistic," said Arthur Kinsman, AAA manager of government relations and AAA legislative liaison for the bill. "They believe they're good drivers, might get straight A's in school and can have the best intentions, but there will never be a worse driver than the day someone turns 16-1/2 and gets a driver's license."

Rocco Libertine, who has taught driver's education for 30 years, is concerned the new law doesn't go far enough.

At the end of the legislative session in July, the graduated driver licensing bill was signed into law by Gov. Paul Cellucci. The law, which was supported by a number of legislative leaders, takes effect Nov. 4.

"The law isn't aimed at good or bad kids or at punishing teenagers," Kinsman said. "It provides the proper framework for them to gain more experience and steer them towards good driving behavior. Based on experience, they'll get better at driving as they do more of it."

During the 1990s, drunk driving and mandatory safety belt issues have also been addressed.

Some of the major provisions of the graduated licensing bill include:

• mandatory drivers' education prior to obtaining a junior operator's license at age 16-1/2. Parents must certify 12 hours of additional supervised driving spent with their teenager as well;

• expanding the nighttime driving restriction for teens from 1-4 a.m. to midnight to 5 a.m.;

• restricting teen drivers ages 16-1/2-to-17 for the first six months after obtaining their junior operator's license from carrying other teenage passengers under age 18 unless they're accompanied by a licensed driver age 21 or over who is sitting in the front seat. The only exception to the passenger restriction is immediate family members.

According to Kinsman, that means, ironically, that teenagers acquiring their licenses on Oct. 4, for example, would be able to carry passengers under age 18 without a licensed driver 21 or over accompanying them until Nov. 4. At that time, the new restriction takes effect, which restricts them from doing that. However, the month from Oct. 4-Nov. 4 counts as experience towards meeting the six-month passenger restriction criteria.

In Massachusetts, 46 percent of 16-year-olds will be involved in a car crash before their 17th birthday.

• implementation of new speeding penalties for drivers under the age of 18, including a 180-day suspension for second speeding offenses and one year for third or subsequent violations.

The graduated driver licensing system calls for an additional 180-day license suspension for junior operators ages 16-1/2-to-18 for refusing or failing to pass a breathalyzer test in addition to the current 90-day suspension for failing the .02 blood alcohol contest or 180 days for refusing the test.

• Teens ages 16-to-16-1/2 holding learner's permits are now required to complete six months of clean driving (no convictions or at-fault crashes) before they may advance to the junior operator's licensing stage.

Why was the six-month passenger restriction implemented?

"A couple of statistics jumped out at us as we did our research for the bill," Kinsman said.

Those include the fact that in Massachusetts, 46 percent of 16-year-olds will be involved in a car crash before their 17th birthday.

"Two-thirds of teens killed in crashes are in a car driven by another teen," Kinsman said.

Studies indicate the crash risk for teens is higher when there are other teenagers in the car.

"This could be due to more distractions or showing off for friends," he said. "Even when drivers are thinking they're doing everything right, some teenagers don't have enough experience, and their fellow passengers can get hurt, too."

Teens are sometimes willing to take risks, but don't have enough experience to manage them, according to Kinsman.

"Teens need to consider the question, Am I as good a driver as I think I am," he said, "and ask themselves, Am I responsible enough to take on the safety of my friends and siblings without more time at the wheel?"

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan supports the new law.

"Anything is a good thing that tries to alert teenagers to the dangers of their first six months of driving," Noonan said. "I think it will save some lives down the line."

Cohasset High senior Tony Bramblett thinks teens not being allowed to drive others is ludicrous.

"How many more cars is that going to put on the road?" he asked. "Are you and your girlfriend going to have to take separate cars? Do those on Beacon Hill remember what it's like to be young?"

Senior Megan Connolly agrees the restriction will make life difficult.

"I just see that this will cause problems, especially with kids that want to drive brothers and sisters around if their parents work," she said.

Norwell Driving School instructor Rocco Libertine, who has taught driver's education for 30 years, said the new law is not strict enough. He'd like to see the minimum age to obtain a license raised to 18.

"Anything is a good thing that tries to alert teenagers to the dangers of their first six months of driving. I think it will save some lives down the line."
— Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan

"If they raised it to 18, I wouldn't mind losing the business if they turned out to be better drivers," he said.

Libertine said the new law's provision that restricts teens for six months from driving without a licensed driver 21 years of age or older in the front street is a good way to get some teens to mature quickly as drivers.

"It will at least keep them from smashing up their cars and it will give them some experience driving before they drive alone," said Libertine. "Six months may be all a kid needs in order to mature as a driver. Sometimes a kid needs time to get over the novelty of being a newly licensed driver. That's the time period when kids crash the most."

Graduated licensing is a large part of AAA's national 'Licensed to Learn' campaign, which brings attention to the high number of teenagers involved in crashes and advocates parental involvement in driver training for young motorists.

Further information about the new law is available on the Registry of Motor Vehicles website at: www.state.ma.us/rmv, including the entire text of the law and answers to 30 of the most commonly asked questions about it.

"Kids can learn from their mistakes easily on the sports field or while learning to use the Internet," Kinsman of AAA said, "but with a car the mistake can be fatal. We're trying to maximize learning and minimize mistakes (among teen drivers)."

The potential effect of the new system of training is to produce better drivers.

"It's not the most dramatic law apart from the passenger restriction, which will affect some carpools at the outset," said Kinsman. "If teens obey the speed limit and follow the basics, they should reach the age of 18 with no problem."

But, even if the new law had been in effect at the time four Notre Dame teenagers were involved in a fatal accident in September, Kinsman said he doesn't think it would have made a difference in that situation.

"That was a terrible crash under bad driving conditions," he said.

Constance Pittman Lindner and Frank DiCesare also contributed to this report.

SNAPSHOT OF THE NEW LAW

- Mandatory drivers' education;
- Expanding the nighttime driving restriction for teens to midnight to 5 a.m.;
- Restricting teen drivers ages 16-1/2-to-17 for the first six months after obtaining their junior operator's license from carrying other teenage passengers under age 18 unless they're accompanied by a licensed driver age 21 or over who is sitting in the front seat.
- Implementation of new speeding penalties for drivers under the age of 18;
- Teens ages 16-to-16-1/2 holding learner's permits are now required to complete six months of clean driving before advancing to the junior operator's licensing stage.

Cohasset voters head to the polls on Tuesday

By Julie A. Mehegan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset voters head to the polls next Tuesday to help decide everything from the state's next governor to the future salaries of Massachusetts legislators.

Locally, Democrat Garrett Bradley of Hingham is waging a campaign against incumbent Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset, for the Third Plymouth seat representing Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, is running unopposed.

Both precincts vote at the Cohasset Town Hall. The polls are open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

In other local races, Norfolk County Sheriff Jack Flood, who was appointed by former Gov. William Weld, faces opposition from Michael G. Bellotti, a Democrat from Quincy and Lawrence C. Mackin, an Independent from Braintree. Republican Robert D. Hall, Jr. of Needham and Democrat Peter H. Collins of Milton will square off for the Norfolk County Commissioner's seat, and Republican incumbent Jeffrey A. Locke, who was appointed by Weld, faces William A. Keating, a Sharon Democrat, in his bid for Norfolk County District Attorney.

Statewide, Acting Gov. Paul Cellucci and Attorney General Scott Harshbarger are fighting for the right to the corner office in the State House, after several weeks of tense campaigning and debate. Democrat Tom Reilly and Republican Brad Bailey are competing for the Attorney General's seat, and Democrat Shannon O'Brien and Republican Robert Maginn are vying for the Treasurer's post, vacated by Joe Malone when he made an unsuccessful bid for the Republican nomination for governor.

Voters will also be asked to answer four questions on the Nov. 3 ballot.

• Question 1 asks voters to change the way members of the Legislature are granted pay raises. The amendment to the state's constitution would tie pay raises for legislators to the median household income for Massachusetts residents.

Members of the House and Senate currently make a base salary of $46,410 annually. That salary would be frozen until January of 2001, and after that date, salaries would be reviewed every two years. An increase or reduction in pay would depend on the fluctuation of median household incomes, as determined by the governor.

Supporters of the change say it would prohibit legislators from the controversial act of voting to increase their own salaries, and would keep legislators' pay in line with the income of their constituents. But opponents say the state constitution is not the place to set the standard for legislators' salaries, and that open debate and a public vote holds legislators accountable if they vote to increase their own pay.

• Question 2 tackles the thorny issue of campaign finance reform on the state level, by proposing a law providing public funds to every candidate who voluntarily agrees to campaign spending limits and a $100 limit on campaign contributions. The law would also limit the amount of so-called "soft money" which could be transferred from national parties and used by state political parties.

Supporters say the new system would eliminate the influence of special interests and soft money on elections. But opponents of the new system reject the public financing for all campaigns, and suggest that the state can't afford to invest millions of tax dollars in political races.

• Question 3 proposes a reduction in the state tax rate for interest and dividend income, from the current 12 percent to the rate which applies to Part B taxable income, currently 5.95 percent.

Supporters of the tax cut suggest that the current 12 percent tax on interest and dividend income is discriminatory, punishing citizens who save and invest and discouraging others from doing so. But opponents say the tax cut would benefit only the wealthy and would actually drive down wages for working families.

•Question 4 asks voters to decide whether to keep or to repeal a law passed overwhelmingly by the legislature in 1997. The law deregulates the electric utility industry, allowing competition among power generating companies and requiring reduced rates for consumers.

Supporters say the law enables consumers to choose their own electricity provider and has been effective in reducing rates since it was passed in 1997. Critics call the law a "bailout" for utility companies and oppose what they consider state subsidies for the power companies.

If you have questions about the Nov. 3 election, you may call Town Clerk Marion Douglas at 383-4100.

Bradley, Murray race down to the wire

15,110 registered voters — about 8,600 of whom are unenrolled — go for Bradley, then Murray would have to make up the difference in Cohasset and Hull. Cohasset has 5,348 registered voters, with 3,038 unenrolled. The balance of voters in both towns is evenly split between Republicans and Democrats.

In Hull, there are about 8,700 registered voters, with about 5,000 unenrolled. But Democrats outnumber Republicans there 2,717 to 740.

Hull Town Clerk Janet Bennett said Murray has traditionally enjoyed strong support in Hull and thinks the race will bring the voters out on Tuesday.

"This is the toughest fight she's had," Bennett said.

Bradley, who will await the final results at Star's in Hingham Harbor, thinks his campaign message about strong constituent service coupled with being a strong advocate on the issues has resonated with voters.

"It's really going to be difficult to call whoever loses because we love them both."
— Hingham Town Clerk Eileen McCracken.

"We've run a strong, issue-based, positive campaign," said Bradley. "I've knocked on over 12,000 doors and talked to people directly about the issues."

On election night, Murray will be at the Sons of Italy off Route 3A in Hingham with her campaign workers. Facing her first challenge in a decade, Murray said the campaigning has been good for her.

"It provided me the chance to really get back with the people and campaign," she said. "It's been very nice and people have remembered what we've accomplished."

Both candidates will make the rounds at the polls on Tuesday.

While Cohasset Town Clerk Marion Douglas is predicting a turnout of at least 70 percent, she'd like to see even higher numbers Tuesday.

"Please, everyone vote!" she said.

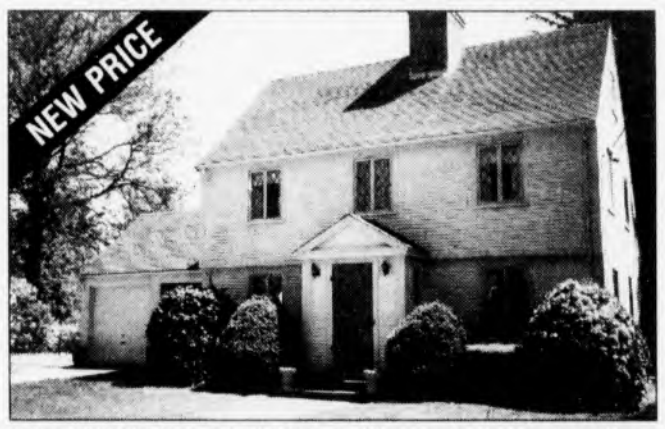
School technology articles approved

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

At the final session of town meeting on Tuesday, voters approved $350,000 for computers and other communications technology for the school department. The school committee will borrow $200,000 for printers, monitors, furniture and other equipment expected to last longer than five years. The remaining $150,000 will come from the free cash account to pay for the PCs, which may have a life expectancy of less than five years. Town officials did not want to pay interest on a loan for computers that could be obsolete in a few years. Town Manager Mark Haddad said borrowing $200,000 and spending $150,000 in cash also allows the town to reserve $350,000 in free cash needed to offset an expected deficit in fiscal year 2000.



Voters rejected an amendment by resident Lee Jenkins to transfer only $200,000 from free cash for technology. Jenkins argued that the school department's figures were outdated did not reflect recent price reductions in the cost of computers. She also complained that the school department already had hundreds of computers for students, and didn't need to buy as many new personal computers as officials claimed was necessary.

Proven Leadership on the key issues of concern to Cohasset, Hingham & Hull:

EDUCATION

★ Mary Jeanette opposed the 1993 Education Reform Bill (as did every other Rep. on the South Shore) because it was a bad bill as written with no cost accountability.

★ Mary Jeanette has consistently voted for increased local aid (which includes substantial local school funding dollars.)

★ Mary Jeanette has voted increases of millions of dollars for school building assistance.

GUN CONTROL

★ Mary Jeanette opposed the recent gun control law which went way beyond the assault weapon issue and placed restrictions on gun possession by law-abiding citizens.

★ Mary Jeanette opposes assault weapons and has voted anti-assault weapon legislation.

★ Mary Jeanette favors strong gun control laws.

DEATH PENALTY

Library prevails over senior condos at town meeting

million will be needed down the road to convert the school to a handicapped-accessible and roomy library.

The current library at 106 South Main St., according to trustees, is in violation of handicap-access law; has a limited parking situation; is too small for today's (or tomorrow's) needs; is inefficiently designed in an uneven multi-level style; and is contiguous to wetlands. Bumping out the structure is not seen as an option given the protection of wetlands under conservation law.

Library trustees Chairman Patience Towle held firm on her position that a switch to the school would be more cost effective than a re-design of the South Main Street building or building an entirely new structure on a parcel of land on the old elementary school grounds, as was under consideration. Trustees suggest selling the Paul Pratt building to offset the cost of a new library.

"The bottom line is that the net cost of it will be $710,000 assuming that the state funding we've been assured can happen comes through," Towle said. "For those who think the library is fine now, taxpayers will have to pay $600,000 to make the library handicapped-accessible. The maximum renovation to build on the already existing library will cost $1.5 to $2 million. For twice as much money, look how little the town will get."

Towle also pointed out that renovating the existing Paul Pratt Memorial library would cost about the same as renovating the old Osgood School, but that the project would not qualify for the state funding library trustees expect to see next year.

Those in favor of turning the school over to selectmen for sale — likely to Keen Development Corp. of Cambridge which would develop condos for seniors — argued that the $800,000 offered by the developer would help offset the $9.9 million price tag of the new Osgood School on Sohier Street.

Concerns about the actual need for elderly housing in Cohasset, given that there are already several empty condos on the market priced similarly to those proposed by Keen, was voiced by Osgood School reuse committee chairman Chris Ford, 14 Border St.

"I am the 'one' in the 6-1 vote," Ford said. "We were divided on the issue. If the unit price from Keen is lowered to $150,000, the developer won't buy it for $800,000. Besides, there are currently at least eight one-bedroom condos available today in Cohasset — one for $132,000 with 953 square feet and another at 100 Pond St. for $259,000. I'm concerned that these Keen units won't sell if the market goes sour — and the first thing to go sour on the market is condos."

It was the Osgood School reuse committee's 6-1 vote that recommended Keen Development Corp. after considering proposals from the library trustees and other developers. Town meeting charged the reuse committee two years ago to find the best way to return the old school to the tax rolls.

Keen's condominiums were supposed to offer a residential option for elderly Cohasseters, who would have first-come first-serve status to purchase within the community. Sale prices were expected to range between $195,000 for a one-bedroom unit and $265,000 for a larger two-bedroom apartment, with units ranging in size from 750 square feet to approximately 1,100 square feet, according to a handout supplied by the developers at town meeting.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris offered that both proposals were worthwhile. "Both housing for seniors and a desirable library for all would have a positive effect on the quality of life in Cohasset," she said. "The old Osgood can be used by the elderly and a lot (on the site) can be used for the new library in the best interest of the town. The housing will be used for seniors and empty nesters of middle-income who don't want to leave the area. Many elderly are being displaced form their hometown, roots and friends because they can no longer keep up their homes. They are house rich and money poor. Especially in the suburbs where newcomers vote in expensive projects that eat into the middle class elderly's fixed and limited income."

McMorris also explained that the old school will continue to sit vacant if the library has to wait for state funding. "We don't need another deteriorating building," she said.

Planning board Chairman Al Moore reminded the audience that "plans are nice, but let's get the zoning issue straight before we start talking about selling." The old Osgood is zoned in a single-family, residential area with enough acreage for four single-family homes.

On a lighter note, Herbert Towle, 91A South Main St., suggested that the old school should be the new domicile of the town hall. In turn, the town hall should be sold for older people. "I'd like to see some of those old people make that 'short' walk to town from the old Osgood," he quipped, referring to the benefi[illegible] town proximity for the elderly in the Keen proposal.

Minutes later, Neal Glick, 7 Spring St., offered his idea that the current Paul Pratt Memorial Library remain at its South Main Street address. "We will lose the elegance of an in-town library," he said. "Pembroke just paid millions to create a town center like we already have."

The final word on this matter was put forth by school committee member Joe McElroy, past-director of the Cohasset Historical Society. "We have nothing to fear but fear itself," he said, quoting Franklin Roosevelt's words. "I support the Paul Pratt proposal for the old Osgood school and the Lothrop House, which isn't adequate for the Historical Society's needs, should be sold and relocated to the library."

What games of musical chairs will come to pass if the library relocates to the old Osgood cannot be known now. But as of this week, it is clear that the town may like to see the old Osgood, where many learned their "three 'Rs," as the place where their children will have their first story hour and borrow their first library book.

Qualifications equal success.

Under Jack Flood's leadership, The Norfolk County Sheriff's Office is rated in the top 1 percent of all jails in the nation.

In just 22 months Sheriff Flood has:

- Opened the first correctional center for substance-dependent female inmates in county history.
- Become the first sheriff in the state to charge inmates co-payments for their intake physicals and doctors' visits, saving $180,000.
- Slashed cost of transporting inmates to court appearances by 20%.
- Eliminated sentence reductions for sex offenders.
- Saved taxes for towns by providing lock-ups for police departments.
- Created a partnership with Quincy High School to keep at-risk students in school and out of trouble.
- Expanded the free inmate labor program, doubling tax savings to participating municipalities.
- Reformed and reorganized the Civil Process Office to generate grants ($64,000 the first year) to local police for public safety equipment.

Another Democrat for Mary Jeanette Murray

MARIE J. PARENTE (D)
COMMITTEE ON LOCAL AFFAIRS, CHAIR
FOSTER CARE, CHAIR

"Rep. Murray, respected by both Democrats and Republicans, is a leader in her own right."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR, AUGUST 28, 1998

I have served with Representative Murray since 1981, and while we sit on opposite sides of the political aisle, I respect her experience and skills as a legislator.

Rep. Murray is most effective in working with leadership and is often a key player in the legislature, having sponsored more than 270 laws since 1977.

...Her dedication to constituent services is the bread and butter issue for the people she represents...she is able to cut through the bureaucracy and provide access to the government that the people have paid for...this is the most important duty of an elected official.

...Her sensitivity to proposed legislation is due in large measure to her experience as a legislator and former local official.

The Local Affairs Committee reviews bills submitted by nearly every city, town and district in the Commonwealth. Rep. Murray played a lead role in legislation regulating the cellular telecommunications, which will protect local zoning autonomy. Several pieces of legislation which she sponsored resulted in laws regulating the conduct of public officials and meetings of governmental bodies and laws concerning veterans, child care, insurance, public utilities, crime, water and sewer assessments and school employees.

...She serves on the Committee on Counties, which this year played an important role in disbanding the county system of government.

...Rep. Murray's military service as a member of the United States Marine Corps is commendable... and she is well known for her leadership on veterans' issues.

The residents of Hingham, Cohasset and Hull are fortunate to have her as their State Representative, and have shown their wisdom in sending such an able and dedicated person to represent them in the Legislature. I, too have benefitted from her wisdom and expertise, and am proud to know her.

She's Always Been There for You. Now, Please Be There For Her on November 3.

Marie J. Parente

Rep. Murray is proud to accept the endorsement of the following groups:

- Massachusetts Firefighters Union - Hingham, Cohasset & Hull
- National Federation of Independent Businesses
- Citizens for Limited Taxation and Government
- Tinytown Gazette

"Rep. Murray has always been very supportive of all drug and safety programs sponsored by the Hull Police Department."

Lenny Reno, former (now retired) DARE/SAFETY Officer

"Mary Jeanette is the only Legislator I know who has had so many projects approved and completed for her district."

Commissioner Peter Webber, Dept. of Environmental Management

"She works hard and delivers for her district."

Commissioner David Balfour, Metropolitan District Commission

"Representative Mary Jeanette Murray has always been a big supporter and advocate of the Hingham D.A.R.E. program."

AROUND TOWN

A GREAT NIGHT

"Oh, What a Night ..." Everyone has heard that song, well, it could have been Richard Kurtz's very own theme song last Saturday night! Richard has had a rough time lately, between treatments and surgery, so he has been out of touch with the mainstream! Well, here's what his family and friends did to take care of that! They all got together and rented the room upstairs at the American Legion, cooked up sumptuous dishes, then invited all of his friends to come and say Hello! When we tell you the place was filled to the rafters, it is probably an understatement! Everyone wanted to see Richard to fill him with love and best wishes (he looked like a million bucks) and they did! Ben Watson and his group "The Bottom of the Fifth" provided the music for singing and dancing, the food kept on coming, friendship abounded — it was a very special night for a very special guy! A party to be remembered by all, especially the guest of honor!

NEWS FROM NOBLE'S

News from Noble and Greenough School, Annie Palone is the newsmaker — Annie, the daughter of Michael and Margaret Palone, has been named a Commended Student in the 1999 National Merit Scholarship Program. She placed among the top five percent of more than one million students who entered the 1999 Merit Program by taking the Preliminary SAT/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test last fall. Congratulations on a job well done, Annie!

MARY MARTHA BENEFIT

As you may know, there is a special place in Hingham called the Mary-Martha Learning Center. The center is responsible for providing an intensive, residential program for women and children in transition; it trains women and children to make lasting and positive changes in their lives. Residents are referred through DSS and DYS and are often escaping abusive or dangerous situations. They learn how to break the cycle of abuse while teaching them a positive lifestyle — they learn to parent, career skills nutrition, etc. If they aren't high school grads, they work toward their GED. Here's a huge stat ... in its 10-year history the center has graduated nearly 350 women and not one has returned to homelessness! When Tipper Gore visited MMLC she heralded it as a model program for the entire nation. Sixty people got together to help the center try to eliminate the mortgage to enable them to hire additional staff, help the residents, give more to the moms and children — the list goes on. The dedicated fund-raisers held a Mary-Martha Learning Center Monster Bash and Raffle last week at the Cohasset Golf Club and it was a monstrous success, but (there is always a but) they would love to have your $$$ too. If you would like to aid these kind people and their efforts, get in touch with Sara Meehan (Gigi), and she will be happy to steer you in the right direction. It's so nice that people care.

BRYANT COLLEGE NEWS

Bryant College sends us word that there is one local resident attending Bryant this year and she is (drum roll please) Lauren N. Dooley! Lauren is a management major, and is on the field hockey team. This is probably the first of many things that you will read about Lauren, she is an outstanding young lady with a brilliant future ahead. Many of us have been touched by her goodness and her thoughtfulness, to say nothing of her grace and beauty. This gal will go places, folks, she is special!

that got together to organize the salute to Jean and Dan Cotton, it is so nice that they have been recognized for their many contributions to our town! Dan and Jean are a special couple indeed, their list of accomplishments goes on and on. From education to conservation to town government, to saving town dollars, even improving traffic control, they have done it all. On a personal note, this writer had the honor of graduating with their younger daughter, Mary Jane, so I know first hand what fine people and parents they are! Their home and their hearts were always open to Mary Jane's friends, and they were very involved in making sure our education was a superior one! It's so nice to see Cohasset's grand couple honored, congratulations for a job that was (and is) so well done!

Let's cook a sumptuous meal

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

As the days grow shorter and shorter, it seems that our family's appetites grow larger and larger! And, who can blame them! What is nicer than coming home to delightful aromas filling the house and whetting the senses of taste and smell! Here is a menu for a meal that can all be cooked in the oven at the same time and temperature. When the oven is to be used for one dish, it makes for a greater economy of time, effort and money to place in it as many other dishes as possible! So, preheat your oven to 350 degrees, gather together a 2-1/2-quart casserole dish, a loaf pan and a cookie sheet, and let's cook a sumptuous meal.

SPANISH CHICKEN STEW

4-1b. chicken, cut into serving pieces
1/4 cup olive oil
1 lrg. Spanish onion, sliced
1 cup canned tomatoes
1 clove garlic, chopped fine
3/4 cup peas, canned or leftover
3/4 cup corn, canned
1 cup raw rice
1/2 teaspoon chili powder
1-1/2 teaspoons salt
1/2 teaspoon red pepper
1/4 teaspoon black pepper
2 cups stock

Wash chicken and place skin-side up in 1-1/2 quart greased casserole dish. Combine remaining ingredients in order given, blend well and pour over chicken; cover tight.

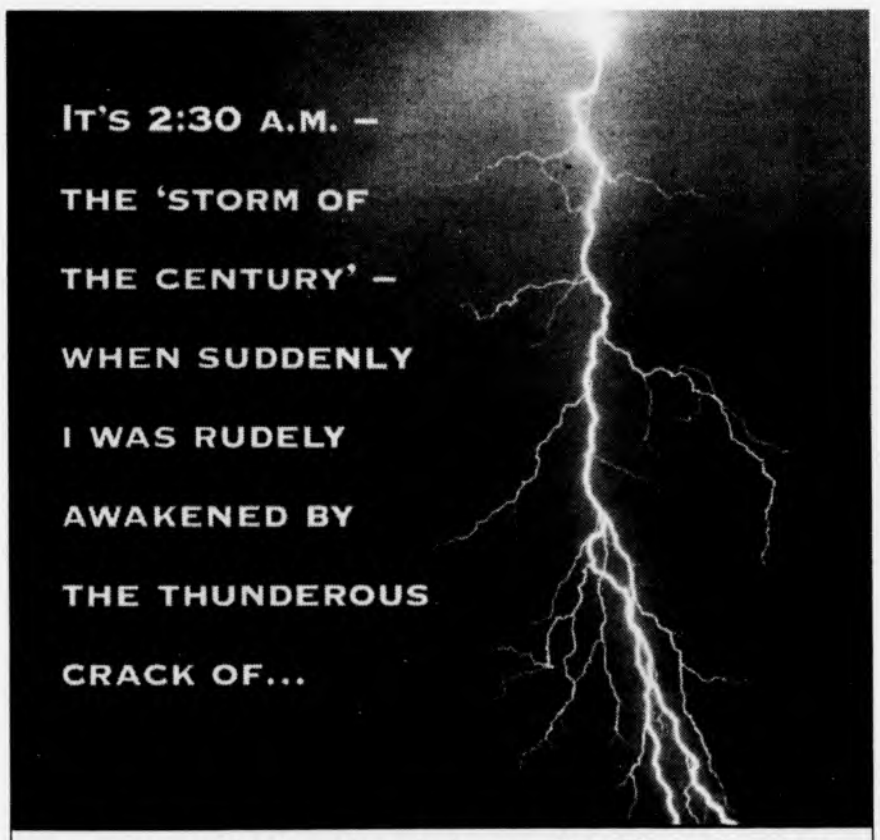
SCALLOPED CORN

2 eggs
1/2 cup milk
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon onion juice
2-1/2 cups cream style corn
2/3 cup soft bread crumbs
2 tablespoons melted butter

Beat the eggs and milk together; add salt, pepper and onion juice and blend well. Stir in the corn and pour mixture into a greased loaf pan. Top with bread crumbs which have been tossed in melted butter.

HOT YEAST ROLLS

1 package granular yeast
1/4 cup lukewarm water
1 cup milk, scalded
2 tablespoons shortening, melted
2 tablespoons sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 egg, well beaten
3-1/2 cups sifted all-purpose flour



Sprinkle yeast slowly over lukewarm water. Combine milk, shortening, sugar and salt, and blend thoroughly; cool to lukewarm; add yeast mixture and well-beaten egg. Stir in flour, one cup at a time, beating well after each addition. Place dough in large, greased mixing bowl, cover with towel and let stand in warm place to double in size, about 1-1/2 to 2 hours. Turn out on a floured board or pastry cloth and roll out about 1/2 inch thick. Cut with 2-inch cookie cutter and place on greased cookie sheets about 2 inches apart; cover and let stand in warm place for about 1 hour to rise. This recipe makes approximately 2 dozen rolls

Baking directions:

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Place chicken at rear of lower shelf. At the end of 45 minutes baking time, set corn on shelf with chicken; place rolls on shelf directly above. Continue baking 45 minutes longer. Total baking time is 90 minutes. 6 servings.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

A vote for Murray

Not long ago, we received a press release from a local cable show announcing that "Mary Jeanette" was one of the guests.

We added all the necessary attributions such as "state Representative" before her name and her family name "Murray" followed by "R-Cohasset."

Had we neglected to do that, however, we're sure that our readers would still have known who Mary Jeanette was.

There's little doubt that after 22 years of unparalleled constituent service as our state representative, Rep. Murray is a household name in Hingham, Cohasset and Hull. She has made service to the district her life's work and still has a passion for the job after many years. These are just some of the reasons we believe, from where we sit, Mary Jeanette Murray deserves another term in office.

A grandmother and veteran of the US Marine Corps, Rep. Murray, 73, also brings a perspective to the Legislature where she votes her conscience and has earned the respect of Democrats and Republicans alike. Over the years, she has come to understand the Legislative process and works that to her advantage, all for the betterment of the district. For many years she has been able to work to secure funding for key projects such as dredging and seawalls.

Rep. Marie J. Parente, D-Worcester, who is chairman of the committee on local affairs on which Rep. Murray serves, says it best.

"She is most effective when working with leadership and is often a key player in the Legislature, having sponsored more than 270 laws since 1977. As for Rep. Murray's dedication to constituent services, that is the bread and butter issue for the people she represents. That she is able to cut through the bureaucracy and provide access to the government people have paid for is the most important duty of an elected official."

There's no question election races help voters focus on the issues and even the personalities of the candidates so they can make an educated decision at the polls.

That's particularly true here in the Third Plymouth District where Democrat Garrett Bradley, a former Plymouth County assistant district attorney, hopes to unseat Rep. Murray, who hasn't faced a serious challenge in a decade.

Mr. Bradley is running a formidable campaign. We admire his energy and enthusiasm. We think he's bright, has great potential in the political world and would be a quick learner on the job. But at 28 and without any local government experience, Mr. Bradley doesn't present a strong enough argument on why we should choose him over Rep. Murray who not only served on the front lines of local politics as a selectman but whose lifetime experience helps her understand the needs of all ages.

We urge Rep. Murray to heed well all that has come out of this campaign. We urge her to adopt a more articulate and focused vision for education, particularly with Education Reform being a key issue as it comes up for renewal in the next two years. We also call on her to stop playing games with when she will bow out as legislator. She claims she believes in term limits, but won't be nailed down on when enough is enough. She needs to be direct on this issue just as she is on so many others.

With a generation's worth of service including bringing millions of dollars back to the district — we endorse the reelection of Mary Jeanette Murray Nov. 3

Paul Cellucci for Governor

This has been a season of economic uncertainty. Layoffs and jittery markets have brought back discomforting memories of the last recession. As the decade opened, Massachusetts had a state government paralyzed in the face of the worst recession in 50 years.

The turnaround since then has been remarkable, and much of the credit goes to two men elected in 1990. Bill Weld and Paul Cellucci put a lid on spending and shored up the state's fiscal foundations. They cut taxes, improved the regulatory climate and reduced the cost of doing business.

Any new economic storms will find the state well prepared, thanks to the efforts of Weld, Cellucci and others in business and government. Its bond rating has been restored and its rainy day fund well-stocked. Massachusetts has a more diversified economy and the lowest unemployment rate of the large industrial states.

There has been progress in other areas over the last eight years. Crime is down, the welfare rolls are shrinking. Public higher education is getting better and tuition is going down. But restoring the economy's stability and state government's credibility have been the signal accomplishment of this decade. They are the strongest argument for renewing Cellucci's lease on the governor's office.

In other areas, particularly education, Cellucci's record is mixed. He's shown a commitment to the full funding of Education Reform and to some of its elements, like teacher testing, student testing and charter schools. But he has delegated educational leadership to John Silber and James Carlin, who are strong on rhetoric, not team-building. Their rattling of the education establishment has value, but while we need a vigorous debate over education, it's got to be a constructive debate as well. To get better schools, we need to inspire teachers, not insult them.

If Education Reform is to succeed, the governor will have to pay closer attention to the details. It's not just that we don't know how $9 billion in new school aid has been spent. It's that five years into a seven-year program, the administration hasn't determined how well it's working. Cellucci's understaffed and demoralized Education Department can't keep up with Education Reform's ambitious agenda, let alone evaluate its progress or figure out where we go from here.

Cellucci's opponent, Attorney General Scott Harshbarger, is a man of accomplishment and integrity. He has a proud record of public service and we wish him well.

But while Harshbarger has an admirable streak of independence, putting a Democrat in the governor's office would make Massachusetts virtually a one-party state. A balance of power between an activist Legislature and a governor who resists the urge to tax and spend has served the state well over the last eight years, and will for the next four.

Both Harshbarger and Cellucci are better than the campaigns they have waged. They've chosen slogans over substance and attack over engagement. The focus on Cellucci's personal finances is troubling in its lack of facts and its dubious relevance. He's shown he can handle the state's checkbook responsibly, and that's the job he's running for.

It is a job Paul Cellucci has earned as Weld's full partner in a remarkable eight years of recovery and renewal for Massachusetts. In a season of uncertainty, we can count on his proven leadership and Community Newspaper Co. endorses his election.

Understanding your child's risk of future substance abuse

FROM THE D & A COMMITTEE

T. MARTIN

The Second in a four-part series

The first risk factor for potential substance use among children to be examined, which will be surprising to many, is parents. Today's researchers agree that the biggest risk factor for substance abuse is parental attitudes toward drug use and drinking by children. The influence of parenting can be a problem when it includes a lack of parental information on current drug trends, denial of a child using or being likely to use alcohol or drugs, and parenting practices that do not effectively discourage use among children.

Why would a parent not work to discourage substance abuse among children? Experts in the field of substance abuse prevention maintain that this generation of parents was the first to partake in widespread, recreational drug use themselves. Many, as college students of the '60s, got high on marijuana and heard Timothy Leary praise the virtues of LSD. A large majority of these parents now believe that they experimented with drugs and managed to end up addiction free and successful in life. They believe, or hope, the same will hold true for their kids.

In response to parents' casual feelings about their children getting high, what some parents do not realize is that the marijuana of yesterday is not the same pot their children are smoking now. Today's marijuana is far more potent and commonly laced with chemicals. The marijuana currently available contains carcinogens 10 times more powerful than cigarettes. Parents also need to be reminded that when they got high they were most likely older and in college and perhaps less at risk for problems and addiction than their middle or high school children.

Other parents feel that they would rather see their kids drinking than smoking dope or messing around with cocaine. A whole different segment of parents feel drinking alcohol is a rite of passage for adolescence. These parents believe that youth drinking can be supervised or condoned in secure, non-driving locations such as the home. They may also believe that kids need to start early to learn how to drink responsibly before they go to college, perceived as the land of binge drinking. In the area of teen drinking, parents who do not adhere to zero tolerance and allow their children to drink before legal age, do not realize that, aside from breaking the law, they blur the lines of acceptance for children of any age below 21. Many forget that 12- and 14-year-olds hear the same messages that parents direct to their older adolescent siblings: "You do not have to wait until age 21 when you may drink legally; you can consume alcohol anytime as long as it's responsible; if it is within the home; or not while driving." This practice by parents of essentially condoning underage drinking is driving down the average age for use of alcohol among children. Five years ago, the average age for first use of alcohol was 15, now it's 12. Parents also need to remember that in reality kids do not drink to be social, they drink to get high .

Researchers agree, however, that parents can also serve as the biggest deterrent to their child's future abuse of drugs and alcohol. Parents, who provide clear and repeated messages that teen drinking and drugging will not be tolerated and offer consistent consequences for not abiding by this standard, will help their children beat the odds of future abuse, possible addiction or perhaps even death.

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee strongly suggests that parents become educated to the issues of substance use among youth and begin talking to their children about the dangers of drugs as early as the third grade. Parents need to start early with the message that substance abuse is simply not acceptable and will not be tolerated. Parents have to be prepared to offer clear and consistent consequences for their children should they venture into the abuse of drugs or alcohol. In case of possible and/or future substance abuse, a parent's best plan is to be prepared.

HEALTH NOTES

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

Heaven is a Smoke- Free Zone

In A 1940's song called Smoke, Smoke, Smoke that Cigarette, the last line is "In Heaven at the Golden Gate, tell Saint Peter that he's gonna wait cause I gotta have another cigarette."

Well, in Cohasset, we've come just that much closer. Last week, in a meeting of the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program, Cohasset and Hingham were declared Smokefree, and received citations for "Your Leadership in Establishing 100% Smokefree Public Places."

This is an important milestone. Smoking is one of the most damaging public health threats to our citizens, causing enormous suffering and expense to those in our Nation's communities.

It wasn't long ago that smoking was a way of life. Nearly everyone smoked, but there is evidence that fewer people are now doing it. Twenty years ago, It was possible for technicians inspecting aircraft to find cracks by looking for the brown stain caused by condensation of the tars from second hand smoke leaking through the fuselage. This is no longer possible, and other means of detecting cracks had to be developed.

But fed by funding from the Health Protection Fund, established by voter referendum in 1992, and organizations like the American Lung association and others, smoking has become the stigma that it deserves to be.

Every day the tobacco industry spends millions of dollars on advertising directed towards children and adults. This advertising works, because 3000 youths a day are enticed to start smoking. Half of the kids that start smoking try to quit but can't. The South Shore Collaborative, tries to reduce the use of tobacco by heightening community awareness, educating merchants, and enforcing laws which forbid sale of tobacco to minors.

One way this is done is to ask minors in one town to attempt to purchase tobacco from local merchants from another town. In the last two compliance checks, no store in Cohasset sold cigarettes to minors.

Unfortunately, smoking in youth is beginning to rise, and the national momentum against tobacco is slowing. The tobacco industry is involved in a campaign to diffuse evidence of the harmful effects of smoking.

Help to keep our kids aware of the dangers of smoking by supporting our local merchants in the brave effort they are making to save our kids from this massive threat to our health.

Red Tide

The water on the north shore is brown. Last week, a boat from Cohasset spent the night in Manchester harbor, and when she came home her topsides were brown, as was the white dinghy being towed astern.

It's not certain that the brownish color on the North Shore was red tide, but it is certain that it was the result of an algae bloom. Algal blooms are caused by the explosive population growth of minute, single-celled group of algae called dinoflagellates. Not all algal blooms are red tides, but all are stimulated by excessive runoff of fertilizers from land or by the discharge of untreated sewage into coastal waters, both of which serve as food for the algae.

Some algal organisms produce toxins that are concentrated by filter-feeding animals such as clams, mussels, oysters, and crustaceans and can cause Paralytic Shellfish Poisoning or PSP.

Little is known on how or why the organisms produce the toxin, but as the shellfish filter feed on the blooms they store it in their tissue. The toxin produced is among the most potent natural poisons in the world. There is no known antidote.

Common symptoms are tingling or numbness beginning around the lips and spreading to the face and neck within one half hour of ingestion. If such symptoms occur, get help immediately because cardiac failure and paralysis can cause death within 12 hours.

Tom Reilly for Attorney General

Under the leadership of Scott Harshbarger, the state Attorney General's office has earned a reputation for passion and professionalism in pursuit of the public good. That legacy should be entrusted to the man who also succeeded Harshbarger in the Middlesex County District Attorney's office: Tom Reilly.

Reilly is a gifted prosecutor, an experienced litigator, a seasoned manager who's shown he can run a large organization. He'll handle new and ongoing public interest litigation in areas like tobacco, health care and the environment with confidence and skill. Reilly is also a public servant of unquestioned integrity and commitment. His agenda in pursuing high-profile cases like the trials of Eddie O'Brien and Louise Woodward had more to do with a passion for justice than self-serving politics.

Given his record, it is understandable that Reilly should run for Attorney General as a tough-on-crime prosecutor. But prosecuting street crime is a small part of the job he seeks, and he must expand his grasp of issues in the arenas of consumer protection and government regulation. This shouldn't be difficult: Through his innovative and effective work with Middlesex County schools on peer mediation and gang violence prevention, he's shown he understands how to fight crime. We hope he'll apply this understanding to the challenges of sentencing reform and community corrections, so that when those who've served their sentences leave our prisons, they are far less likely to return.

The Republican candidate, Brad Bailey, is energetic and articulate. But in terms of experience, ability and leadership, he simply cannot measure up to Reilly.

We're confident Tom Reilly will bring stature, competence and passion to the office of Attorney General, and we offer him Community Newspaper Co.'s endorsement.

Dressing up (?) for Hallowe'en

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

There is a good chance that you'll answer the doorbell Saturday night and find Monica Lewinsky waiting to be tricked or treated.

The biggest sellers in Hallowe'en costumes is not a ghoul, a goblin or a ghost but Monica's beret, a black wig and a blue dress (unstained) like the kind she modeled for Ken Starr and the grand jury.

And if the tricksters among us go out blackmailing the neighbors as a pair, you'll probably recognize her companion. He'll be wearing a Bill Clinton mask and carrying a jumbo cigar.

The Linda Tripp costume (a stringy blond wig and a tape recorder) is holding its own but the bottom reportedly has fallen out of the Hillary mask market.

I was surprised to learn the other day what a big business Hallowe'en has become without me noticing it.

When I was young, and ice covered most of the earth, our Hallowe'en pleasures were simple. Wasting the oatmeal money on masks and costumes was something that was left to the kids in Cohasset and Duxbury.

I am told it's already a $2.5 billion industry (even before Monica and Bill), with candy sales accounting for $950 million of it. Preparation for holiday sales needs a few months lead time, too, which is why there are no Monica masks for 1998.

The whole business was thrown for a loss when Monica berets began outselling the dresses that were worn in the movie "Titanic," the costume that was anticipated to be the runaway best seller of Hallowe'en '98 before Monica came along.

When I was young, and ice covered most of the earth, our Hallowe'en pleasures were simple. Wasting the oatmeal money on masks and costumes was something that was left to the kids in Cohasset and Duxbury.

Those of us who had clean sheets threw them over our heads and told everyone we were ghosts and, as I recall, we would rather play tricks than be treated, although Ev Wynot, the garage owner, once became a neighborhood legend by giving us $5 to let his house alone.

One of our favorite tricks was to soap the windows of the stores in Weymouth Landing and then show up the next day and innocently offer to clean them. Al Capone's extortionist henchmen would have been proud of us.

Another old favorite was to tie the front doorknob to the porch rail, ring the doorbell, run like hell and chortle while our beleaguered victim struggled to get out of his own house.

Now Hallowe'en has progressed to the point where two mothers will duke it out for the right to spend $40 on the last Teletubbies costume in the toy department at Zitomer Pharmacy in New York City.

There's even an official holiday drink called "Ghoulade," the brainchild of Oop! Juice, a company based in Rhode Island, and described as "a sugary, black lemon-flavored" soda that comes in what looks like a beer bottle.

If things go well with Ghoulade, we can expect "Turkey Slurpy," a sweetened cranberry juice for Thanksgiving, and "Gefiltefizz, a blueberry soda the color of Windex" for Hanukkah.

Me? I'm not going out tricking or treating Saturday. I'm going to a wedding, instead. (No, not the highly hyped one in Kingston). All the guests will be in costume.

Let's see, now, where is that beret and the cigar?

Voters agree to share cost of sewer overrun

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Residents of North Cohasset are halfway to their goal of receiving additional funding for their sewer project with help from taxpayers. At the second and final night of town meeting, voters overwhelmingly supported an article that would provide $2.7 million for the North Cohasset sewer project with taxpayers picking up 50 percent of the cost. The 50 percent subsidy must be approved by voters at a Proposition 2-1/2 override election. If voters do not approve the override, the town will still borrow the $2.7 million, but residents of North Cohasset, who use the new sewer, would have to pay the entire cost of connecting to the system through betterments.

The North Cohasset sewer project was approved two years ago by town meeting for a cost of $6.6 million with a 50 percent taxpayer subsidy. But the bids for the project came in $2.7 million higher than the sewer commission had anticipated. The town re-bid the project twice, with each subsequent bid coming in slightly more expensive. The state has ordered the town to have residents of North Cohasset connect to the sewer or Cohasset could incur huge fines and legal action. Residents of North Cohasset would be required to connect to the sewer even if the town approved no additional funds because of the state mandate. Tuesday's vote was the culmination of an effort by residents and town officials to deal with the additional costs permanently.

Voters deliberated on the sewer issue for close to two hours before moving to a final vote. And while a few residents opposed the 50-50 funding option, the vast majority of voters supported the town subsidy. That support was reflected by the number of voters who supported the project. Town meeting rules required a simple majority to include the amendment 50-50 funding, but a two-thirds majority to approve the amended article. Both votes passed easily, especially the decision to support the article with 50-50 funding, which was approved by 238 residents versus only 36 who opposed it.

Residents and members of town boards debated the issue vigorously, raising familiar issues about cost, past decisions, how the work would be performed, and equitable solutions. Selectman Nan Roth explained to voters that the selectmen were split on how to pay for the cost overruns in the North Cohasset project. Two selectmen favored borrowing the money and letting residents of North Cohasset pay for the entire project through betterments. Two selectmen favored doing nothing and letting residents of North Cohasset hire their own contractors to connect them to the sewer. One selectman, Diane Sullivan, favored supporting the project with 50-50 funding.

"It is our hope that supporting this project is a positive step toward discussing equitable solutions that allow the whole town to participate in the benefits, whether those solutions are for sewer or septic."
— Lisa Bumstead of CEES

Sullivan delivered an impassioned plea to town meeting voters to support the 50 percent subsidy.

"I'm the one selectman who supports the 50-50 funding and I'm proud of that fact," Sullivan said. "I support the 50-50 funding because we've talked to you previously on the issue of fairness. The cost of 50-50 funding on a $360,000 home is $18. Without the 50-50 funding, the cost to North Cohasset residents is $200. People in North Cohasset are being asked to pay for the 50-50 on their taxes plus the costs to connect."

Sullivan said there are many senior citizens in town who just won't be able to afford to connect to the system without the subsidy. She feared long-time residents of town who are now elderly would be driven out of Cohasset because they couldn't afford the costs. Sullivan also pleaded with residents to at least support the $2.7 million without the subsidy. She raised the specter of elderly residents unable to obtain financing using credit cards to purchase pumps and services to connect to the sewer.

Jim Lagrotteria, chairman of the board of assessors, said the subsidy would add only six cents per thousand dollars of valuation to residents' tax bills. He described that as small compared to the 33 cents per thousand dollars of valuation to pay for the new Osgood School.

Mark Baker, chairman of the capital planning committee, spoke against the 50-50 subsidy.

"Capital planning did not take a formal vote on this motion, but we are opposed to the use of tax revenue for sewer projects," Baker said. "Capital planning is opposed to the amendment because while the cost is minimal, we cannot afford to continue adding to the tax burden of the taxpayer, even if it is only six cents."

Richard Avery also spoke against the amendment in his role as chairman of the advisory committee. Avery said it is the job of government to perform tasks that individuals cannot do on their own, like placing a sewer main in the middle of the street. He said it is not the job of government to connect individuals to the main, something that could be done by an individual who hired a contractor.

"Think of it as a group meal where you divide the check evenly, and maybe you had the steak and someone else had the wine," Avery said. "With this amendment, we are asking people not at the table to pay for the meal."

But several residents rejected the reasoning used by Baker and Avery.

"At what point did homeowners in North Cohasset not become taxpayers?" asked Bill Anders, 79 Linden Drive. "This town has ignored this ecological nightmare for 30 years. If Boston can afford sewers for poor sections of town like Roxbury, then this exceptionally wealthy town can afford this."

Lisa Bumstead, speaking on behalf of Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions, said the approval of the 50-50 funding is the first step in the town moving toward equitable environmental solutions for the entire town. Bumstead picked up on comments made by Health Board Chairman Kevin Ulmer and Planning Board member Robert Sturdy that the North Cohasset project should be approved, paving the way for addressing other sections of town that are not scheduled to receive sewers.

"It is our hope that supporting this project is a positive step toward discussing equitable solutions that allow the whole town to participate in the benefits, whether those solutions are for sewer or septic," Bumstead said. "We need to support other areas of town as those areas address their septic or sewer needs."

The timing of the Prop. 2-1/2 override election, however, has presented a problem.

If voters approve an article that requires a Proposition 2-1/2 vote, state law requires that the override election take place within 45 days of the conclusion of town meeting. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he had hoped to hold the override election on Dec. 5, but there is the village fair scheduled for that day. The Saturday before Dec. 5, which is Nov. 28, is Thanksgiving weekend, when many residents leave town to visit families and friends. Holding the election sooner than Nov. 28 doesn't allow enough time for the Town Clerk's office to prepare for the election. Holding the election on Saturday, Dec. 12, would be illegal because that is the 46th day.

"Unless we can get the Secretary of State to approve Dec. 12, we've got a real problem," said Haddad. "We could hold the election on Tuesday, but I'm not sure how the board of selectmen feels about that."

In other business, town meeting supported an article that will provide an additional $60,000 to a previous town meeting appropriation for expanded sewer service around Lily Pond. The additional money will be added to $13.63 million override approved at last year's town meeting and in a subsequent Proposition 2-1/2 election. The state considers the $60,000 to be a minor modification to the larger appropriation and has ruled that another override vote is not required.

The secrets of successful schools

New study may serve as an assessment model for the state

By Chris Szechenyi and Vanessa Parks
CNC STAFF WRITERS

To unlock one of the secrets of a successful school, just step inside Constance Smithwood's classroom designed for children who need help reading.

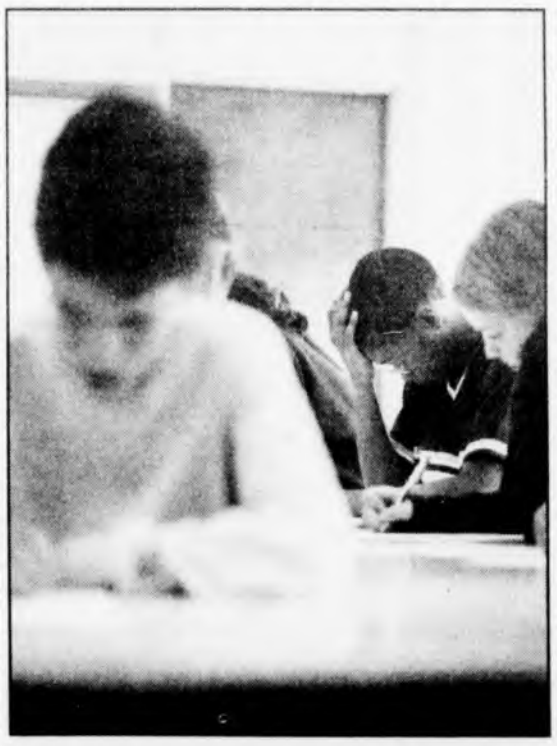
"Can you read the whole sentence?" she asks a first-grader at Shaker Lane School in Littleton. "To-day we had a fire dr-ill," the boy says slowly, after learning how to isolate the sounds of each letter.

ED REFORM: 5 Years Later — CHAPTER 2 —

This reading class, designed by Lesley College in Cambridge, is just one of the tools used by teachers in many of the "most effective" schools identified in a recent study by Robert Gaudet of the University of Massachusetts' Donahue Institute.

Gaudet concluded that Littleton is one of 35 towns where schoolchildren score higher on standardized tests than expected, given the social and economic background of their communities.

"They're not the 'best' schools. They're the most effective schools," Gaudet explained.



What does it mean to be on the list?

"It means students are probably getting something extra from their schools," Gaudet said. "And those schools are more likely to be able to ratchet up and meet any new standards."

Gaudet's study has drawn attention from some of the state's leading education officials who believe his method may be one of the best ways to evaluate schools' progress, as the commonwealth enters the last stages of Education Reform.

His study is particularly important as the state prepares for the first release of scores for each of its 1,700 public schools and for each of the 200,000 students who took the test designed to measure the effects of reform.

"At the statewide level, we haven't figured out what analytical model we're going to use to judge school district performance," said Jim Peyser, a state Board of Education member and executive director of the Pioneer Institute for Public Policy Research. "His [Gaudet's] approach is well tested."

It may also be an answer to the state's need to identify under-performing school districts and to track school performance after the release of the first round of results of the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) tests in late November.

"I think this model could be one of the ways we do that," said state Board of Education Chairman John Silber.

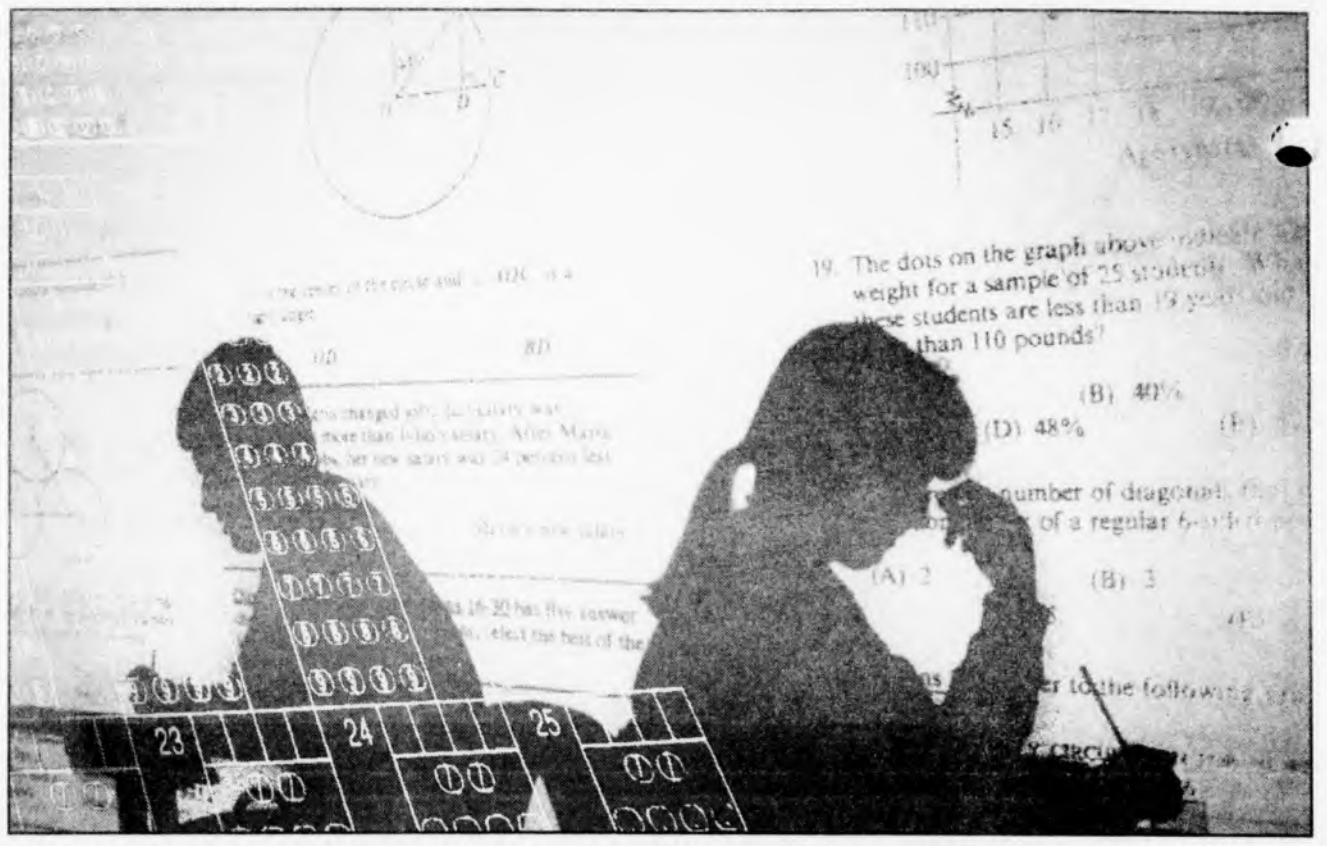
In general, the schools considered the "best" are still those in wealthy towns such as Weston, Cohasset and Marblehead, where students consistently have the highest scores on standardized tests.

What Gaudet calls the most "effective" schools are those where students perform well, not so much because of advantages stemming from their family and community, but because of something special that's being done inside districts.

Measuring success

In each district, Gaudet looked at six factors known to affect school achievement -income, poverty rate, education level of parents, percent of non-English speaking residents, percent of single-parent households and the number of children attending private schools - and predicted how students should score on standardized tests.

"The factors he considers are all highly relevant issues," Silber said, "to judge people not just on the basis of their achievement, but also on how much they have to overcome."



Gaudet found that even some of the most disadvantaged districts in the state - such as Lawrence, Everett and Methuen - scored beyond expectations on past tests. The majority of districts that "add value" to their pupils' education are in middle-income communities, such as Auburn, Dennis and Norwood.

Gaudet likens his study to "measuring the wind," a reference to how much easier it is to set sail with the wind at your back. "Lawrence has got a lot of wind in its face," Gaudet said. "Weston has a lot of wind at its back."

The question is, what are some of the districts with the wind in their face doing to give their students a boost? What can parents look for in their own school system to make sure children are getting the best education?

To find out, Community Newspaper Company surveyed the "most effective" schools identified by Gaudet. The factors they cited:

- An emphasis on reading, particularly programs that identify and assist struggling readers before they reach third grade;
- A strong curriculum that reflects what students face on standardized tests;
- Effective teachers who regularly take meaningful professional development courses that relate directly to the school's curriculum;
- High expectations of student achievement articulated by both parents and educators;
- Parental involvement in school programs that goes beyond bake sales;
- A firm code of discipline to prevent students from stepping out of line;
- Reasonable class size so students can get attention and participate.

"It's not about any one program," said Carolyn D. Wyatt, director of curriculum and staff development for Newton schools. "It's about an expectation of high caliber teaching, and having a very well-prepared, competent teaching staff. And, obviously, a community that supports rigorous academic instruction. We have a formula for success. We build on it year after year."

In Newburport, that formula focuses on keeping class size at 18 students for every teacher in elementary school and 22-to-1 in middle schools. "I think that's very critical when kids are learning basic skills," said Superintendent Kathleen Smith.

In Harvard, students, teachers and parents cite the small town atmosphere as well as a strict disciplinary code as critical components of success. The superintendent sets the tone: he has expelled 11 students in five years - one of the highest disciplinary rates in the state.

"The system has very high expectations for the kids, the staff and the parents," said Karen Byars, a Harvard resident with four children in the school district.

"Discipline is very strong here," said Harvard Superintendent Mihran Keoseian. "That doesn't mean our kids don't get into trouble. But there is very, very little tolerance for inappropriate behavior."

In nearby Littleton, three teachers are devoted to teaching first grade students who have been identified at the bottom of their class in reading. These students get one-on-one instruction from specialists for a half-hour each day for as long as 20 weeks.

"This has really helped improve our third-grade test scores," said Littleton's school superintendent, Vincent J. Franco, of the Reading Recovery program.

Several other towns on Gaudet's list emphasize reading.

"Through the years, we've pretty much stayed with the basics in reading," said Aldo Cecchi, superintendent of the Blackstone-Millville Regional School District.

Teachers in kindergarten through grade 3 at Blackstone-Millville are trained in a particular reading method called, "Project Read," and about 30 teachers in the district are trained in the Wilson Reading Program, which gives one-on-one attention to students from K-12, including those with learning disabilities.

In Woburn, where third graders scored in the top 5 percent statewide on the Iowa reading test this year, the school system has embraced high standards, and worked hard to make sure the school is actually teaching kids the material included in the curriculum guidelines developed under Ed Reform.

"I think we've done a good job of analyzing our weaknesses," said Carl Batchelder, superintendent of schools in Woburn. "If we come across something that is really a great lesson, but not aligned with the curriculum frameworks, we ask teachers to change it."

On Cape Cod, the Dennis-Yarmouth Regional School District Superintendent Michael McCaffrey points to the same Reading Recovery program used in Littleton as well as teachers who are "driven" as reasons for making the most effective school list.

Brookline's assistant superintendent of curriculum and instruction, Claire Jackson, said one of the most critical factors is teaching kids to use English. With about 30 percent of the district's students coming from families whose first language is not English, Brookline's schools pay special attention to developing English skills.

In Lexington, one of the keys to success is professional development of teachers. Last year for instance, they had to learn how to access E-mail and use the Internet. This year, they're learning how to integrate technology into the curriculum.

In North Reading, Superintendent David Troughton underlines the same point. "We also pay a lot of attention to professional development. We have teachers involved in programs throughout the year."

Like others, the district gives teachers an incentive to learn. "We give

WHO IS ROBERT GAUDET?

Robert Gaudet is a founder and former president of the Renaissance Charter School, one of the first charter schools in Massachusetts. He now works as a senior research consultant with the Donahue Institute at the University of Massachusetts/Boston and as a senior fellow at the Appletree Institute in Washington D.C.. His study of school effectiveness began as a doctoral dissertation at University of Massachusetts/Amherst. The Donahue Institute, a public policy think tank, asked Gaudet to take a closer look at the "most effective" school systems to figure out what they're doing right, so that others can follow suit.

credits for taking professional development classes and those credits lead to salary increases," Troughton said. As a result, more than 80 percent of the district's staff members are involved in professional development at any given time.

Community support

Of course, it's critical to have community support.

"Good schools attract people who care about schools," said Franco, Littleton's superintendent. "The support of this community is fantastic."

By a vote of 465 to 27, Town Meeting in Littleton recently decided to spend about $1 million for an architect to design a new high school. "Just about everyone is saying 'yes, do it,' " Franco said.

In short, Gaudet says, that "can do" attitude is a vital ingredient of success.

Which is good news. Much of what the most effective school systems are doing can be replicated in other school systems, he said.

"A town like Cohasset doesn't add much value to a kid's education, but so what?" Gaudet said. "If you're in the top 20 percent, you don't care how effective your schools are if the kids can still get into Harvard. And they can."

With that in mind, he says, his study is most meaningful for towns like Marlborough or Falmouth, where the school can tailor effective programs without spending as much as the schools in wealthier communities like Weston or Wellesley.

It's not how much money a school spends that counts, Gaudet said. It's the way they spend it that really matters.

Silber agreed. "When you have good principals and good teachers you're going to have good schools," he said.

Cohasset schools make 'most advantaged' list with 84 percent of its graduates going on to a four-year college. Students benefit from a student-to-teacher ratio that falls in the top third of commonwealth schools and had a per-pupil expenditure of $7,403 for FY98. Last year's SAT averages were 520 math and 527 verbal.

"I haven't seen the study," said school committee chairman Rick Shea. "But I don't think he's taken into consideration that many of the so-called 'affluent' towns have more commercial property and businesses which makes available to them two tax bases, commercial and residential, from which to generate tax revenue."

That's not the case for Cohasset, which doesn't have much in the way of a commercial tax base and must rely on residents to carry the tax load. Residential tax garners 92.34 percent; commercial sources net 6.02 percent; industrial sources bring in 0.5% of the town's annual tax revenue and only 1 percent comes from personal property.

Currently, Cohasset spends 131 percent over the minimum required for per pupil spending. Over the last five years of the Education Reform Act, state aid per pupil has gone up 61 percent. Weighing the two, it would seem that Cohasset is trying its best on the financial end.

But is Cohasset effective within Gaudet's definition of the word?

"We're in the second year of a two-year trial of block scheduling," said school committee Chairman Rick Shea. "A reason for implementing it was to make better use of the increased amount of instructional time — one of the changes called for by the Education Reform Act. We've had very lively discussions with students, teachers, parents and administrators about pluses and minuses about block-scheduling.

"Another thing we have tried to do in Cohasset is to challenge students by offering varied curriculum and a lot of Advanced Placement courses. Block scheduling offers four 90-minute classes per day with five periods. In the end, the kids are scheduled for 10 courses per year, almost like a college approach. Also, the Advanced Placement courses allow students to accelerate in language, math or whatever they're interested in. It offers students a chance to be challenged if they want to be."

If cost and outcome are to be weighed, block scheduling is effective. According to Shea, it cost Cohasset "nothing" to bring about the program change.

In terms of current returns on the block scheduling changes — is its benefit to many students.

One such student is Tony Bramblett, whose mother Joanne Green is a second-generation Cohasseter.

"We don't have a Jerusalem Road address and our kids aren't in private school," said Green, who can think of many families in town that belie Cohasset's privileged stereotype. "But I think that the changes that principal Curt Collins has brought about through education reform and block scheduling are enormous. My son went from a struggling B sophomore to high honors in his junior and senior year. It's given him a focus and I think it's challenged the kids, in general. I don't think that our students' success is related to money, but to the efforts in the schools."

Indeed, Green hopes that her five-year-old future kindergartner will benefit from some of the cost effective educational changes that Joseph Osgood Elementary School principal Marilee Cantelmo wants to bring to her students.

"I feel that our academic status as a school isn't affected by the affluence of the community, but by my parents and teachers. I don't think that money really plays into that."

— Tony Bramblett, CHS senior

Cantelmo is trying to utilize new methods in teaching at her school, such as a more verbal approach to mathematics; starting children on a foreign language at an earlier age; applying Howard Gardner's theory of multiple intelligence to students; and using open-question essay exams rather than traditional multiple choice or fill-in-the-blank tests.

"Distance learning," which brings an instructor to the classroom via a televised language program may be one answer to the school's need to start kids early on foreign language learning. Current research suggests that children are "wired" to learn a new language most easily in their early years.

Still, it's the quality of instruction on a day-to-day basis that counts most, according to Cantelmo. "We are all accountable for what our students are learning here and at home. Having the children read every night for even 15 minutes builds and reinforces a partnership between school and home. It's all about what we do every day together."

Peer influence, too, plays a role in bringing kids into a better academic mix when it comes to after-school organized sports, committees or other recreational activities.

"Once kids get involved in the high school, sometimes in non-academic ways like after-school programs, they get put into contact with kids that are academically oriented and it gives them positive role models," said Shea, the school committee chairman. "The possibility of aspiring to something they might not have thought themselves capable of can do well for them."

According to Shea, the arts and sports have been well supported by the school and community. The middle school has recently initiated a no-cut policy which has lessened the number of kids who dropped out of the program by the ninth grade.

Senior Megan Connolly, who hopes to attend Catholic University in Washington, DC because the student-to-teacher ratio there reminds her of Cohasset schools, credits sports and other extra-curricular activities with helping her be a more focused student. "I do three seasons of sports," she said. "Participating in sports and other school-related activities helps me manage my time much more."

Connolly doesn't "feel an enormous amount of pressure" from living in a socioeconomically successful home or town. "I put pressure on myself to do well," she said. "I live up to my own expectations and I set high standards for myself so that I can do what I need to do. I don't compare myself with others."

Faculty members have been very helpful to Connolly, who has been able to go in to meet with teachers, when needed, for extra help. She also credits her family with strengthening the home-school connection.

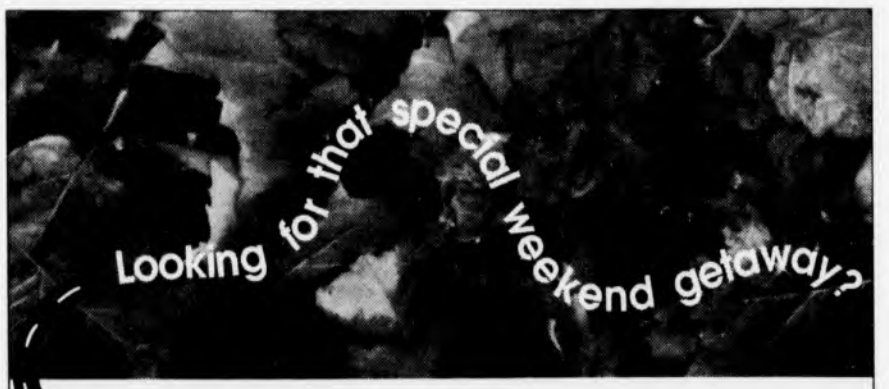
"Our faculty is amazing," she said. "We have such a good faculty of teachers. As far as my parents go, they have always been supportive and there for me if I run into any problems."

Tony Bramblett, a senior, agrees that it's the combination of school and home support in accomplishing scholastic goals, and not the affluence of the community, that creates Cohasset's educational success.

"I feel that our academic status as a school isn't affected by the affluence of the community, but by my parents and teachers," he said. "I don't think that money really plays into that. Our school doesn't have the biggest budget in the area. Effective teaching is why the scores are higher in Cohasset. We're very lucky to have the teachers we have and in my case, my mother always encouraged me. I think it's the school and home influence that counts.

"I guess living in an affluent community will affect you in some respects," admitted Bramblett. "You do look around and see doctors, lawyers and CEOs and those are your role models whereas maybe in a less affluent town, you won't see that sort of person as frequently. But still, there's no direct influence in terms of wealth. The money doesn't come to us."

Cohasset's unique position as a small town with little industry or commerce puts a tremendous financial pressure on a small population to finance their school's upkeep.



"I think Cohasset doesn't benefit from a lot of state moneys because of our seeming affluence," said Betsy Connolly, Megan Connolly's mother. "We don't have resources for creating new programs and the town is our primary resource for financing education which places an even greater burden on the sizable retired population. But other than that, the fact is that the kids are now in school for a longer day, due to the Act, and more teachers are learning through professional development about the new curriculum frameworks under Education Reform. Soon it will be that each community's curriculum will be the same as the next. But what will always make the difference here is the quality of the teachers, who are working diligently to support the kids during the school hours, and what support the kids receive at home. I'd say that makes for an effective school system."

Board wants MBTA to drop drop-off plan

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The town's railroad mitigation committee wants the MBTA to abandon its plan to allow pedestrian access to the Cohasset train station from North Main Street near Cedar Street.

Even though the T has agreed not to construct an actual drop-off on North Main Street where cars could pull over to wait, an indentation remains in the design plans, providing an opening for pedestrians to go through to cross the tracks.

"We don't want that curve there because people will use it," said Selectman Diane Sullivan, who sits on the mitigation committee. "The T said that they would eliminate the official opening there when we let them know that we didn't want the drop-off there. The next thing we see is that the cut-out is still there."

Sullivan said the safety issue is paramount.

"We only want people to access the tracks at railroad crossings — and this is not at a railroad crossing. We only want pedestrian access where there is a gate in place," she said.

At a recent meeting, Greenbush Mitigation Committee members were frustrated by the T's latest correspondence, placing liability squarely on the town for safety repercussions resulting from not having a proper pedestrian drop-off off North Main Street. The station is slated for Rt. 3A at the site of the old skating rink (where Barry Waste Recycling is now located) so pedestrians from N. Main Street could access the station from the other side.

"If the town were the sole designer of this drop-off and someone were injured there, we would be responsible for, at most, $5,000," said mitigation committee Chairman Tom Gruber. "The T was trying to scare us into thinking that onerous things would happen if we ruled out the drop-off, but it's all puffery on their part." Town counsel replied to the T explaining the town's liability limits, Gruber said.

Conservation commission representative Michael Dick was adamant about whose responsibility the safety issue is.

"What we need to say back to them is, 'it's your design and your railroad and you are responsible," he said at the meeting.

Initially, committee members were concerned that people would drive down, make their drop off, do a U-turn and head back into town," explained Gruber about the stretch of road off N. Main Street near the proposed drop-off.

Members have said that the loop would cause a bottleneck effect going out of Cohasset.

"That area is really a thoroughfare, an egress to Hingham and Hull," said Gruber. "It's a very busy street. Besides, there would have been about 20 to 30 people waiting around near the two to three parking spaces there (at the proposed drop-off)."

At a recent meeting, Greenbush Mitigation Committee members were frustrated by the T's latest correspondence, placing liability squarely on the town for safety repercussions resulting from not having a proper pedestrian drop-off off North Main Street.

In the past, committee members have also discussed bike and pedestrian paths. According to Sullivan, the T had offered to help with building the paths, but they would have to cross from one side of the tracks to another, depending on the wetlands there. "We thought, that's not such a fancy idea, either," said Sullivan. "I wouldn't want to be walking there when a train passes."

Adding to the members' aggravation is that they don't expect much to be accomplished prior to the election, especially with the resignation last month of Secretary Trudy Coxe of the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs.

"I see a rudderless ship," said Gruber.

That lack of leadership could create a problem for last month's tri-town letter addressed to Coxe and signed unanimously by the boards of selectmen in Hingham and Scituate and three out of five Cohasset selectmen. (Saying its contents went beyond the intended scope when the towns joined efforts, Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris and Sullivan refused to sign the letter because it asked that alternatives to the train be studied). The letter asked for a revision of the T's five-year-old environmental impact report to include alternatives and that would be more in keeping with recent developments in technology.

Sullivan agrees that the election will slow a resolution of the issue.

"At the state level, Cellucci is committed to the Greenbush restoration because his predecessor Weld was," she said. "But I don't know about Harshbarger. I think people feel that because there will be an election, the T will back off for now-but we won't. Still, there's not a lot we can do until we see how the administration will go."

Stickers defeat Hull for first time in decade

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Sometimes you win. Sometimes you lose. And once in every 10 years you get to beat Hull in field hockey.

It happened Monday night on the field at the coldest place on earth, also known as Hull Gut, when Melissa Pyform scored for the second time in the half (and the year) off a feed from Andi Shaughnessy and Jenn Mehan with 3:33 left in the game to give the Skippers a 3-2 win.

Not only was this the first time Cohasset has beaten Hull on the field hockey pitch in a decade, they did it at one of the toughest places you are ever going to play.

CHS head coach Debbie Bostwick was sufficiently enthused after the win.

"The girls just played their hearts out from the first whistle to the last one," said Bostwick. "You couldn't ask for anything more from a team. They played outstanding."

After making the tourney for the first time in three years last season, the 7-8-1 squad fell just one point short of that goal this season.

All in all, said Bostwick, there is no way that this season could be considered a failure because they didn't make it back to post season play.

Losing a good group of players to graduation, Bostwick said she started the season back in August with "a core group of about five players" and no JV team for the younger players to learn their craft.

Bostwick decided to keep the inexperienced players with the varsity team, giving them an opportunity at game time when she was able. The young legs would pay off at times this season and the varsity experience cannot help but make a better player down the line.

"Our Team#2 deserves a lot of credit for what they did this season," said Bostwick. "They'll be heard from in the coming years."

One of the younger players being heard from right now is the center forward, Andi Shaughnessy, who was the only sophomore named to the South Shore League All-Star team. Joining her in the honor were the senior co-captains, center fullback Katie Devine and center halfback Megan Connolly

Missing the tourney by a point was a source of inspiration for Bostwick to her team for the Hull game.

"I told them at halftime that we needed to give everyone something to remember this season by," said the coach. "Beating Hull fills that need pretty well."

Cohasset's Maggie O'Connor, with an assist to Kelly Devine, opened up the scoring 23 minutes into the game off a corner hit.

Hull would tie the game shortly be-

Homecoming win serves the Skippers well

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Led by a corps of pumped-up seniors, the Cohasset Skippers outclassed the Nauset Warriors Saturday by a score of 22-14. Cohasset's Homecoming victory upped their record to 3-3, a tidy .500 winning percentage to take into the home stretch.

The story of the game, again, was Cohasset's Thunder and Lightning offensive scheme. Daniel Trowers and Justin Golden established their respective styles early, but Cohasset was forced to punt in its first two series. On the defensive side of the ball, linebackers Liam O'Donnell and Adam Sasso excelled, along with defensive end Luke Caldwell. The Skipper defense forced Nauset to punt early and often. When Greg Parkinson snagged the first of two fumble recoveries, the offense took over at its own 36-yard line.

It did not take long for the Skippers to find paydirt. QB Jamie DeMichele scrambled for five yards, which set up Trowers' 59-yard scoring dash, his ninth TD run of the season. Golden bulled through the line with the two-point conversion.

On the ensuing kick-off, Greg Taylor pulled down the returner and plays like O'Donnell's backfield penetration forced another Nauset punt. Trowers returned the kick to the Warrior 45.

Three carries by Trowers gained a Skipper first. Then, facing a heavy pass rush, DeMichele maintained his cool and launched a TD pass to sophomore Brian Krupczak in the end zone. Senior defensive back Ben Roine picked off a Nauset pass just prior to halftime and the Skippers clutched a 14-0 edge at the break.

From a Cohasset standpoint, the third quarter was nothing special. Highlights included a 50-yard punt from junior Craig Parker, a joint sack by Alex Russell and Greg Parkinson and a backfield tackle by Ronan Buick. But Nauset showed their mettle and punched through for a touchdown. The extra point was blocked by Caldwell, leaving Nauset in an eight-point deficit.

Trowers' runback once again gave CHS solid field position, this time at their own 45. Despite solid runs by Golden, the Boys in Blue couldn't reach the first down marker and were forced to punt. Parkinson got the ball back by pouncing on the pigskin for the second time that afternoon and the home team was off and running, literally.

Golden charged for 11 yards then gained a key first down on fourth and two. Trowers took over from there, traipsing in from 30 yards out for this 10th touchdown of the year, leaving him behind only Norwell's Brian Fabrizio in the South Shore League.

DeMichele capped the score with a vicious pump fake, then hustled into the end zone untouched to give Cohasset a 22-6 lead. A beautiful 18-yard touch pass gave Nauset its second TD, making it 22-12, but Golden recovered the onsides kick and the game was in the bag.

When asked whether or not he was pleased with his squad's performance, Coach Rolfe replied, "Other than the third quarter, yes. We were in a position where if we had played the second half like the first, maybe

Skippers split a pair with the Mustangs

It was one up and one down as the Skippers approached the finish of their home soccer season Monday night against Randolph.

The boys fell to defeat 3-1 while the Lady Skippers rode two goals from sophomore forward Catherine Flaherty to a 2-0 victory.

The two goals, Flaherty's first scores on the season, leap-frogged her to the top of the scoring charts for the Skippers. A number of other players had been tied for the scoring lead with one goal on the year.

"If we had played as well as we did tonight all year long, we'd be looking at the tourney. There's not too much bad you can say about how we played tonight."
DEBBIE BEAL

"You could she wanted to get the third goal real bad and her teammates wanted to see her get it. She actually had another one but it was called back (offsides)," said Beal. "A hat trick would have been perfect for these kids and a great accomplishment for Catherine considering the trouble we've had scoring goals this season."

The Skippers gave their loyal fans a treat in the girls game, totally dominating a young Randolph team on the offensive end while only allowing one shot each on junior Jessie Zerendow and freshman Skyler Ralston, who shared the

All-Star trio shines bright for CHS

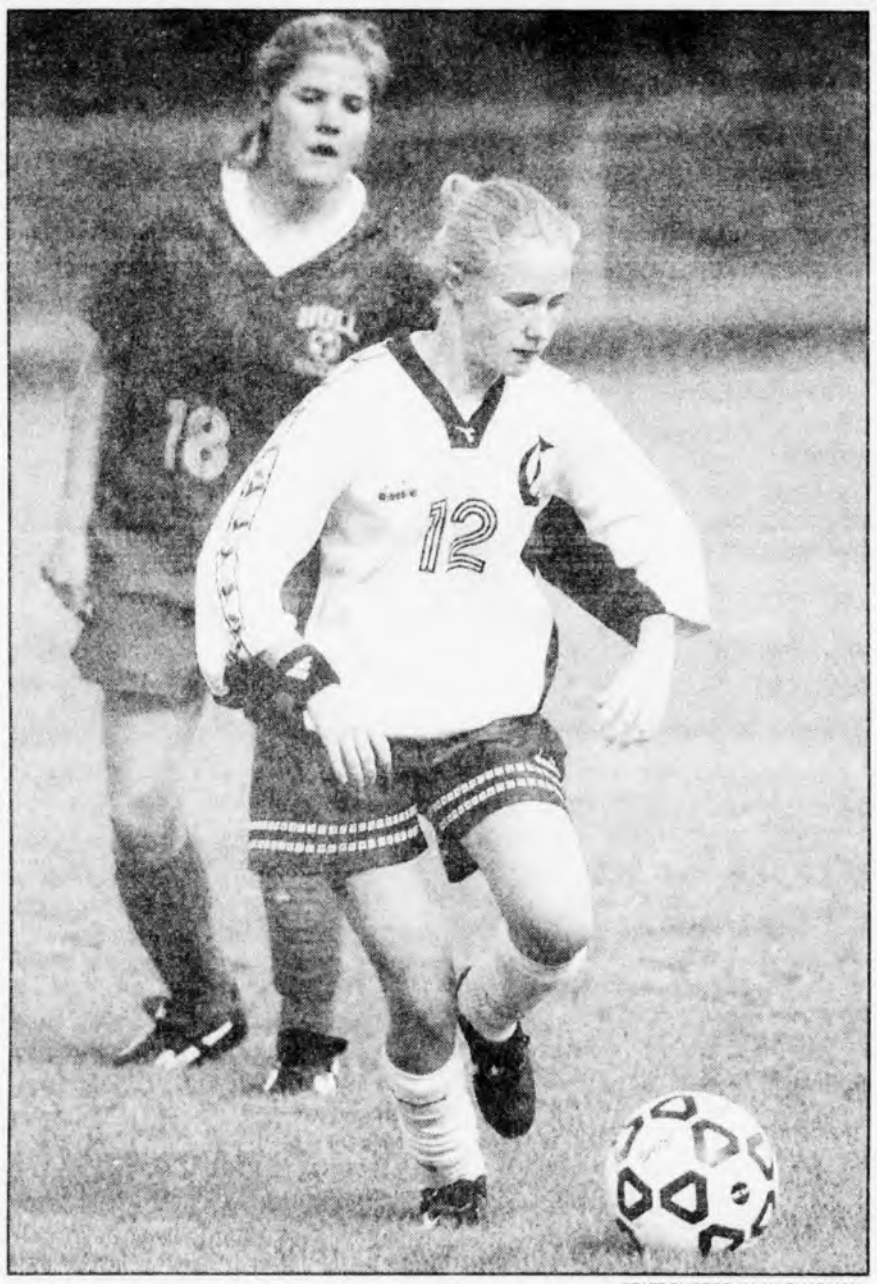
Everybody run, the Homecoming Queen's got a gun. A gun for a kicking leg, that is, and it's one of the reasons that CHS senior Alyssa McNamara was named to the South Shore League All-Star team this week along with her teammate, junior midfielder Eileen Ridge.

Leading scorer Steve Sceery will represent the boys' team at the event.

All three players are first time selections for the game, which we be played at Mashpee High School this Sunday. The girls play at 3 p.m. and the boys game is scheduled for 5 p.m.

In addition, the SSL teams gave the sportsmanship award to the Lady Skippers



Sceery, a senior who wants to go to Harvard next fall, insists he shouldn't be alone on the team. According to him there should be a couple of other Skippers making the trip to Mashpee.

"There's no doubt that Kevin DeVito (a junior goaltender) is an All-Star, as well the captains (Mark Equi and Andrew Laney," said Sceery. "I'm honored to be chosen, but they should be going to the game with me. Everybody worked hard on this team, but I'm the lucky one who gets to go to the All-Star game."

The girls were equally as honored by the selection.

"I'm really happy that someone else from the team is going too," said McNamara, who started the year as a sweeper before being moved up to center forward by coach Debbie Beal at mid-season to give the team a little more offensive punch.

Sceery has also dabbled in hockey and tennis as well at the high school, but it's soccer that's number one in his heart.

He's been on the varsity team since midway through his sophomore year.

Alyssa McNamara

"This is where I have the most fun," said Sceery, who led the team with six goals this season. "This group (11 seniors) has been playing soccer together since we were in the fourth grade. That's the best part about all of this. I get to go out there and doing something I like with a bunch of friends."

As for the ladies, it really was somewhat of a busy weekend for McNamara, a three-sport athlete who also excels on the basketball court in the winter and burns up the track each string.

Not only was she named an all-star, but she was also crowned the Homecoming Queen on Saturday afternoon.

"I thought that Eileen would make the all-star team, but I was surprised when they told me that I had made it as well," said McNamara, whose ranked near the top of her class. "It should be a fun time."

"I didn't expect to make the team at all," said Ridge, who scored the goal in a 1-1 tie against Hull earlier this season. "I was surprised when they told me I'd been selected."

Although they may be humble, Beal said both McNamara and Ridge earned their spots on the all-star squad.

"Eileen is just as natural a soccer player as you are going to see," said Beal. "She's got tremendous ball control skills. She's small and quick and has really fast feet. She can drop a pass from either foot right on a dime."

On McNamara, Beal said there were obvious qualities as both a soccer player and as a leader.

"Alyssa really stepped up from the first day of practice as a leader on this team," said Beal. "The team really looked to her and respected Alyssa.

"On the field she is absolutely relentless every second of the game. Off the field, you will not find a nicer kid that Alyssa."

shut-out win.

"If we had played as well as we did tonight all year long, we'd be looking at the tourney," said coach Debbie Beal. "There's not too much bad you can say about how we played tonight."

Their counterparts were not as lucky on this evening, giving up goals in the first two minutes and the last two minutes in the loss.

In between the two goals they played with the Mustangs step for step even as three of their top players were on the sideline in street clothes-Ben Peterson, Mike Baird and Dennis Rooney.

After Randolph's junior captain Peter Niedzwiecki put his team up early in the game, some pure hustle from leading scorer and South Shore League all-star Steve Sceery tied the game up early in the second half.

The senior forward scored off an attempted clear by the Randolph keeper. Rushing towards the goalie, the kick deflected off a leaping Sceery's backside and bounced into the open net.

The goal was Sceery's sixth of the season.

Ten minutes later Kerry Le Fook would give Randolph the lead again when he put a shot past CHS keeper Kevin Devito, who made a number of sparkling saves in the game.

The girls would have more luck against the Mustangs, keeping the pressure in the offensive end all game long on their way to their third win of the year.

"Usually it's our defense that's dragging at the end of the game. Today it was our forwards that needed to come out for a rest. I think I like it better this way," said Beal with a laugh. "The girls just played a tremendous game. They hustled and they played smart. The passing was right on target and we controlled the game.

"In many ways this was our best game of the season."

fore halftime.

Pyform would score her first of the season early in the second half, but the Pirates came right back to knot the game again before Pyform's second score sealed the deal in the waning moments of the contest, but not before a couple corner hits as time was running out gave Cohasset a decent scare.

"Top to bottom, the win was a total team effort," said Bostwick, praising the work of her goalkeepers Melissa Rosano and Kristen Considine, as well as sweeper Jill Magner and defenders Ashley Ulmer, Jackie Goines, Morgan Hurley and Kelly Lordan. "We marked their top players very well and kept the ball rolling toward their end of the field."

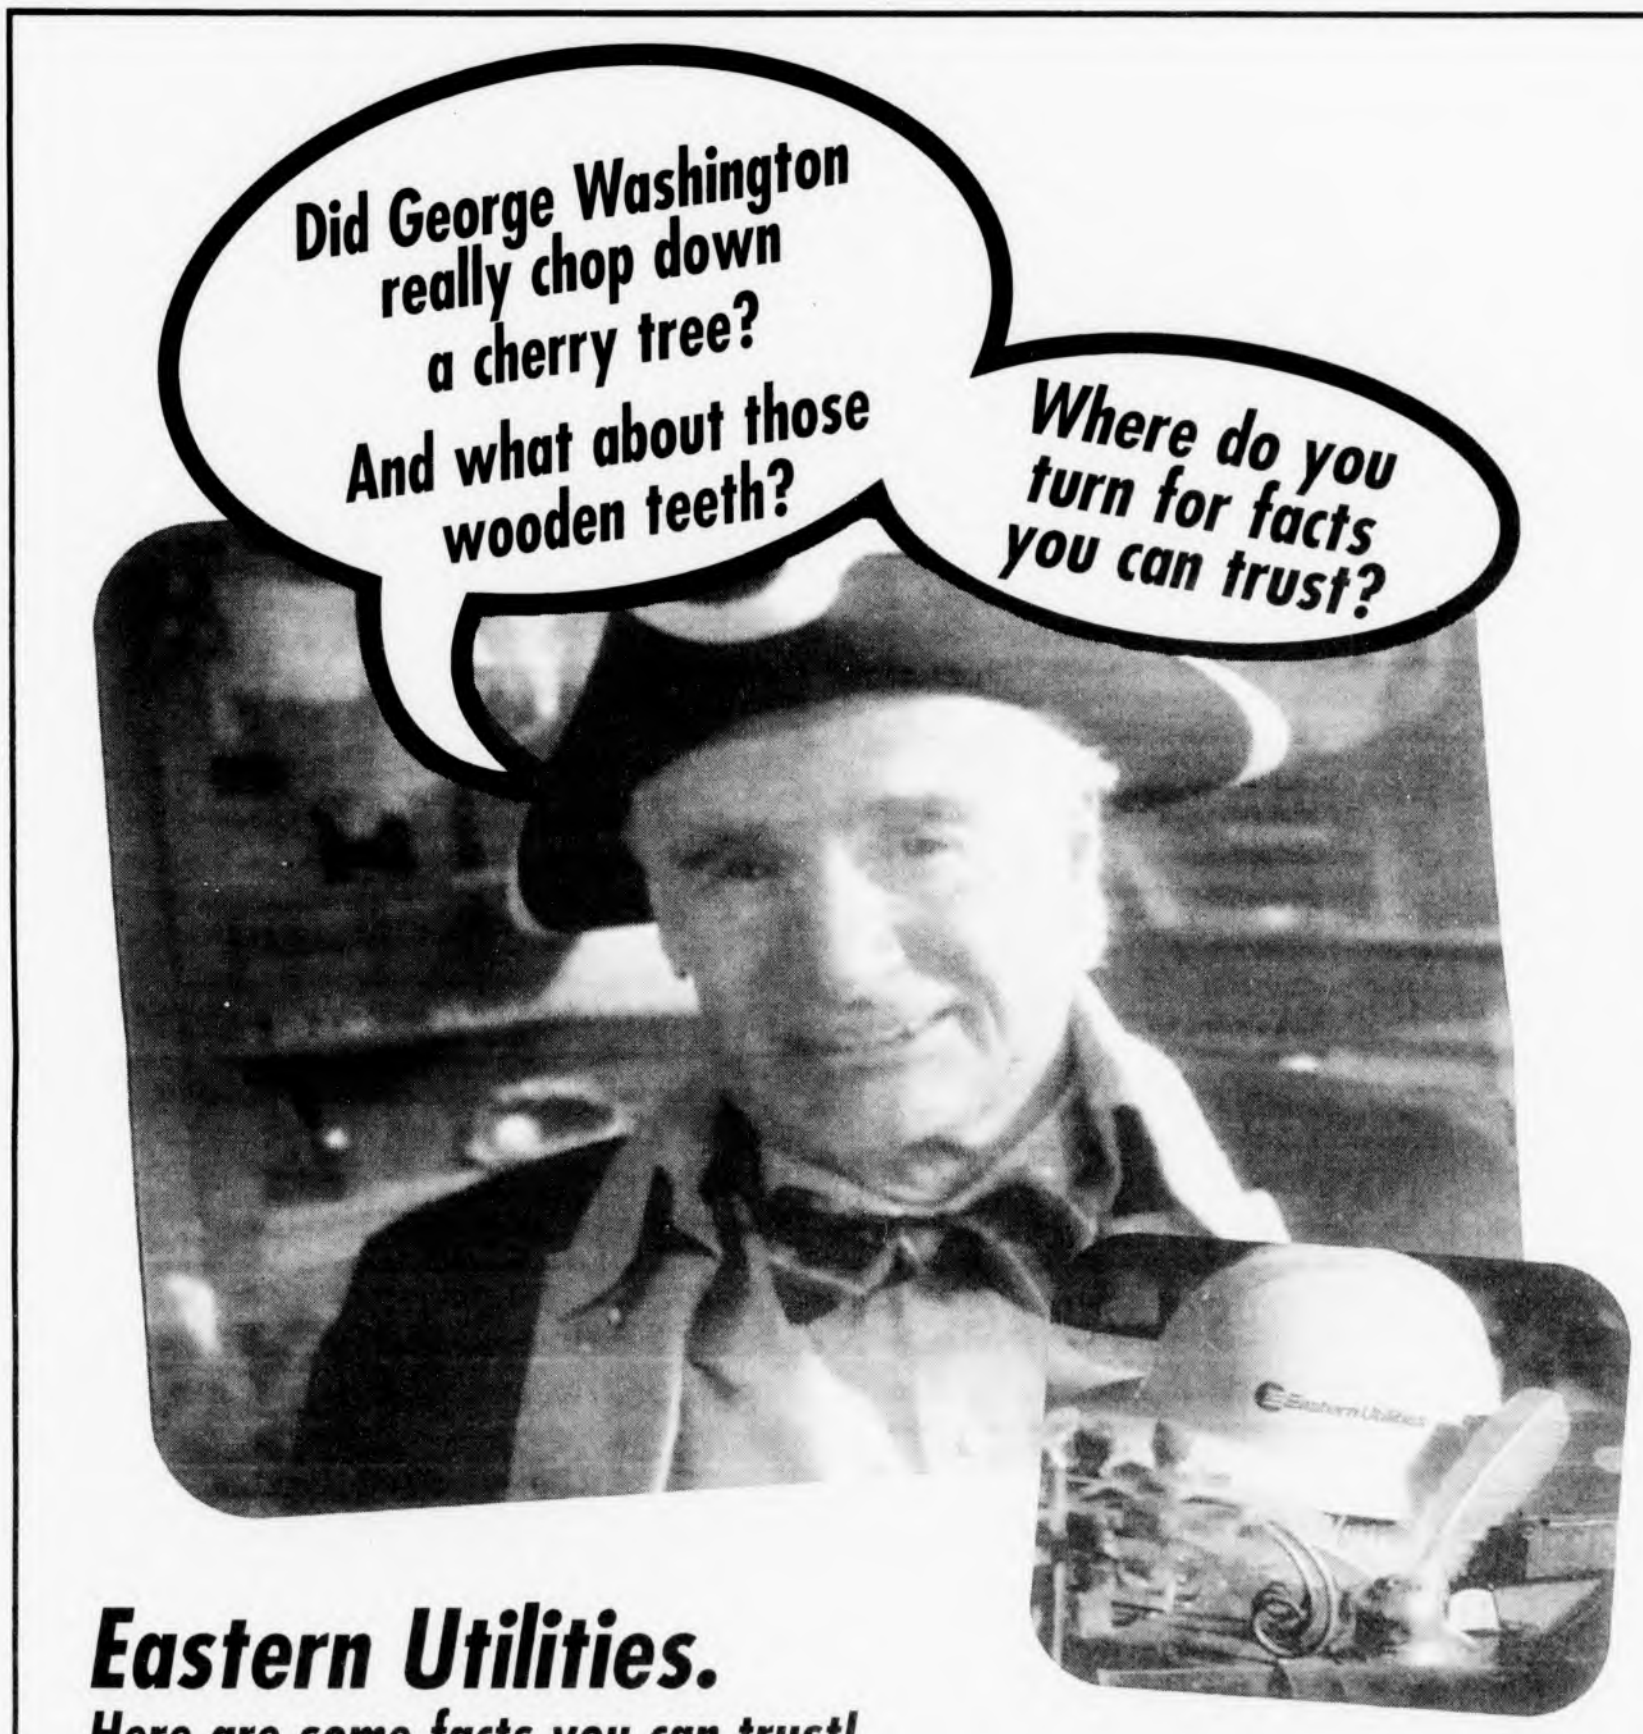
Fitness Center available at CHS for public

Through the auspices of Cohasset High School and Dr. Mike Gill of the Health Education Department; CHS has a commercial quality fitness center.

CHS is interested in making this facility available to all residents at a nominal fee charge which cannot be determined until we have an idea of how many residents might have interest utilizing the facility. If you feel that you or members of your family might be interested in using the CHS gym, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-4109 right away.



The Rec. Dept. would like to know approximately how many residents would utilize the facility if they were able to keep it open during evening and weekend hours.

The facility includes about $75,000 worth of equipment consisting of a variety strength building equipment, two treadmills, two stairmasters, five stationary bikes and a stairmaster free-runner all of commercial quality.

The nominal fee charge would be employed to provide supervision during hours of operation, as well as revenue dedicated towards maintenance and upkeep of the equipment

The fitness center, located in the old study hall room, is currently uti-

High school hockey training clinic

The Rockland Rink will hold the 10th annual high school hockey training clinic beginning Nov. 16. The purpose is to offer high school hockey players the opportunity to get in shape for the high school season.

The guest instructors will include Bob Sylvia, Quincy High School; Jim Sylvia, Hanover High School; Barry Parker, Rockland High School; Jack Crowley, Marshfield High School; and other area coaches.

The clinic is open to all area high school players (ages 14 to 18.) The cost is $100 per player. Applications may be obtained at the Rockland rink.

Applications will not be accepted by phone.

For additional information, call Fred Isleib at (781) 871-0547.

Indoor golf lesson registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for beginner level instruction in golf, to be taught by golf pro, Dan Neary. Classes are held Thursday evenings at the Cushing Elementary School gym, Scituate, beginning Nov. 5.

Lessons are five weeks in duration, meeting one hour weekly at a cost of $65 per person.

Classes are limited to eight people and registrations are accepted on a first enrolled basis.

Should you require the use of golf clubs for the classes please indicate this at the time of your registration and you will be loaned clubs free of charge.

Openings remain in the 7 p.m. and the 8 p.m. classes.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 383-4109.

Free sports websites available

The Cohasset Mariner and Town Online, the online service of the Community Newspaper Company (CNC), are offering free web sites to all high school, youth and recreation sports organizations and teams.

CNC will provide the web site and train organization representatives in web page design and building, using self-publishing internet software that is acessible from any computer. Most people only need one 2 1/2-hour training session to get the hang of it. There are no hidden fees and no catches.

Each group and team will build and maintain its own site. Post game results, schedules, a calendar of events, bulletin board, lists of officials and team rosters, photos and/or directions to fields. Coming very soon - each group will have the capability of holding its own online chats.

This is a great way for sports teams and organizations to get their results and message to the public using the web through Town Online.

The program is available to all youth, adult, recreational and high school sports teams and organizations. Even groups who already have websites are invited to join in and be a part of a growing web network that receives over 1.5 million hits a month...and growing.

For more information on this exciting new program, contact Wayne Braverman at (781) 433-7842, or email wbraverman@cnc.com.

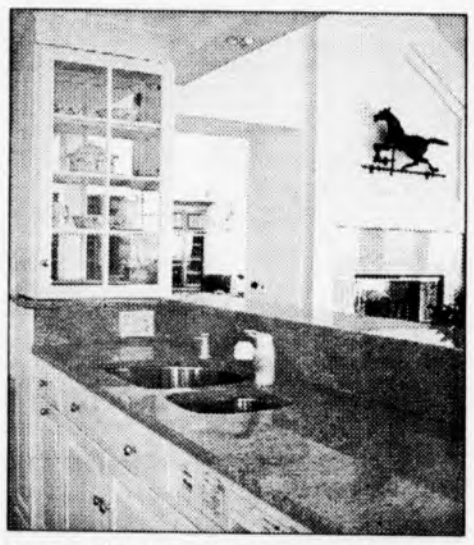
the game would've been over going into the fourth quarter. But, you're always happy when you win."

Rolfe mentioned the play of offensive lineman John Considine as a highlight. Indeed, Considine's hook blocks left Trowers open lanes on the outside all game long.

Combined with the talent of his four linemates, including center John-Paul Laugelle and tackle Craig Davis, Considine helps provide a formidable line for Cohasset.



The offensive line and the rest of the team head to Charlestown Friday to play a 3 p.m. game.

Hitting all the pubs

By Stuart Green
CORRESPONDENT

It's not how it used to be. But that's OK.

When Rafferty's Pub first began its annual road race in 1984, the crowd had logged some pretty grueling miles before it ever made it to the starting line.

The pack in those days was a pretty serious one.

These days, many still look for PR's and such. But others just head out to take part in an event.

"The running demographics have changed," said Race Director Peter Noyes, who helped get the race off the ground in '84.

"Fifteen years ago, the only people to run a race were people who were pretty serious, and in road runner's clubs.

"(Today) we get a lot of people who (find) it challenging to cover five miles."

As if to underscore that fact, a check of previous winners shows that the race's first winner still owns the course record.

When John Madden cracked the finish line in 24:31, few could have suspected that that time would stand the race of time. But it has.

A great blend of serious runners and weekend joggers again will converge when the 15th annual Rafferty Pub five-mile road race begins on Sunday at noon.

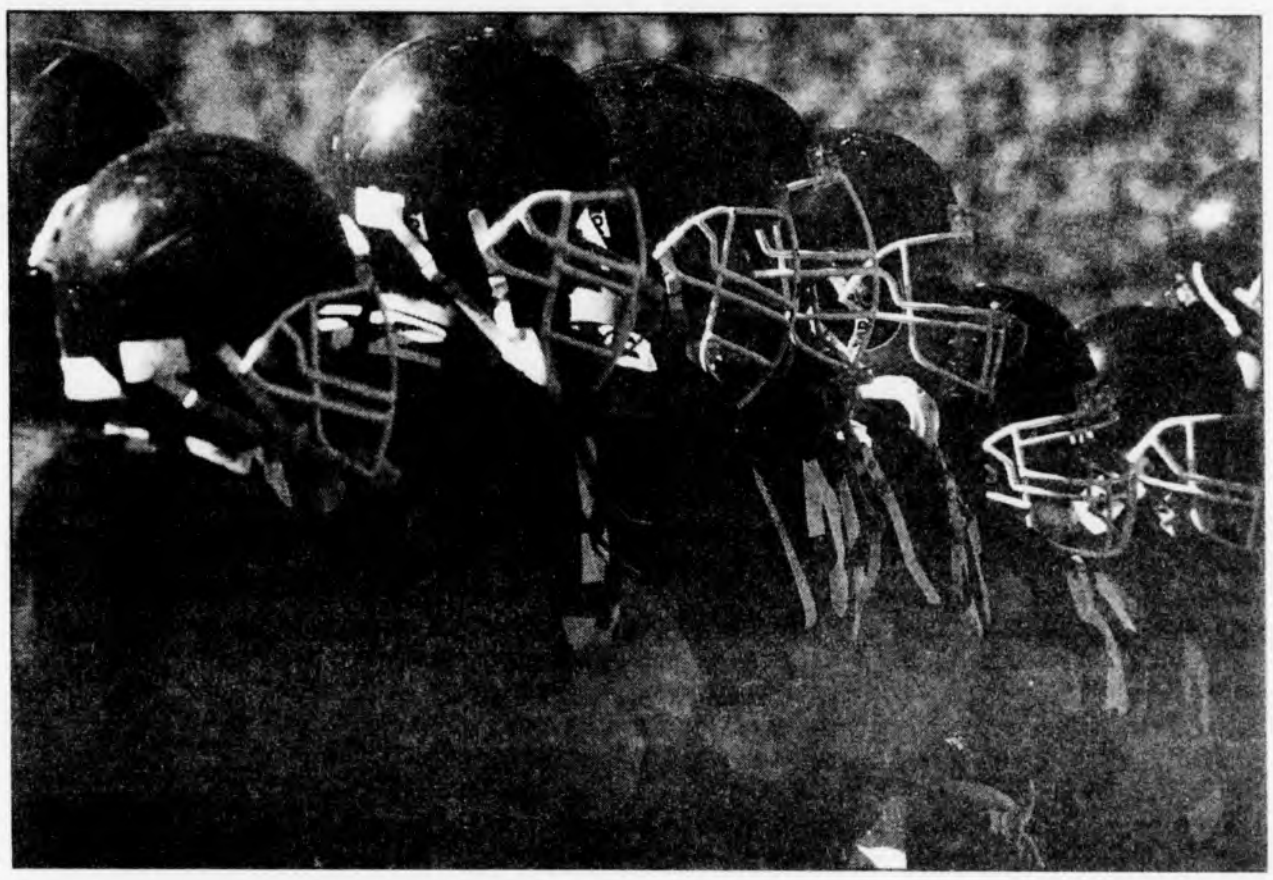
The race is full of tradition - from the get-together at Rafferty's in the Marshfield Shopping Plaza after the race (with chilli and beer) t o the starting time. The noon hour, a little on the late side in racing circles, originally was scheduled because it would not interfere with church services (nearby Congregational Church holds services at 10:30 a.m.).

No thoughts were given to traffic from stores, because that was in an era before the Blue Laws were repealed. Now, with the stores opened, things do get a little hectic.

If nothing else, it certainly gets crowded. The race has grown from its birth when about 150 runners took part. Last year, some 400 runners legged out the challenging out-and-back course on Webster Street, with half of the runners were Marshfield's own.

This year, however, there could be an even bigger pack. The race is the final event in the six-part Pub Series, with cross-country scoring kept throughout the season. Pub predecessors included Doyles in Jamaica Plain, Eagle Brook Saloon in Norfolk, Khoury's in Somerville, the Brew Run in Brewster, and the Lasting Room Pub in Haverhill. Awards will be presented to the top runners, and a commemorative keepsake will be given to all who have finished the six races.

"It's great for us," Noyes said. "We didn't pay anything for it, and we get free publicity."



The race is run for the benefit of the Marshfield High School track and cross-country teams. Coach Ed Ryan and the high school runners assist at the water stop at the turn-around on Webster Street.

Many runners do like the idea of an out-and-back course.

"If you're faster," Noyes said, "you can see the people behind you. If you're in the middle of the pack, you can see the leaders come back."

Noyes, who runs the race with his wife, Bernadette (the '85 and '86 women's winner), realizes that the race will disrupt traffic. The street isn't officially closed, but drivers should expect slow-downs.

Five-time winner John Noland, a Kingston resident who used to live in Marshfield, won last year's race in 26:09. Michelle Fobert was the first woman to cross in 31:20.

National Hispanic recognition goes to local student

Susana Candia, a member of the senior class at Cohasset Middle-High School, has been recognized as a Scholar Finalist in the National Hispanic Recognition Program, as announced by Principal Curtis S. Collins Jr.

The National Hispanic Recognition Program is a College Board program that provides national recognition of the exceptional academic achievements of Hispanic high school seniors, and identifies academically well-prepared Hispanic high school seniors for post-secondary institutions.

Students enter the program by taking the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarships Qualifying Test as high school juniors, and by identifying themselves as Hispanic. From more than 150,000 students nationwide, the 4,000 highest-scoring students are initially identified as semifinalists. Based on further evidence of their academic achievement, a select group of 3,000 students are recognized as program finalists. Susana is among these 3,000 Hispanic students who have been recognized as Scholar Finalist in the recognition program.

The names of all finalists are listed on a roster of outstanding Hispanic students, which has been released to colleges and universities to encourage them to seek out these talented Hispanic students as potential candidates for admission.

Joint drama production tonight at high school

Cohasset High School will present an international theatre production Thursday, Oct. 29, when students from England's Southend High School for Girls and Cohasset High School take the stage together in "A Small Town," a collage of inter-related monologues describing life in a village that might have been in either the United States or England during the end of the last millennium or beginning of the present one. Each of the short speeches offers a candid glimpse of the life of a resident from this mythical village, as he or she reflects upon a life of joy or sorrow, contentment or horror, love or hate, companionship or loneliness.

Yasmeen Ahmed, Victoria Negus, Colette Newbury, Claire Polley, Joanne Poole and Nicole Trask (Lower Sixth Form students) are here as part of a student exchange resulting from Cohasset Drama Director Ron Emmons' tenure as a Fulbright Exchange Teacher at the school on the Thames River estuary in the county of Essex, England. Accompanying the students are Emmons' former exchange partner, Nigel Cracknell; the Southend drama director, Corinne Taylor, and her husband; and the head of Sixth Form at Southend, Fiona Brierley. Cohasset hosts for the students are the Gardner, Lovallo, Nicynski, O'Hayre and Perkinson families.

Cohasset students joining with the Southend girls in the performance are Alexandra D'Urso, Jordan Fiore, Grace Gardner, Elizabeth Ingber, Bill Kearney, Ryan Long, Pat Murphy, Ron Nicynski, Jim O'Sullivan, Stephanie Perkinson, Steve Reynolds and Ashley Ulmer.

"A Small Town" will have only one performance Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Cohasset High School auditorium. On Friday, the students will begin their journey back to the UK. Proceeds from the show will help fund the exchange that will see Cohasset students going to Southend in April. Tickets will be sold only at the door beginning one-half hour before the show.

Appalachia Service Project Thanksgiving pie sale

The Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project, community student volunteers engaged in a home repair/home building ministry serving Central Appalachia, will once again be baking homemade pies and breads for its Thanksgiving fund-raiser.

The Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project Volunteers will bake apple, pumpkin, mincemeat and pecan pies as well a cranberry, pumpkin, and lemon poppy seed bread. The price of the bread is $5 per loaf, while the price of the pies is $8 for the apple, pumpkin and mincemeat.

Order forms will be available from the students and adults preparing for next summer's trip, at local churches, or by calling the Second Congregational Church at 383-0345. Order deadline is Wednesday, Nov. 18. The pies and breads will be available for pick-up on Sunday, Nov. 22 from 11 a.m. - 1 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church, or can be delivered that afternoon.

Arts and crafts programs

The Cohasset Recreation Department holds registration for various arts and crafts programs for children age 4 through grade 6, to be taught by Helen Babis-Licare.

Sessions are four weeks in duration, costing $40 per child, which covers the costs of supplies, materials and instruction for four weeks. Classes are scheduled to begin the week of Nov. 16. Osgood and Deer Hill students may stay after school for the programs. Grade K-3 Osgood children are picked up at 5 p.m. at Osgood School, Deer Hill, grades 4, 5 and 6 children are picked up at Deer Hill School at 4:30 p.m. and age 4 and 5 participants will meet at Osgood School from 3:30 to 5 p.m.

MONDAYS: Grades K+1 Osgood 3 to 5 p.m., Nov. 16 through Dec. 7.

TUESDAYS: Grades 2+3 Osgood 3 to 5 p.m., Nov. 17 through Dec. 8.

WEDNESDAYS: Ages 4+5 Osgood 3:30 to 5 p.m., Nov. 18 through Dec. 9.

FRIDAYS: Grades 4, 5+6 Deer Hill 2:30 to 4:30 p.m., Nov. 20 through Dec. 11.

New sessions will begin Jan. 19 through Feb. 12, 1999.

To register, come to the Cohasset Recreation office prior to Friday, Nov. 13, 1st floor, Town Hall.

Swing dance lessons

Registrations are currently being accepted at the recreation office and Cohasset High School for beginner swing dance lessons to be taught by the Fred Astaire Dance Studio at Cohasset Town Hall.

Class will be held each Wednesday afternoon, from 4:30 to 5:15 p.m., from Nov. 11 through Dec. 16, in the town hall auditorium. The fee for the six-week session is $30 per person.

Register at the Cohasset Recreation office, first floor town hall, or forms will be made available at the high school. Forms and checks should be made payable to: Town of Cohasset, and must be returned to the recreation office prior to Monday, Nov. 2.

Toys for tots donations sought

Toys for Tots helps brighten a needy child's Christmas. If you would like to donate a new, unwrapped toy, bring your donation to Atlantic Business Service, 809c Country Way, North Scituate, near the Cohasset line. Toys will be accepted from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Friday, until Nov. 19. The toys will be delivered to the Marines for distribution Nov. 20. If you have any questions, call Michael Barilaro at (617) 544-3888.

Jingle Bell Walk is Nov. 27

The Fifth Jingle Bell Walk will take place on Friday, Nov. 27 (rain date Nov. 28). Join the festivities beginning at 2 p.m. as Mr. and Mrs. Claus arrive at Cohasset Harbor by lobster boat and join in the parade to the Community Center for songs, cookies and punch. The Bells of St. Stephen's Carillon will ring and the bell tower will be open to the public. Later, there will be a gathering on the common for lighting the Luminaria and tree, music and hayrides.

New from the Music Studio of Joan Jensen

Joan Jensen, of Howe Road, will share her talents in a new way this fall and winter, two new course offerings are in the works: one for children and one for teens and adults.

Young Singers is for children ages 8 to 10 who love to use their voices in song. This class will teach youngsters how to read music, sing in tune, and have fun doing it. Jensen was the founder and director of the Chorale des Enfants (Children's Chorus) in Thonon-les-Bains, France, and is looking forward to having young singers to work with again. The class will meet 11 a.m. - 12 p.m. on Saturday mornings, and the fee will be $10 per session, with a charge of $8 if more than one child in a family participates.

The other course offering is Music Appreciation, for teens and adults. This will be given on Monday evenings from 7:30 - 9 p.m., and will include listening, reading and discussion. There will also be a short unit on music theory, for those who do not read music, or for musicians who wish to "brush up." Jensen was trained as a classical singer, but has sung musical comedy and jazz. The listening selections will be eclectic, drawing from all genres of music. Participants will meet in a rustic living room setting and refreshments will be served. There will be 10 sessions for $120.

For further information, or to register for music classes, call 383-2240.

Friends of Paragon Carousel Halloween party

The Friends of the Paragon Carousel is having a Halloween party from 4 - 6 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 30 and a costume parade at 4:30 p.m. A pumpkin decorating contest will also be held and awards will be given to the prettiest, scariest and most creative pumpkins in the under 13 and 13 and older categories. The entry fee is $1. Pumpkin drop-off dates are Sunday, Oct. 25 from 1:30 - 4 p.m. and Thursday, Oct. 29 from 3 - 6 p.m. Carousel rides are $1.50 each. For more information call 925-0472.

Make your mark on Cohasset history

In 1898 Cohasset published the Narrative History of Cohasset written by E. Victor Bigelow describing the town and the people of the time. Today that book is treasured by all who live here and own it.

In 1956 Cohasset published Volume II of the Narrative History of Cohasset written by Burtram J. Pratt describing the town and the people of the first half of the 20th Century. Today that book is treasured by all who live here and own it.

In 2001 Cohasset will publish Volume III of the Narrative History of Cohasset written by Jacqueline M. Dormitzer describing the town and its people today. That book too will be treasured by future generations.

You can be part of this wonderful heritage…

The Committee on Town History is extending an invitation to town residents to contribute to this effort in a number of ways. You can decide on which of the following you would like to do:

- Be a sponsor and have your name permanently recorded as a major benefactor of Cohasset.
- Be a contributor and have your name included in the book for future generations to see.
- Order advance copies of the Volume III of the Narrative History of Cohasset at a reduced price.
- Secure copies of Volume I and Volume II of the Narrative History of Cohasset while they are still available.

Water tank site on Scituate Hill uncertain

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission has hit an apparent impasse in its efforts to find a site for a new water on Scituate Hill. Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. thought the town had had found a location favorable to both the town and the owner of the land, J. Michael Susi and Sons. That plan would have placed the tank on the back part of the hill away from Route 3A. But perk tests revealed that the land is acceptable for septic systems and Susi wants to preserve that parcel. Susi next offered a second site that is 20 feet lower than the previous site but in the same general area. However, that site would add $300,000 to the development costs because it is on a steeper grade. The latest developments leave the water commission in a bit of a quandary. Although John Susi Sr. implied that he might agree on a site on the front part of the hill, he has not agreed to that option formally.

McNabb said he hopes that the town can agree with Susi on a site by mid-November. The water commission is trying to find a site on Scituate Hill that is suitable for both Susi and the town. McNabb said he understands Susi's desire to locate percable land on his site, but the water commission needs to build a tank. McNabb said there is still a possibility that the water commission could take a piece of land on Scituate Hill by eminent domain. He added that the water commissioners want to avoid an eminent domain action.

McNabb expressed disappointment that the latest tank plans have fallen through. The water commissioners recently decided to build a steel tank rather than a concrete structure to save money. McNabb said a standing steel tank costs about $300,000 less to build than a concrete structure. The water commission had hoped to use the costs savings to speed construction of the project and fund other projects.

Building the tank on the latest site proposed by Susi would wipe out the cost savings for the steel tank. There is also an additional maintenance cost of about $150,000 for a steel tank which must be sandblasted every 30 years. Recent estimates on the cost of a steel tank indicate the town may also have to build a shroud on the unit at an additional cost of $150,000.

McNabb said he is optimistic that the water commission can agree on a site with Susi by the middle of next month and complete a new tank by Christmas of 1999.

Norwell Kitchen Tour is slated

Road design poses traffic safety issue

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

"It's become a major throughway," complained traffic safety officer Rich Yocum, who also serves on the traffic study committee, about the newly-widened part of 3A near Beechwood Street.

Since Shaw's opened in August of last year, there has been a total of 19 accidents reported there. Speedsters may break that record this year; there have been 11 accidents in the vicinity already and that count only goes up to the month of September.

Compare the most recent accident figures with those recorded in 1996 — nine in all — and you can understand why the traffic study committee is so upset that members met with Massachusetts Transportation Department traffic engineer Bob Gregory last week to see what could be done to remedy the situation.

"I'd say that 80 percent of the accidents there are speed related," said Yocum. "The speed isn't decreasing either. I get complaints about it every day."

Indeed, the 35 mph speed is rarely adhered to, with motorists generally traveling 45 mph to 60 mph in the risky area, according to Yocum.

"All that weaving in and out of cars might be dangerous," allowed member Page Liberty. "But it gets you to work 30 seconds earlier so they keep doing it."

Committee members Yocum, Liberty, Heidi Salerno and selectman Merle Brown argued their point with Gregory, who read the accident rates differently than Yocum.

At issue between the opposing parties was whether or not the accidents south of the intersection should be counted in the overall figures.

"We feel the risk goes well beyond the Shaw's shopping area," said Brown. "It's a speedway — 400 yards of speedway."

"It's not only the speed, but the design of the road with people crossing three lanes and not seeing others coming," said Yocum.

However, it was pointed out that since speed was the primary issue, perhaps a redesign wouldn't change things.

"The design of that stretch was made to maximize traffic efficiency," said Gregory. "I don't know if it's just aggressive Massachusetts drivers. Maybe we have to start educating people more."

"Are you looking at contributing factors like the eight driveways of businesses there?" asked Liza Salerno, one of the half-dozen concerned residents and business owners in attendance. "We're talking two different situations here — the intersection and several hundred yards down the road. You're only counting some of the accidents in your statistics, but the increase in accidents in that general area are a result of the Shaw's intersection."

"We're not adversaries," said Gregory. "I don't know anyone in the world who wants accidents. No matter what we do at the intersection, there will be accidents. This is a center of heavy-duty traffic activity. Southeastern Massachusetts has more traffic than in the past and we will see more accidents."

Gregory offered to arrange for rubber hoses be placed across the 3A site to count of the number of cars passing through to compare the numbers with original data. "We can look at those numbers and see if we need to change things," he said.

Yocum offered to call to the state to request that the equipment be put in place near Shaw's. Currently, he is waiting on a call back from the Norfolk County Engineers office, to see if they are willing to do the work. "Apparently, the state doesn't have the equipment to do it," said Yocum. "Bureaucracy can be difficult. I'm not sure that Norfolk will want to come in and do the work for the state. I don't know how they handle that. I guess I'll find out."

Cohasset police clarify new state gun law

On Oct. 21, the state' s new Gun Control Law took effect. The law has several worthwhile objectives, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

- Banning certain "assault weapons."
- Eliminating junk guns (Saturday Night Specials).
- Bringing the Massachusetts Statutes into conformity with the federal law concerning prohibiting persons with certain criminal records from possessing firearms or receiving licenses.
- Strengthening the enforcement of domestic violence orders by requiring the surrender of weapons and licenses while abuse prevention orders are in effect.
- Requiring periodic review (every four years) of the criminal records of persons wanting to retain any type of firearms license.
- Curtailing those who can carry concealed weapons in public.
- Limiting the use of large capacity weapons to those who are qualified and who demonstrate a need for them.
- Allowing the police to arrange for the commercial storage of surrendered or confiscated firearms. These would be placed in secure, bonded warehouses operated on the premises of licensed firearms dealers (especially where the volume of such weapons exceeds the storage capacity of many police evidence lockers).
- Strengthening the penalties for certain firearms offenses.
- Requiring more extensive fingerprint and records checks for license applicants concerning criminal, domestic violence, drug, firearms and mental illness.
- Confirming the local chief's ability to set reasonable restrictions on the use, carrying and possession of various firearms and other weapons.

Cohasset Police pledge to help address some of the questions that may arise during the initial stages of the new law. Here is a summary of the aspects of the new law of concern to most licensed applicants and holders.

Please call Det. Rick Grassie between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m., Monday to Friday, with questions at 383-1055.

- All current licenses to carry firearms will be valid and will be renewable on the expiration date shown on such licenses. Thereafter, they will be renewable every four years.
- All current firearms identification cards (FID) will expire as follows:
- Persons with birth dates between July 1 and Dec. 31 will expire on the holder's birth date between July 1, 1999, and Dec. 31, 1999.
- Persons with birth dates between Jan. 1 and June 30 will expire on the holder's birth date between Jan. 1, 2000, and June 30, 2000.
- New categories of licenses to carry are: Class A and Class B.
- Class A allows the holder to access large capacity firearms, rifles, shotguns and ammunition. Only Class A holders may carry a concealed weapon.
- Class B allows access to non-large capacity firearms (handguns) as well as large capacity rifles, shotguns and ammunition.
- Properly licensed shooting clubs may have both large and non-large capacity firearms, rifles and shotguns for use by their members and guests.
- Persons with certain criminal records, especially those involving drugs and firearms trafficking, as well as those with a history of mental illness, may not qualify for certain kinds of licenses in the future.
- A fee of $25 will apply to all licenses to carry and FID applicants and renewals One-half of the fee will go into the state's Firearms Record Keeping Trust Fund to help with law enforcement training and record keeping.

LIBRARY CORNER

Volunteers needed at the library

The library is seeking volunteers for the following kinds of work: covering books, typing labels, searching for books and "shelf-reading." Several volunteers working an hour or two a week could make a big difference in this busy library.

"Shelf-reading" is the term librarians use for the regular maintenance of orderly bookstacks. The Cohasset Library has an excellent book collection that is heavily used. But sometimes books get misshelved and can't be found because they are in the wrong location. Regular "shelf-reading" is what's needed to keep the bookstacks in good order. "It's not glamorous, but it's the kind of work that appeals to some," said library director Janet Husband.

Another job that might appeal to some is typing labels and covering new books. There are always books waiting to be processed. It is quiet and low key work that can be done sitting down with the bonus of getting to see all the interesting new books that have been purchased for the library. Anyone who enjoys doing crafts or other handiwork could learn the skill with just a little training.

Each day 20 to 25 books need to be found and labeled for sending out on the interlibrary loan delivery truck. "It's a kind of library treasure hunt," said Mrs. Husband, "and requires 'sleuthing' skills."

If any of these jobs appeal to you, stop by the library and inquire.

Colorful paintings on display

The latest artist display at the Paul Pratt Library is Scituate resident Virginia M. Allen, art historian and Professor Emeritus of Art History at the Massachusetts College of Art in Boston where she taught for almost 26 years.

Allen has had numerous New England exhibitions as well as national exposure through private and corporate collections. She has been a prize-winner and gallery artist at the South Shore Art Center.

Professor Allen was raised in Ohio, received her M.A. in Art History from the University of Pittsburgh and a Ph.D. from Boston University. Allen studied painting and printmaking as an undergraduate along with various college art classes pursued between degrees.

Allen now lives close to the ocean and all who live in the area will enjoy her colorful and dynamic paintings now on display until the end of October.

OBITUARIES

Charles E. Butman Sr.

Charles E. Butman Sr.

Charles Edson Butman Sr., 101, lifelong resident of Cohasset, died Friday, Oct. 23, at Life Care Center, Scituate, after a brief illness.

Mr. Butman was born in Cohasset, son of the late Joseph and Mary A. (Stuart) Butman, and was educated in Cohasset schools.

He was employed as a caretaker for the Sandy Beach Association for 40 before retiring.

Mr. Butman was the oldest member of the Scituate Rod & Gun Club. He also worked as a custodian for the Cohasset Library and was a Special Police Officer for the Town of Cohasset for 40 years. He was a "Jack of All Trades," working part-time as a painter, carpenter and in auto repair.

Husband of the late Eleanor (Kennerson) Butman, he leaves two sons, Charles E. Butman Jr. of Cohasset and Robert F. Butman of Pocasset; two daughters, Dorothy Hoogeveen of Bowdoin, Maine and Eleanor E. Barrett of Medford, N.J.; 10 grandchildren; and 14 great-grandchildren.

A Memorial Service will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, Oct. 30, at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset. The Rev. Gary Ritts will officiate.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset. Visiting hours were omitted and interment was private.

In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025 for a scholarship in his memory.

Murray survives in hard-fought campaign

Defeats Bradley by about 1,000 votes

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Republican Mary Jeanette Murray managed to fight back in one of the toughest political battles of her 22-year career as state representative.

Murray, of Cohasset, was energized late in the game but it was enough to beat Democrat and political newcomer Garrett Bradley of Hingham to represent Hingham, Cohasset and Hull for another two years.

Many viewed this as the race to watch. A young, skilled and well financed Bradley defeated two opponents in the September primary to face off against Murray, who many had said was in trouble. She rallied her troops, calling on her military experience, to garner last-minute support.

She managed to win Bradley's hometown by less 400 votes. Murray took Hingham with 4,211 votes compared to Bradley's 3,853. In her Cohasset stronghold, Murray won nearly 2-1 with 2,139 votes to Bradley's 1,229. Bradley narrowly defeated Murray in Hull with 2,022 votes to her 1,849 votes.

An exhausted Murray said on Wednesday she was overwhelmed by the support of voters.

"I've never been this tired," Murray said during a telephone interview Wednesday from her home. "The adrenaline was flowing, but it was a tough campaign, no doubt."

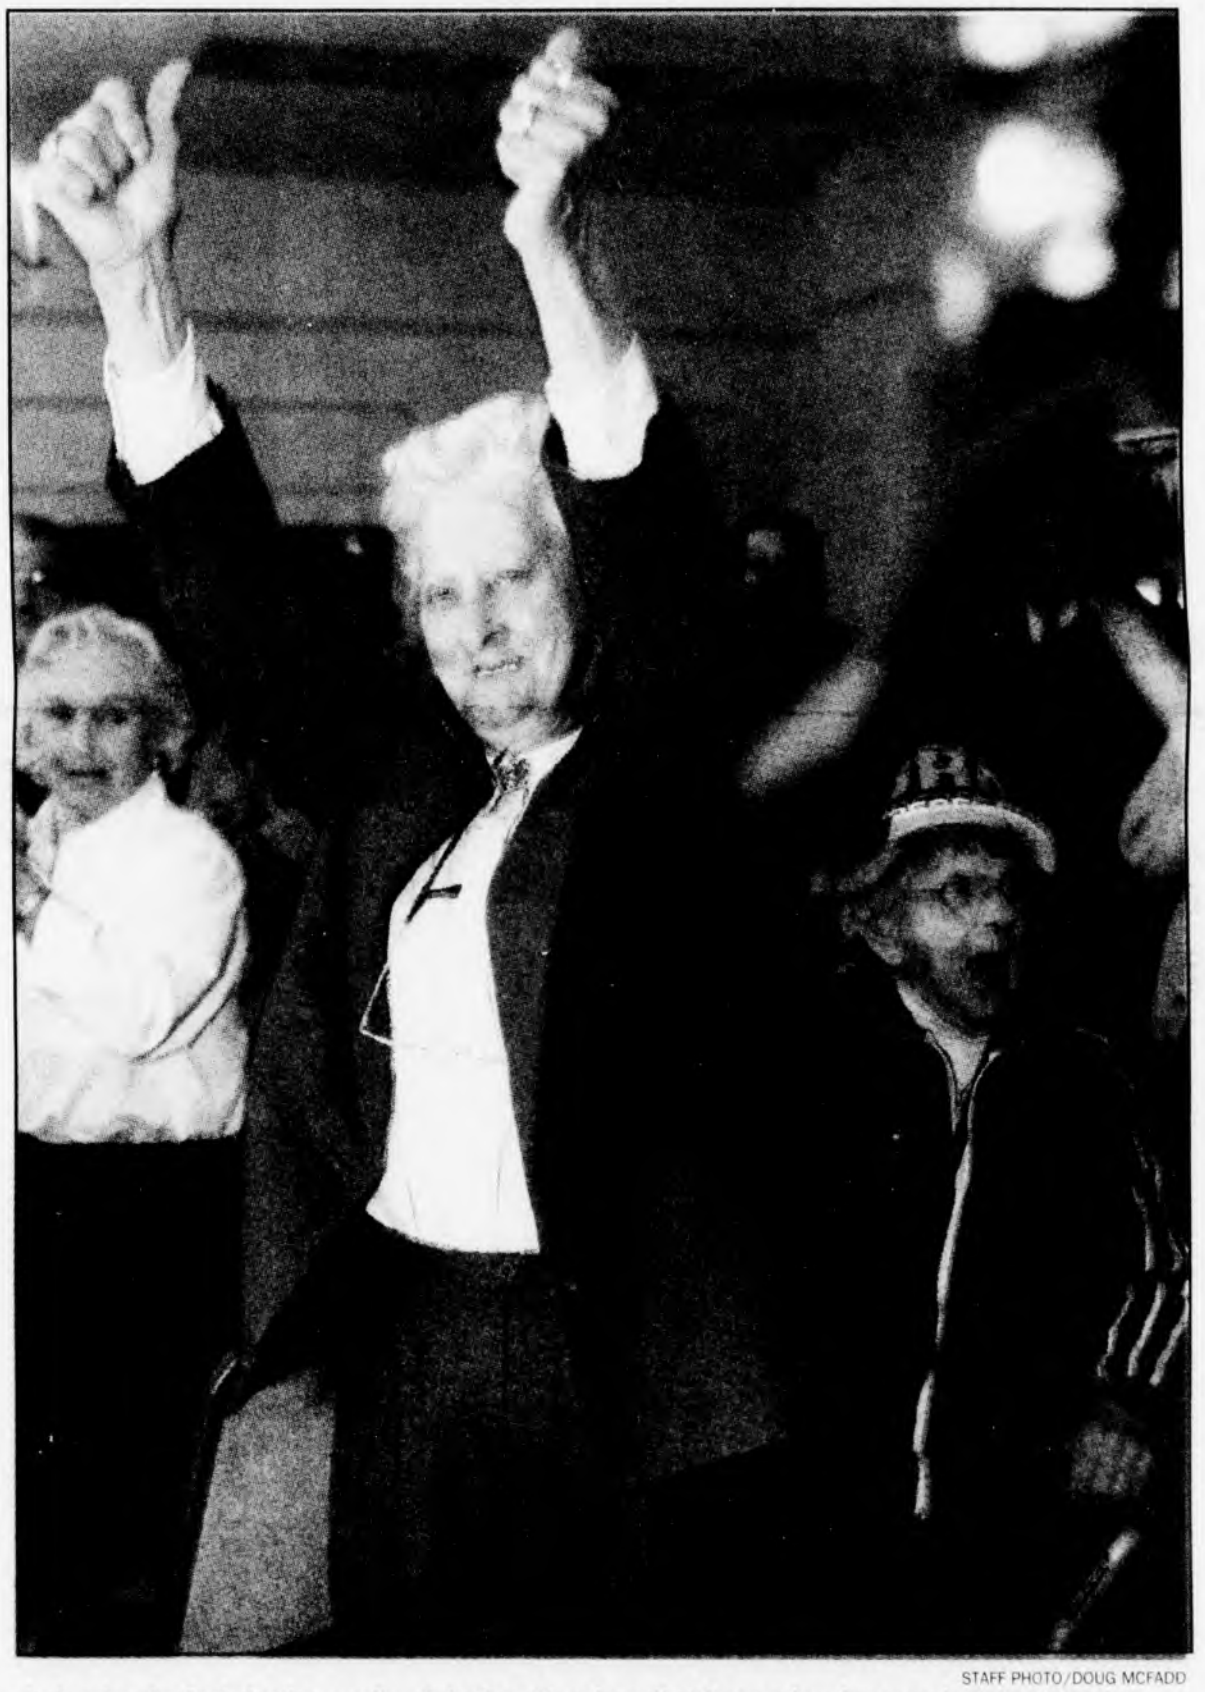
Murray, who is one of only three representatives to serve such a lengthy term, said there were times during the campaign when she thought it had "gotten away" from her and victory would elude her. But then she said she got energized by voters as she campaigned.

"This is the first campaign without Phil (her late husband) and he had his finger on so many things and I didn't," Murray reflected. "That was my problem early on, I couldn't get my hand on things. I thought a few times 'this is a tough one.' Then I got jazzed up by meeting with people."

In a touching moment, one of Murray's children sent her roses on behalf of their late father. The flowers were meant to remind her that he husband "was up there pulling us through," she said, as her voiced cracked with emotion.

"Everyone was so great, I can't say enough about the people who worked for me I am so grateful and I'm thanking God today."
— Mary Jeanette Murray

Bradley, 28, of Hingham is a former county prosecutor, said he was grateful to the many supporters who helped him throughout the campaign. "I could be better," a flushed Bradley said on election night.



Murray, too, said she was grateful for the efforts of her campaign workers, particularly her daughter and campaign manager, Lillian Murray-Curley.

"Everyone was so great, I can't say enough about the people who worked for me," she said. "I am so grateful and I'm thanking God today."

Cohasset has 5,348 voters, with 3,038 listed as unenrolled. The Cohasset turnout was 68 percent.

By 10:30 a.m., 800 voters had

Detective tackles drug traffickers and users

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

There are no drug traffickers or habitual drug users in Cohasset, right? Not exactly. There have been 40 arrests for drug use and trafficking in Cohasset over the past 12 months resulting in the seizure of two ounces of cocaine, several pounds of marijuana, scales, lab equipment, cars, motorcycles, weapons, thousands of dollars in cash, and assorted drug paraphernalia. And many of those arrested live in town. It's not an epidemic by any stretch of the imagination, but it is a problem. Drug dealing and use is not bound by town lines, or excluded by the wealth of a community. It is that knowledge that led the police department to appoint Narcotics Officer Gregory Lennon as the town's second detective.

Appointing a second detective was not as

Marina expansion resurfaces

Multi-board powwows planned

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Plans to expand Cohasset Harbor Marina off Parker Avenue may not be sunk after all.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said this week that marina owner Paul Trendowicz and selectmen have agreed to a truce to see if an accord can be reached short of legal action.

"We said let's sit down and see what we can do," Haddad said.

Trendowicz, who believes he owns the bottom of Bailey's Creek, had filed a lawsuit in land court in August claiming town moorings were trespassing on his property.

So selectmen placed an article on the Oct. 26 special town meeting warrant seeking to take the creek bottom by eminent domain.

"We said 'you withdraw the lawsuit and we'll withdraw the article,'" Haddad explained.

The controversy started last spring as plans for the $1.34 million federal dredging project in Cohasset Harbor, which is now un-

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Nov. 10.

Recycling lottery at RTF

Lottery will be held on Nov. 7 at RTF starting at 10 a.m.(rain date Nov. 8). The 50th car will be chosen. If the 50th car is willing to participate they will need at least four items that are recyclable (returnable and something to go into the Boutique will not count). If the car has four recyclas, they will receive a compos[illegible]n (worth $20) a $10. This will be done two times during the day.

Music is a mission for Hingham Symphony Orchestra

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset's "Welcome Yule!" concert by the Hingham Symphony Orchestra will be held at 4 p.m., Dec. 6 in St. Anthony's Church.

Hingham Symphony Orchestra is gearing up for an exciting 53rd season.

"If there's one thing we want to emphasize, it's that we are for real," said music director and conductor Jin Kim. "Music brings something to a community and something vital to human existence because it's a medium of expression that's so special to everything else."

Over the past year, the group of professional and volunteer musicians, formerly called Hingham Civic Orchestra, has undergone revitalization, including a new name in June 1997.

"There has been an incredible amount of change in HSO," Kim said.

In the past, the group was an all-volunteer community orchestra with many dedicated musicians and board members working together to make HSO a success. Now it's a semi-professional orchestra.

About three years ago, the HSO board of directors and planning committee entertained the idea of a possible departure from the accustomed way of running the group.

"HSO began focusing more on musical quality rather than on sustaining an environment where any amateur could come and play," Kim said.

When the new music director and conductor arrived on the scene two years ago, he held auditions with both professionals and volunteers.

"I had to make some tough choices," Kim recalled. "The repertoires are now more challenging as well."

But, he said, HSO is dedicated to securing and maintaining qualified local volunteer musicians to participate.

"It would be great if we could accept everyone, but there are tough decisions involved in a quality-based orchestra," he stated. "That's just part of my job."

Last year, HSO started reaching out more to the entire South Shore community by adding an additional holiday concert in December at the Old South Union Church in Weymouth as well as holding the traditional one at Old Ship Church.

This year's Yuletide concert on Sunday, Dec. 6, will first be held at St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset and then it will be repeated at Old Ship in Hingham on Sunday, Dec. 13.

A newly commissioned work by HSO resident composer Alexander Kalogeras of Sharon will be featured at the concerts. Last year's commissioned work, "Wompatuck Spring: Scenes from the South Shore," was a stunning success.

"We're focusing on the betterment of our regional communities through music," said Kim.

HSO is a blend of about 70 percent paid professionals and 30 percent volunteers. While the former are paid and the latter are not, Kim said that's no reflection on a musician's ability. The orchestra's goal is to be 50/50, professional/volunteer.

While some professionals may be more proficient because they make their livelihood from performing, there is a wide variety of talent among volunteers.

For example, one particularly talented French horn player is a teacher by profession. HSO also features some accomplished musicians from Boston schools, including the New England Conservatory and Boston University.

"An orchestra provides an opportunity for players to work towards a common goal to create something of noteworthy beauty."
— Conductor Jim Kim

"An orchestra provides an opportunity for players to work towards a common goal to create something of noteworthy beauty," said Kim. "Some mentoring takes place, and both professionals and volunteers share a love of music and performing."

Kim's first love is music, although it took him awhile to come to that realization.

Kim grew up in Korea, where he started playing the piano. His family moved to Minnesota when he was 12. Upon the recommendation of a relative affiliated with the Seoul National University Conservatory, he decided he would take his music more seriously.

"Going from metropolitan Seoul to a cornfield in suburban Minnesota was quite a change for me," Kim said with a laugh.

In his new home, his mother found him a strict Polish piano teacher, which resulted in his practicing one or two hours a day instead of a couple of hours a week.

Within a year or two, he increased his practice time to four or five hours daily.

"It was quite an intense experience, because I was learning to speak English at the same time," Kim recalled. "But it kept me busy throughout my middle school years. It's sometimes considered an extracurricular activity, but studies have shown music incorporates cognitive and other dimensions."

By the time he reached his junior year, however, Kim took a liking to sports and stopped practicing the piano.

"I had a rebellion as some kids do," he said, "even though I had just won a Minnesota Orchestra concerto competition."

At St. Olaf College, he took up the study of philosophy and history. There he found himself around individuals who didn't always want to practice but did so anyway because of their deep love for music.

"Playing the piano can be a solitary activity when you're not surrounded by your peers in an orchestra setting," said Kim.

Nevertheless, Kim changed his major to piano performance in his sophomore year, although he still wasn't thoroughly convinced he had made the right decision.

At the time, he was involved in a number of civil rights issues, which proved time consuming.

"When I showed up with a pink tassel at graduation, which means you're a music major, people were surprised because they had no idea that was what I had been studying," he said.

After college, he worked in the field of public policy, but little by little, he took to freelance piano and singing engagements, and that was the beginning of his career in music.

"I realized that I had to pursue music," said Kim, who founded the Magnum Chorum, a choral orchestral ensemble.

Conducting the ensemble in addition to singing and playing and teaching the piano to students of varying backgrounds led him to take up the formal study of music which he had previously neglected. That marked the major turning point in his career.

Kim, who holds a master's degree in conducting from Eastman School of Music in New York, furthered his studies at Boston University under well-known music director David Hoose. Kim completed an artist diploma in orchestral conducting there.

In May 1997, shortly after completing his studies at Boston University, he was hired as the sixth music director of the orchestra.

Kim remembers his first impression in Hingham when he arrived there to interview for the position from his home in the Boston area.

"The sun was setting, and it was such a picturesque community," he said. "-Just what I'd seen in coffee table books about New England."

Looking back over half a century

For 53 years, Hingham Symphony Orchestra, formerly Hingham Civic Orchestra has been producing beautiful music.

Shortly after World War II, four friends and musicians decided to find out if there were others in the Hingham area who would like to play music together.

Richard and Gertrude Berry and Jean and John Samuelson placed an advertisement in local newspapers giving the time and place of rehearsals. The rest is history.

The response was far greater than expected, and the Hingham Civic Orchestra's first concert was presented to an enthusiastic audience, with Samuelson conducting the musicians. The main mission of HCO at that time was providing performance opportunities for amateur musicians.

Among HCO's five conductors leading up to the current one, Jin Kim, was John Corley, who had the longest tenure. After serving as HSO's music director for 26 years, he retired in May 1997.

The orchestra has performed in ballet productions, choral-orchestral concerts and other special projects in addition to presenting its regular concerts.

In 1985, Virgil Thomson was commissioned by HSO to create a work celebrating the town's 350th anniversary.

'Welcome Yule!' coming to Cohasset

Cohasset's "Welcome Yule!" concert by the Hingham Symphony Orchestra will be held at 4 p.m., Dec. 6 in St. Anthony's Church. The program includes: Bach's "Orchestral Suite No. 1;" excerpts from "Messiah" by Handel; Kalogeras, a commissioned carol; Bizet, "L'Arlesienne Suite No. 2;" Tchaikovsky, "The Nutcracker Suite — plus a carol sing-along.

Hingham Symphony Orchestra performed its first concert of the season, "Masterworks I," in Sanborn Auditorium at the new Hingham Town Hall on Oct. 24 to rave reviews.

"There's a feeling HSO can provide that some other orchestras don't," said Jin Kim, music director and conductor.

Because of the intimate setting of Sanborn Auditorium and other similar venues, concertgoers don't need binoculars to enjoy the event.

Another benefit of a local symphony orchestra is that viewers often recognize a neighbor or other resident among the musicians.

Highlights of the upcoming season also de a "Pops" concert in May and a "Discovery Concert" in February featuring Arthur and Tubby the Tuba, narrated by Marc Brown, and selections performed with Hingham school orchestras.

Keeping an orchestra vibrant and active is one of the most complicated volunteer efforts, according to Kim, because it involves educational outreach, volunteer coordination, grants and satisfying subscribers and others who attend the concerts.

Tickets can be purchased in advance at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, the Hingham Public Library or at the door, or by calling Director Nina Wellford at 740-5694. Adults are $15, 18 years old and younger, $10.

Marina expansion resurfaces

derway, were taking shape. Trendowicz, who would pay to have his marina area dredged, wants to piggyback onto the town's project. He also wants the town to move the federal line 25 feet into the creek to provide his marina with more wiggle room.

Without movement of the federal line, Trendowicz must keep his existing boats and slips behind the federal anchorage area or face fines of about $25,000 a day. The area is so narrow that Trendowicz would be restricted to smaller boats making his operation not financially viable. Although selectmen oppose moving the federal line, Haddad said they might be able to help Trendowicz with intertidal dredging. Initially Trendowicz hoped to expand his marina by dredging "land-ward" of his docks but the Dept. of Environmental Protection rejected the proposal.

"It's easier to work things out than to fight. I'm interested in sitting down to see what can happen."

— Paul Trendowicz, owner
Cohasset Harbor Marina

The harbor committee was also concerned about safety issues with the addition of more boats to the creek.

Haddad said plans are to work openly with the conservation commission, harbor committee, selectmen and Trendowicz to see if the matter can be resolved over the next three months. If not, both sides can return to legal action.

"Who knows what will come out of this," he said. "Maybe something, maybe nothing.

"If nothing, then we'll be no better or worse off."

Trendowicz who lives on Beach Street said he is still looking to expand the marina. He hopes he and the town can work out their differences.

"It's easier to work things out than to fight," he said. "I'm interested in sitting down to see what can happen."

First Parish honors new members

On Sunday, Nov. 8, at 10:30 a.m., in the Meeting House on the Common, the First Parish of Cohasset will hold a special ceremony to welcome new members. After the service, a reception will be held in the Parish House at 23 N. Main St. for members and visitors. First- and second-graders in the religious education program will also unveil the small-scale buildings they have been constructing for the past six weeks. Each building represents one necessary entity to a thriving community and reflects the heart and soul that the children have poured into the project.

At 7:15 p.m. that evening, in the Parish House, First Parish will present "Healing Through Art," an evening with Joan Drescher. She is the author of 25 children's books, most recently "The Moon Balloon." She believes in the healing power of art and has devoted herself to that cause, creating murals in major hospitals and healthcare facilities throughout the U.S. and Canada. Seven of her murals are in the New England Medical Center entitled "Symbols of Courage," illustrating the journey sick children and their families travel.

Drescher's program will take each one in her audience on a multi-media journey of their own, exploring the power of art to heal mind, body and spirit. Accompanying her will be harpist Joanne Cavatorta who believes in the power of healing through music. "Harp music," she says, "is known to reduce pain measurably and to help patients sleep. The combination of music and art has a real healing effect. It is a wonderful thing for people of all ages."

Space is limited, so please call the Parish House at 383-1100 in advance to reserve a seat. There is no charge.

Paul Pratt weighed as historical society's new home

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Joseph McElroy's impromptu bid to relocate the town historical society to the Paul Pratt Library building at last week's special town meeting came as much as a surprise to the former society board member as it did to those in the audience.

"It was like a little light bulb went off in my head and I went with it," he said, about his idea that others are now saying deserves consideration. "I spoke up because I was concerned about the library being sold and because I saw a lack of a real master plan."

At last week's meeting, Neil Glick, 7 Spring St., also expressed concern about the possible sale of the library.

"It's a gem, with its Greek Revival style and maritime heritage," said Glick, who argued for the old building to continue its use as the town library.

But school committee member McElroy would like to see the Paul Pratt building used as for the society's new headquarters and the Lothrop House sold instead.

"We could sell the current headquarters for $300,000, which would go to the town," he said. "The town could then lease the library to the Cohasset Historical Society for 10 years, which is the maximum term allowed by law. It would be a win-win situation, with the building more effectively displaying the society's artifacts and archives. Also, the library would make an excellent setting for small gatherings, which would also be a source of money to the town."

McElroy's inspired moment at town meeting has created a stir among some historical society members.

"Joe totally caught me by surprise," said Cohasset Historical Society's immediate past-president Ernie Grassey. "I don't know that this isn't a damn good idea, but the society will have to meet in a week or two to discuss it. Should we agree to Joe's idea, we would then have to work on some sort of plan."

That meeting would more than likely take place in the current Cohasset Historical Society headquarters in the Caleb Lothrop House at 14 Summer St. Cold in the winter and mercilessly hot in the summer, the hip-roof colonial with red brick walls on either side cannot hold its 300 members, should all decide to show up.

The building was built by Caleb Lothrop, a Cohasset native and wealth community leader who owned a fleet of ships that sailed in and out of Cohasset's Harbor during the 19th century.

The house was sold to the Archdiocese of Boston along with a parcel of land for the construction of St. Anthony's Church in 1960. A decade later, the Archdiocese sold the house to the Cohasset Historical Society.

It took about 10 more years of careful restoration work on the property to restore the building to its original ambiance, resulting in its current place on the National Register of Historic Places.

Several of the museum's rooms were refurbished with 19th century period furniture and artwork by Cohasset residents of that era are on display there.

The Cohasset Historical Society itself was founded in 1928, though there was a group of history enthusiasts who began pulling together a town chronicle that culminated in E. Victor Bigelow's "Narrative History of Cohasset," the first volume of the town's history.

The society's collection has grown to include ancient American Indian artifacts, diaries, books and paintings, as well as one of the largest collections of women's and girl's clothing representing the early 1800s through the mid 1900s.

In addition, Cohasset's summer theater past, dating back to the 1800s to the present day Music Circus, is captured in the Helen Howes Vosoff collection.

The archives offer history buffs and the curious an excellent source for genealogical searches through church papers, maritime history books, military records and almost 2,000 folders on Cohasset and its surrounding area.

Grassey would love to see students able to make better use of those archives in more comfortable surroundings than the small and cramped Lothrop house.

"It could be a totally wonderful adjunct to the new school curriculum that calls for local history courses," said Grassey. "We have recently added 30 new historical interviews to our archives for the new town history volume we're working on. It would be a great teaching tool for the kids."

According to David Wadsworth, curator for the historical society, the archives are the most continuously growing section of the society. "We don't have the type of environmental controls we should have to properly house these records," he explained.

Nor does the society have the room. Currently, the society's highly-prized costume collection is housed elsewhere because of the Lothrop house's limited space.

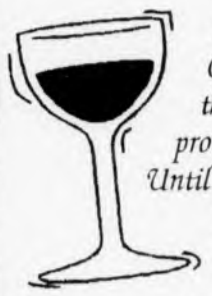
"It's a fine early house," said Wadsworth. "But it isn't large enough. Joe, as a former member of the board, is probably aware of that."

McElroy would like to see the library used similarly to the Lightkeeper's Residence.

"It's the same situation as the Lightkeeper's," he said. "It's a beautiful building in a beautiful location, just like the Lightkeeper's—but you don't have the problem of it having been sold to a private concern. I think that selling it outside of the town's control would be shortsighted."

The Lightkeeper's Residence is leased to the non-profit Cohasset Lightkeeper's Corp., of which McElroy is a past president.

For his part, Grassey thinks the idea could work.



"It's a novel approach, but I think it will depend on whether or not the town will need the $700,000 for the old Osgood," he said. "I think it's a plan that has merit."

In the meantime, the town will pay $152,500 to develop construction drawings and bid documents to turn the old Joseph Osgood Elementary School into a new library.

The Paul Pratt building at 106 South Main St. is currently in violation of the handicap-access law; has little room for parking; is too small for its current or future needs; is burdened with an inefficient, multi-level floor design; and its proximity to wetlands rules out bumping out a portion of the building for expansion.

Library trustees Chairman Patience Towle has explained that taxpayers would have had to pay $600,000 to make the current Paul Pratt building handicapped-accessible. Moreover, the maximum cost to build on the already existing library would cost $1.5 to $2 million. Trustees are counting on state funding to bring down the cost of the library's rehabilitation in the old Osgood to $710,000.

easy as it sounds. Police Chief Brian Noonan said that full-time day Detective Rick Grassie does a great job, but has his hands full with gun permits, taxi licenses, the sex offender registry, and criminal investigations. The department needed a full-time, plain clothes detective to handle controlled substance investigations in the evening, when most drug activity takes place. But the police contract does not provide for a second detective so a part-time position had to be approved by the police union. Also, the town has not funded a second detective, so Lennon frequently dons a police uniform when staffing levels are low on any given day because of sick days or vacations.

Lennon, 26, has worked as a uniformed officer for the past 3-1/2 years. Just about two months ago he started working as a plain clothes detective as well. Before that, he worked in the Plymouth County Sheriff's Department and saw firsthand just how many people were in jail for drug-related offense — at least 65 percent of the jail's population. Noonan asked that The Mariner not take his photo because of his involvement in undercover investigations.

"My responsibility is almost exclusively drug cases, and I have my hands full," Lennon said. "Investigating drug crimes is such a specialty. I've received training from the army, the state police and the Drug Enforcement Agency. I've received more than 500 hours of drug enforcement training. Stuff changes so often, that you have to continue training if you want to be successful."

Lennon said cocaine is a very popular drug in Cohasset, although many people like marijuana and there are heroin addicts in town.

"Cocaine crosses all social lines," Lennon said. "It's used by blue collar workers and Wall Street traders."

Catching cocaine dealers and users isn't that easy. Lennon said most dealers are very cautious about what they're doing, especially if they're carrying large amounts of the drug which can translate into longer prison terms. Dealers also tend to be mobile, moving from place to place to conduct business. Most successful arrests are the result of intense investigations by plain clothes officers.

"Usually, we make a successful case through covert investigation," Lennon said. "We have some guys who are very sharp on uniformed patrol, and they have made some excellent cases. But they generally end up catching the end users."

"My responsibility is almost exclusively drug cases, and I have my hands full."

— Det. Gregory Lennon

Making sure a drug arrest ends up with a successful prosecution case also involves a strong understanding of search and seizure laws. Lennon said he reads all the precedent-setting cases that affect searches and seizures. The fourth amendment to the constitution guards citizens against illegal search and seizures, so police have to make sure they are always proceeding legally.

Most of the cocaine that comes into Cohasset originates out of Brockton, Lennon said. Nationals from the Dominican Republic control the cocaine trade in this area, and they have numerous operations in Brockton and the surrounding region.

"If someone is buying cocaine in Cohasset, it's because they don't want to go to Brockton," Lennon said. "The Dominicans are coming all over the South Shore. White guys that are selling in Cohasset are buying cocaine in Brockton."

Lennon said most residents don't notice drug dealing or use because they're not looking for it or don't know what to look for. Many deals take place in cars or in homes, so few people notice anything is amiss. Lennon gave the case of a Cohasset youth who was dealing marijuana from his home. The boy's parents thought the large number of young visitors to the house were friends of their son. When police arrested the boy, they confiscated a pound of marijuana. While the police were at the house, 17 people called the house trying to buy marijuana from the youth.

Lennon said it is in the town's best interest to fund a full-time drug detective because the positions would pay for itself and reduce other crimes in town. Any property seized in a drug arrest is auctioned off with the town splitting the money with the DA's office. Lennon said he could more than double his arrest ratio as a full-time detective. Doubling arrests would lead to more confiscated goods that would pay for the detective's position. Many of the crimes committed in town — things like housebreaks, car breaks, store robberies — are committed by drug users seeking fast cash.

"B&E's aren't committed by people who want to take their family to Disney World," Lennon said. "Many times, we make drug busts that turn up stolen goods which help us solve another crime. I can't be as effective part-time as I could full-time. I'm still filling in sometimes as a uniformed patrol officer."

Lennon said much of the success he has had so far is because of the support he receives from Noonan. According to Lennon, Noonan has dedicated himself to utilizing the department's resources as much as possible to combat the drug trade.

"People in town are very fortunate because he's the kind of guy that actually cares," Lennon said. "He feels good when we arrest a real trafficker because that has long-standing repercussions."

Police Chief Brian Noonan displays some of the evidence from cases Det. Gregory Lennon has investigated.

Noonan said adding a second detective has been a good move because it has had an immediate effect on drug dealing and use in town. When Proposition 2-1/2 was enacted in the 1980s, the department lost one man to budget cuts. Promoting Grassie to detective left the department without a second uniformed officer. Noonan said that the town will need to approve two men at some point to address those manpower losses. Adding two officers would also make it easier to make Lennon a second full-time detective. Lennon pointed out that most towns have at least two plain-clothes detectives to handle local investigations.

Lennon also has a message for would-be drug dealers in Cohasset.

"If you want to deal drugs in Cohasset, we'll be coming after you at some point," he said. "When I worked in the sheriff's department, I saw hundreds of people in jail for drug offenses. It's where a lot of crime comes from, and I know that successful drug enforcement can really reduce crime."

AROUND TOWN

STAYING YOUNG

We begin this week by thinking "young" — as in Gert Young, that is! Mrs. Young turned 96 last week (Oct. 29) and we surely hope that your day was a spectacular one! And that many more are in store for you! Best wishes from all of us!

ON-FIELD REUNION

There was an "On-Field Reunion" a few weeks ago, and here's the scoop! Cohasset residents Matt Rossi and Ely Kahn had a reunion Sunday, Oct. 18, at the Yale Invitational Fall Lacrosse Tournament in New Haven, Conn. Rossi , a 1997 high school All-American at Boston College High School, is a defenseman for Fairfield University, where he's a freshman after prepping a year at Loomis-Chafee. Kahn, co-captain of Cohasset High's 1997 Pilgrim Conference championship squad where he was All-Conference, is a sophomore goalie for Harvard University. Harvard won the pre-season contest, but the two schools will face each other again next spring.

Cohasset athletes, Matt Rossi and Ely Kahn, at an impromptu on-field reunion, Oct. 18.

GET WELL SOON

Dottie Booth is home! And she would love to receive a card from you! She returned home last weekend, and she will be "housebound," so send your kind note to 30 Joy Place, Cohasset. Did you know that, as ill as she was feeling, she still asked for and received an absentee ballot! That is true patriotism for you, and we should all learn a lesson from that!

GRIDIRON CLUB AUCTION

The Gridiron Club is planning an auction this weekend! It will be held at the Sons of Italy Hall, from 7 p.m. til midnight, and will be a silent and live auction. This club has done an unbelievable job this year, having dinners for the team members and their parents, supporting the team, just about everything you can think of. The proceeds from the auction will fund their scholarship program (they have given wonderful scholarships to graduating seniors over the years), and they will continue to support the footfall program. Not only that, you will have fun! This group knows how to have a good time! See you there this Saturday, Nov. 7!

NEW ARRIVAL

Speaking of football, one Cohasset name you always associate with it is the Buckley Clan, awesome players! Well, one of those same players just became a proud Papa! Paul Buckley and his wife Pamela are celebrating the birth of their daughter, Paige Elizabeth Buckley, born Oct. 13. Paige weighed 6 pounds, and was 18-3/4 inches long; her paternal grandparents are Jack and Blanche Buckley, maternal grandparents are Stan and Betsy Wheeler and Linda and Charles Coates. Congratulations go out to all of you, give Paige a hug from all of us!

ON THE MEND

Everyone knows Mary McCarthy, she's the live wire that is always buzzing around town, doing good things and being kind to all she meets — well, Mary has had her wings clipped after a recent fall — she broke her elbow, wrist and hip!

Mary is in a wheelchair now (we all know that won't be for long) and the main thing she is bemoaning is that it isn't motorized. That's the kind of supergal she is! We certainly hope that you mend as quickly as you move, Mary. May your healing process go smoothly!

GREAT COMPANION

Spoke with one of the nicest ladies I know recently — many of you will remember Cay as the companion of Rose Mary Murphy while she was ill. Anyway, she is looking for another person who would like a companion — Cay is so kind, nice, ca[illegible]e and friendly. If you know of an[illegible] who needs such a gal, give me a call and I will put you in touch with her! You'll be glad you did!

WELCOME TO ROBIN

We had the pleasure of meeting Robin Long, the student minister at the Second Congregational Church, recently. What a fine person! Be sure to say hello to Robin when you see her Around Town!

A TRUE LEGEND

We were all saddened to learn of the passing of Charlie Butman, he was truly a legend! Imagine the stories he told, having lived in Cohasset for 101 years. Although he did many things, I remember the first time we met in the (old) bathhouse at Sandy Beach. He knew every single thing that went on, both there and all over the town! He was a wonder and a wonderful person! Our hearts go out to his family, he will be missed!

HAWAIIANS ARE COMING!

Here's some news from our house, the Hawaiians are coming! Ricki and her daughter and two granddaughters will be here Dec. 18 and will stay for a few weeks. So, spread the word, and make plans to see them! Ricki cannot wait to see her many friends and introduce all to some of her clan.

KEEP IN TOUCH

That's the news, keep in touch! By the way, anytime you want to include a picture along with your news, it is as easy as that! Doesn't have to be black and white, doesn't have to be a special size ... include it, we'll run it! Makes your story even better!!

WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Daileader

Smith/Daileader wedding

Heidi Skinner Smith and John Joseph Daileader were married June 20 at St. Paul's Church in Hingham. The Rev. Albert Faretra officiated at the Nuptial Mass.

The bride is the daughter of Judith S. Peacock of Hingham and Russell R. Smith of Cohasset. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Daileader of Clifton Park, N.Y.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. The maid of honor was Jennifer Leonard of Carlisle, cousin of the bride. Bridesmaids were Melanie Augur, Jennifer Keating, Laura Keating and Melissa McCarthy, all formerly of Hingham. The flower girls were Madeline Greenier of Glens Falls, N.Y., niece of the groom, and Emma Smith of Cohasset, sister of the bride.

The best man was Robert L. Daileader Jr. of McLean, Va., brother of the groom. Groomsmen were Toby Smith of Boston, brother of the bride, Andre Schmid of Clifton Park, N.Y., Richard Schutte of Marlboro, N.J., and Thomas McLaughlin of Hoboken, N.J. The ring bearers were Adam Smith of Cohasset, brother of the bride and Joseph Daileader of Scituate, nephew of the groom.

The bride is a graduate of Dartmouth College and Columbia Business School. She is an associate with CEA Capital Partners in New York City.

The groom is a graduate of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and the NYU Stern School of Business. He is a principal of Chase Capital Partners in New York City.

A reception was held at White Cliffs Country Club in Plymouth.

After a wedding trip to Hawaii, the couple will reside in New York City.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Erickson, Jr.

Erickson/O'Brien wedding

Bernadette Maryann O'Brien, daughter of Mrs. James A. O'Brien Jr. of Cohasset and the late James A. O'Brien Jr., married Robert Frederick Erickson Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Erickson of York, Maine, May 24, at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. The Rev. John R. Mulvehill officiated at the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, James A. O'Brien III of New York City. The matron of honor was the bride's mother, Maureen C. O'Brien. The bridesmaids were Angela O'Brien of Cohasset; Catherine Conant of Wendell, N.C.; Alana O'Brien of South Boston; and Susan Wilson of Scituate.

Richard F. Delbou of Scituate served as best man. The ushers were Michael Rohnstock of Scituate; Thomas O'Brien of Hingham; Timothy Vacha of Quincy; and Timothy O'Brien of Cohasset.

The bride is a graduate of Cohasset High School and Boston College School of Management. She is employed by Stop & Shop.

Her husband is a graduate of Scituate High School and attended the University of Massachusetts. He is also employed by Stop & Shop.

A reception was held at the Cushing Center in Norwell.

After a trip to the Florida Keys and a cruise of the Caribbean, the couple is residing in Scituate.

Stand up and honor them

Veterans Day was originally called Armistice Day, the only American holiday created to remember a specific moment in time.

In 1918, on the 11th hour of the 11th day in the 11th month, the world rejoiced. After four years of bitter war, an armistice was signed. The "war to end all wars" was over.

During the height of the Cold War, following the carnage of World War II and the Korean War, President Dwight Eisenhower in 1954 signed legislation designating Nov. 11 as Veterans Day — through which "a grateful nation, on a day dedicated to world peace, may pay proper homage to all its veterans who have contributed so much to world peace and the preservation of our way of life."

As we commemorate Veterans Day 1998, we proudly and gratefully recognize the hardships and sacrifices demanded from, and faithfully accepted by, the millions of men and women who have defended our land in war and peace.

It is a day to review memories of past honor and extraordinary sacrifice.

It is a day to celebrate peace and the bright victories that grew from dark battles.

It is a day to dream of a brighter future.

Veterans Day is also a reminder that we have an obligation to safeguard the precious legacy of our Founding Fathers — a legacy of freedom, justice and liberty.

A legacy that forever commits the nation to preserve our sovereignty, respect our heritage, and instill in us the responsibilities of citizenship.

Veterans Day commemorates the valor and patriotism of all of America's veterans who have contributed so much to the cause of world peace and the preservation of our way of life.

They remind us all that this great nation was not established by cowards, nor will cowards preserve it.

America will remain the land of the free only so long as it is the home of the brave.

What we remember and honor on Veterans Day are those brave men and women who believed so much in an idea, and were so possessed by a sense of duty and honor, that they were willing to risk death for it.

And the idea, of course, is freedom.

Freedom is America's heart. It is central to our being, not only because it is practical and beneficial, but because it is morally just and right.

But that freedom can be retained only by the eternal vigilance that has always been its price.

The founders of the United States understood that the military would be the rampart from which America would guard its freedom.

Those of us who have seen the dead and the wounded, the mud and the misery, the suffering and the sacrifice of war, and those who have given their loved ones in mortal conflict, know full well that a democracy can exact a very harsh payment on those who share in its bounty.

Freedom is never free.

As the American patriot Thomas Paine said:

"Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom must ... undergo the fatigue of supporting it ... What we obtain too cheap, we esteem too lightly."

Let it never be said that we Americans esteem too lightly our blessings of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

We may not be the world's policemen, but let us never forget the fundamental lesson of this century, which is, that problems abroad, if left unattended, will all to often come home to America.

We have a responsibility to use and defend our own freedom, and to help others who share our passion for liberty, peace and the blessings of a normal life.

We must, therefore, keep our arms ready and our alliances strong because challenges of the future won't be any easier than those of the past.

Those veterans who returned home after World War II, and those who did not, were all part of a generation from which we take inspiration.

They won the war, planned for peace, and led the country through the second half of the 20th century. Without their subordination of self to the common good, our world would be radically different.

The tradition of the World War II veteran is the tradition of all American veterans.

From Lexington to Concord, that tradition has sustained us in every battle and every war, right up through Desert Storm.

It has marched with us and stood vigil in the frozen camps of Valley Forge, the steaming jungles of the Pacific rim, the bloody beaches of Normandy, the rice paddies of Korea and Vietnam, and the scorching sands of the Persian Gulf.

In that tradition, young, inexperienced Americans become tough, capable soldiers. They become veterans.

This is our day to honor those veterans sacrificed in those struggles and pay our respects to those who survived.

America can never fully repay her veterans. And we will never be able to express our feelings to our fallen comrades.

But if there is a crown in heaven, then they are the stars.

We must never forget how blessed we are in the modem world to live in a free society, nor forget the sacrifices of our friends, relatives, neighbors and countrymen who served us all in the dark hours of war and conflict.

Our duty today is clear, for there are many who need us. Yet, even as America remembers the selfless service of her veterans, there are those who do seem forgotten.

Yes, some of the very ones who survived the atrocities of Bataan; stormed the beaches at Guadalcanal and Normandy, and fought in other campaigns of World War II.

Since then, their numbers have swelled from those who fought in Korea, Vietnam, the Persian Gulf, Somalia, Haiti, Bosnia and in numerous other conflicts.

There are veterans who have lost family and friends, and who face a lonely future. Many are homeless and in need of medical care.

They struggle with war related disabilities.

They also struggle with bureaucratic red tape to get the benefits and health care they need.

Our veterans did not disappoint their nation when it needed their service. They, in turn, should not be disappointed in their times of need.

Throughout history, America's veterans have served and served well.

They saw democracy challenged and they defended it.

They saw civilization threatened and they rescued it.

They saw our rights endangered and they sought to restore them.

Their heroism was prompted by faith in the fundamentals that have guided this nation from its beginnings — the idea that liberty must be protected ... whatever the cost.

We must, therefore, honor and care for those who distinguished their lives in the defense of freedom.

We must provide a dignity befitting heroes ... whatever the cost.

Wherever we are on Veterans Day, we can do no less than pause for one small moment to reflect upon the more than one million heroes who did not return to us — those who gave what Lincoln called "the last full measure of devotion."

Their ultimate sacrifice serves as a constant reminder of the cost of freedom and the hope for a safer, more peaceful world.

And, of course, we should thank the 26 million living veterans who have served their nation so well in war and peace.

We must also remember another important group, the MIAs. They are missing in action, but they are not missing from our hearts.

They are missing from our lives, but not from our thoughts and prayers.

Let us close no books, write no last chapters, reach no final conclusions until we have the fullest possible accounting for every serviceman and woman still missing in Southeast Asia.

We know that if the world is faced with the unfortunate occurrence of war, American men and women will be there to meet the challenges, defend our nation, and work toward peace.

America can and will change, both today and in the future.

However, what must not change — not today, not tomorrow, not ever — is our recognition of the debt we owe to America's veterans for keeping the American way of life safe and free.

Those who served in the armed forces of the United States, are our nation's guardians who protect and defend the sacred traditions entrusted to us by our Constitution.

Stand up, America, and cheer them. Stand up, America, and honor them.

God bless America, and God bless those who love, guard and defend our precious freedom.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thanks from YRC

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Youth Resources Committee extends their most sincere gratitude to the numerous individuals, families and businesses who thoughtfully contributed towards the garage, Teen Center Project.

The response to our request for donations letter sent via October tax bills has been extremely impressive and most generous.

While the donations are vital towards construction of the garage and most appreciated, it is tremendously gratifying to note the community-wide interest and support for this teen venture.

Individual thank you and update letters will be sent to all donors in the near future, however, your generosity, interest, and support is publicly acknowledged and commended on behalf of the Youth of Cohasset.

We will provide updates and announcements via local news media on a frequent basis.

Jack Worley, Chairman
Youth Resources Committee

Halloween Fair thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

For more than 20 years, the Halloween Fair on the Common has been both a fall tradition and the South Shore Community Nursery School's single largest fund-raiser. Again this year, it was a delight to see the children in their costumes scurrying across the Common, parents in tow, to participate in the activities and games. And, as in years past, it was equally wonderful to sense the feeling of community that the fair creates as families and friends met and mingled.

We couldn't have asked for a more beautiful autumn day or a more beautiful place than the Common to hold our event.

On behalf of the staff of the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, I'd like to thank the small army of people who banded together to make our fair a reality. With each year the fair grows and becomes more successful due in large measure to the efforts of these volunteers.

This year's fair was our most successful ever and I remain overwhelmed by the support and generosity of this area's businesses, parents and students. Many, many thanks are due to Doreen and Tony Ambrose, John Bellas of Dunkin Donuts, Dan Belz of Atlantic Bagel, Denise and Garry Bismore of The Silver Spoon, Arlene and Bob Fiori of Fiori's Exxon Station, Andrea and Joe Kinnealey of Kinnealey Meats, and Shaw's Supermarket for their generous donations.

We also owe much to Deer Hill, Middle and High School students of Cohasset who — through their affiliations with the Appalachia Service Project, fifth- and ninth-grade class volunteer projects and Girl Scout Troop 4770 — staffed the activities and games.

And finally, a thank you to our nursery school parent volunteers for their time and tireless energy on behalf of the school, and to the families who each year make the Halloween Fair on the Common a part of their Halloween celebrations. The funds raised through this effort do much to help raise our village's children.

Lynne Sheridan
Director, South Shore Community Center Nursery School

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Historical Society at Pratt Library

TO THE EDITOR:

The Town Meeting debate on re-use of the old Osgood School indicates many questions remain unanswered. The housing option left major concerns about zoning approvals, local need for small units at fairly significant cost, etc. The library option also poses vexing issues to include: A. how is the rest of the building to be used and managed, and B. what is the likelihood of voter approval in view of other priorities and the uncertainty of state assistance?

Overall, I believe the library trustees made a more compelling case. Should their proposal be successful; a decision on the disposition of the existing Paul Pratt Library will be necessary. As a past director of the Cohasset Historical Society, I believe that the town would be best served making the Paul Pratt Library into the headquarters for the Cohasset Historical Society (CHS). The historical society is currently headquartered in the historic Lothrup House that could be sold for about $300,000. The sale should be contingent upon perpetuity covenants which would protect the historic integrity of the Lothrup House. The $300,000 would go to the town. The town would lease the Paul Pratt Library to the historical society for 10 years (the maximum term allowed by law) and a stipulation would be made that renewal of the release would not be unreasonably withheld.

Relocation of the historical society to the Paul Pratt Library is a "win-win" situation. Although of historical significance, the Lothrup House is not functionally adequate. The historical society could more effectively display many of its fine artifacts and the Paul Pratt Library would be a beautiful setting for small gatherings. Personally, I believe it is the historical society's "gown collection" that is most unique. At last, the gowns could be put on display. A beautiful building displaying the "gown collection," as well as our maritime and shipbuilding history, would add greatly to the attractiveness of Cohasset for its residents and visitors.

Paul Pratt Library accessibility issues should still be addressed. However, greater flexibility is allowed when solutions take into consideration the historical significance of the building.

Boosting the voter turnout on Election Day

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Now that most of us — read that "some" of us — no, read that "a few" of us — have returned from the arduous task of choosing the leaders of the Free World for the next two to four years, I can assure you that help is on the way at last.

The town of Amherst, that bastion of academe in the hills of central Massachusetts, has been thinking of fortifying its voter count by allowing alien residents (10 per cent of the town's population) to vote.

"We're all part of the community," Kandula Sastry, a professor of physics at UMass-Amherst, is quoted as saying. He has lived in town for 35 years but is still a citizen of his native India.

"It's expanding democracy," says Vladimir Morales, a UMass graduate student who is a natural-born citizen by birth in Puerto Rico, sponsor of the idea. He's also a Town Meeting member.

Have we reached the point where the turnout at the polls on Election Day is so meager that we have to rely on mercenaries to do our voting for us? Or will we have to wait until we give an election and nobody comes?

In Oregon, they're trying a different approach to voter apathy.

If Ballot Measure 60 in this week's election was approved, voters will be able to mail in their choices. They'll get their ballots by mail weeks in advance and mail them back whenever they feel like it.

"Competing time constraints between work and family make it difficult to find time to vote," says Phil Kiesling, the Oregon secretary of state. That rumbling sound is Sam Adams and John Hancock turning over in their graves.

Of course, we could probably attract a better voter turnout if the issues were taken seriously by the candidates.

How serious can a candidate be when Paul Cellucci charges Scott Harshbarger's campaign with an anti-Italian bias when their campaign ads showed a man wearing a pinky ring, backing it up with Italian-style music?

Or when a U. S. senator, New York's Al D'Amato, calls his opponent a "putzhead" on a public platform. That's Yiddish for "fool" but putz has another slang meaning that restricts its use in mixed company?

Or when Al Lewis, who played Grandpa in the 1960s television series "The Munsters" asks to be listed as "Grandpa Al Lewis" on the ballot where he is running as the Green Party's candidate for governor of New York?

Or when Jacqueline Ledgerwood can win a Democratic primary for the United States senate in Oklahoma - two months after she died.

On the other hand, elections can be taken too seriously by the candidates as well as the voters.

Like Byron Looper, who was running against State Senator Tommy Burks in Tennessee and was disavowed by his Republican party even though he changed his middle name to "Low Tax."

He tracked Burks down on his hog farm and shot him.

But all of this may be a thing of the past by the time of the next presidential election in 2000.

A Gallup Poll taken for USA Today and CNN reveals that George W. Bush, the governor of Texas and former president's son, will defeat Al Gore by a landslide.

Now that we know that, we won't be faced with the difficult chore of going to the polls - or even mailing in our ballots.

cast their ballots; at 2:20 p.m., the total was 1,603; and by 4 p.m., 36 percent of the voters, or 1,915, had cast their votes.

According to election worker Louise Scholtes, a large number of young people voted.

"I think that's great," she said.

Election worker Merle Graham was kept busy all day, as were others working at the polls.

"It's unbelievable, there's never been a lull," she said.

Jodi Butman, a parent who was supervising the refreshment stand operated by Cohasset Youth Resources, said she thought controversy surrounding the President brought the voters out.

"I think the whole mess with Clinton has made us take seriously who we're voting for," she said.

State Republican committee vice chairman Polly Logan and Cohasset Democratic committee member John McNabb were prognosticating outside the polls Tuesday.

Logan, who had been working the polls earlier that day in Weymouth, predicted the gubernatorial race would be close but Cellucci would prevail, which was the case.

McNabb, who was working for the Keating campaign, said the Democrats would do well.

"The Republicans will get Cellucci and Mary Jeanette Murray, and we'll get everything in between," he said.

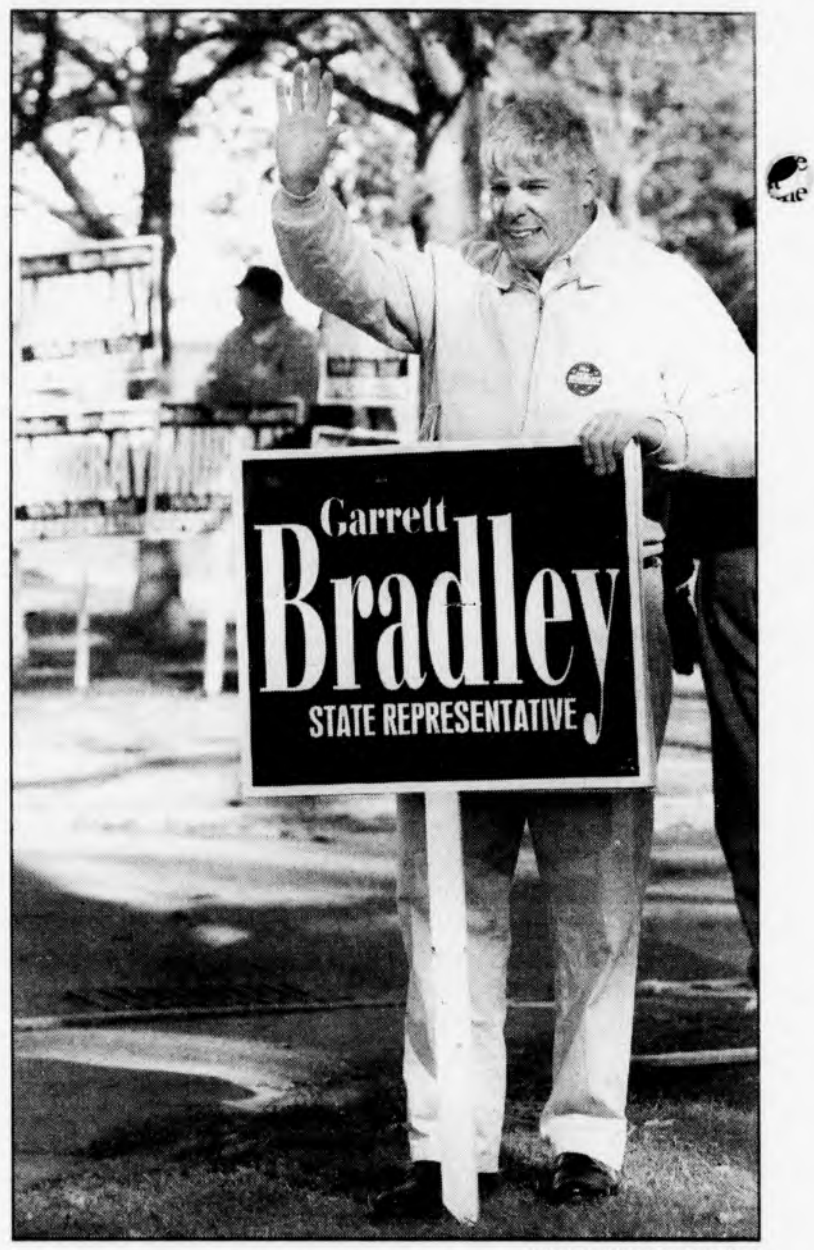
Cohasset is in Norfolk County so the ballot included contests between Norfolk County Sheriff Jack Flood, who was appointed by former Gov. William Weld and Michael G. Bellotti, a Democrat from Quincy and son of Francis X. Bellotti, former state attorney general.

By 10:30 a.m. in Cohasset 800 voters had cast their ballots; at 2:20 p.m., the total was 1,603; and by 4 p.m., 36 percent of the voters, or 1,915, had cast their votes.

Incumbent Republican Jeffrey Locke, who was also appointed by Weld, was in a tight race with William A. Keating, a Democrat and state senator from Sharon who is chairman of the criminal justice committee for Norfolk Country district attorney. The voter turnout in Hingham was excellent, according to Town Clerk Eileen McCracken's expectations.

Fifty-five percent of Hingham's 15,110 registered voters — or 8,288 —cast ballots. Of those registered, about 8,600 are unenrolled.

By noon, 21 percent of the town's registered voters had turned out; 30 percent by 3 p.m.; 38 percent by 5 p.m.; and 44 percent by 6:30 p.m.



McCracken attributed the high number of voters to the race for state representative more than anything else.

Throughout Election Day, there was a steady stream of voters, despite the fact that voting took place at the Hingham Middle School because the high school is under renovation. Parking and heavy traffic posed a problem, but that didn't prevent a high turnout despite bumper-to-bumper traffic.

The results in Hingham were difficult to predict beforehand. Murray signs were more prevalent around town a day or two before the election and on Election Day, but according to some observers, there were more Bradley signs at the polls.

Some noted that both candidates appeared to have a wide range of supporters, including voters of all ages.

Like Hingham, the voter turnout in Hull was good, according to Town Clerk Janet Bennett.

JAW PAIN

Temporomandibular disorder (TMD), a syndrome that affects an estimated 10 million Americans involves the temporomandibular joints that connect the skull and lower jaw. Powerful muscles on the sides of the head and face control the movements of these joints, which are arguably the most complicated in the body. Those with TMD often experience pain, clicking, an inability to open their mouths, or locking of their jaws. This may lead them to seek remedies ranging from braces to surgery. As the diagnosis and treatment of TMD has no clear-cut guidelines, those who experience this problem may want to begin with the most conservative care. If so, chiropractic offers itself as non-invasive care that specializes in skeletomuscular disorders.

Do you suffer with TMD? Maybe chiropractic can help. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, our goal is to understand our patients and their needs. Whether you're suffering from asthma, headaches neck/arm/shoulder pain, low back/leg pain, numbness, injury on the job, or whiplash, call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment for relief. We utilize the most advanced and comprehensive equipment and procedures to deliver the finest chiropractic care. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor. Don't live with pain! Give chiropractic a try. Have you heard about our "Mothers' Morning Out?" Come in and find out about the benefits of chiropractic. Get your family's support in achieving optimum health. On November 14th we will be providing services in exchange for food goods to benefit the Scituate Food Pantry. New patients are welcome.

P.S. Chiropractic treatment can also address the joint and muscle discomfort that dental patients may experience in the aftermath of lengthy care.

Lots of heart at election night parties

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Throughout the Sons of Italy Hall in Hingham, "Murray for Representative" balloons in gr[illegible] and black mingled with crepe streamers that hung expectantly over the jocular and nervous crowd.

Some sat at tables and some at the bar, while others clustered around the TV set and talked about chances. To the right of an American flag backdropped podium, folk singer Tommy Claffey provided the music that was nearly drowned out by the crowded roomful of supporters; many of the 70 in attendance chose to wait out the voters' count by reminiscing about longtime incumbent Mary Jeanette Murray's past good deeds.

Murray herself was in an upstairs room with family members, unruffled and amiable at 8:45 p.m.

Though the votes for Hingham were already in, Murray wanted to stay mum on the results. Purportedly, a voting machine broke down in Cohasset, which would require a hand count that could take until midnight. The Hull results weren't in yet, either. Still, Murray held her own.

"Phil and I liked to wait until after all three towns were in, but I may have to do it after two towns are in," said Murray, referring to her late husband's election style.

"I really feel kind of calm," added the 22-year state representative for the Third Plymouth District, who has racked up 270 sponsored laws since 1977.

Within a quarter-hour, Murray was called downstairs to the pay phone in the front hall. But for the rise of color to her cheeks, Murray was poker-faced and would have remained so—except for the fact that her son had already informed the crowd that Democratic hopeful Garrett Bradley had just phoned in his concession to Murray.

A standing ovation ensued, with many in the hall teary-eyed.

"I told you," said Sue Mills, who earlier in the day had predicted that the voters were turning out for Mary Jeanette. "She's terrific. She's everywhere and does everything for everybody. I can't even talk," said the overcome Mills.

Murray announced to the crowd that she would wait for her daughter, Lillian Murray-Curley, to return from Hull before addressing the crowd. "I guess you've all heard what happened?" she asked.

"No! Tell us!" the crowd yelled back, laughing and applauding.

When Murray took the podium again at 9:15 p.m., the audience was still hugging and slapping backs.

"Hey! All the people out there," barked Murray to the excited gatherers to get their attention. "I want to thank all the people who went out at 6 in the morning. I also want people to know that I'm still 25 and dye my hair white. But really, to everybody here and everybody who supported me, I'm extremely grateful. From the bottom of my heart, thank you."

Curley took the microphone and said, "The amount of money spent on this campaign was far too much for this kind of campaign."

Bradley, a former Plymouth County assistant district attorney, had raised about $100,000 in campaign contributions.

"My mother won because people know that she's honest and that she cares for the people," said Curley. "And I've told her that if she runs again, I'm going to have to kill her."

"Garrett Bradley has called to concede," said Murray. "Go have fun!"

Hull resident Gloria B. Cohen, sitting near the podium and talking with Claffey, extolled Murray's virtue. "She is one of the finest human beings I have ever met," she said. "She has such empathy. I've known many politicians, but she's one of the few you can call late at night with an emergency."

It was Cohen's community volunteer work that led her to place a call to Murray one night.

"It was 10:30 p.m. and I called her about some parents with cancer who had kids and no place to stay. Within 15 minutes, they had a place to go. She uses her political skills for all people. She goes out of her way to do good."

Hinghamite Kevin Woody agreed. "I think she's part of the community," he said. "This is what she does and this is all she wants to do—be your representative. That's very important. There are a lot of issues that need to be dealt with in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset and if you look at her record, I think she's done a good job."

Campaign worker Nancy O'Toole received a humorous thanks from Murray. "I'm yelling at Nancy, she's yelling at Lillian, and Lillian is yelling at me; but as usual, Nancy O'Toole came through.

O'Toole was still campaigning for Murray though the election was won. "She's brought in billions of dollars to the three communities and she supports the death penalty," she said, pulling out campaign brochures that outline Murray's position on key issues.

But the campaign was over just a short distance down at Stars on Hingham Harbor, where Garrett Bradley and his supporters held their election night party.

"I could be better," said a flushed Bradley, after conceding defeat to Murray.

Disappointed gatherers were still around after 10 p.m., long after Bradley offered Murray his concession.

I knew we were in trouble when we lost Hingham," he said. "It was an exciting race and I did everything I could to win. I commend Mary Jeanette on her campaign and I congratulate Mary Jeanette on her win."

Bradley said he most wants to thank the more than 7,000 voters and supporters who cast their ballots for him; especially one who parked his car, left his dog in the vehicle, and ran to the polls to cast his vote for Bradley.

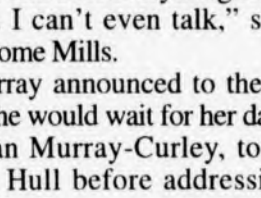
"Garrett's running gave people a lot to think about, even if he didn't win," said his wife, Heather. "And we did get a lot of votes. I'm proud of him. It was a lot of work. We met so many great people and made a lot of friends."

Heather Bradley said she felt the number of votes cast for her husband shows people are thinking about the issues and took Garrett seriously.

"They realized he has a good heart and ants to serve the public," she said.

Many of those making their leave offered handshakes or hugs to Bradley and congratulated him on his election campaign.

As for what the future holds for Bradley, some time with family seems to be his immediate concern.



"I would like to spend some quality time with my wife. I'd also like to take some time to reflect on what's happened. I've enjoyed my experience in this town and may open a legal practice here. I'm just not sure yet."

PLUMBING MUSINGS
by Philip Von Iderstein M.P. #8829

MISS ELLIS

Miss Ellis lived in a stately well kept Victorian house a short distance from the shop. We all knew her from church where she attended every Sunday, and we also could recognize her by her sophisticated style and prudish manner. Living in such close proximity if she needed a job done, she would simply stop in the shop and give us directions on exactly what she wanted. The shop was on the main thoroughfare through our small town and the office faced the street with shelves and storage in an adjoining area behind. One day Miss Ellis stopped by and informed the secretary just what the problem was. Elsie, knowing that one of the men was in the back room, came to the open doorway and yelled "Miss Ellis has got a leak under her kitchen sink." The plumber who happened to be my Uncle Evan yelled "Tell Her To Go Ahead." "Miss Ellis is standing here with me." Silence permeated the air. "Oh okay, I'll be right there."

COHASSET SPORTS

The Scituate/Cohasset Midget youth football team will be playing Saturday night under the lights at Scituate High in the semi-finals of the Old Colony League championship. Kick-off is scheduled for around 8 p.m.

Youth football hosts playoffs Saturday

The undefeated Scituate-Cohasset Sharks Midget football team begins its quest for a second consecutive Super Bowl championship in a playoff game at the Scituate High School athletic field Saturday night.

Kickoff will be at 8 p.m. against a team to be determined.

This is the first round of two playoff games which decides the Super Bowl champions for the large town division of the Old Colony Youth Football League.

The winner of Saturday's game advances to the Super Bowl game to be played the following weekend at a site to be announced.

The Sharks, who posted seven wins and one tie during the season, defeated the same Bridgewater team 14-8 during the season.

The Sharks, who are led by head coach Danny O'Brien and assistant coaches Don Davis, Mike MacDonald and Chris Conroy, won last year's Super Bowl in their division by defeating Barnstable in the playoffs and Bridgewater in the Super Bowl.

Coach O'Brien said this year's Sharks team is in many ways stronger than last year's. He said it is centered around an experienced quarterback, Sean Conton; a diverse running game anchored by Danny Hughes and Michael Garland; a proud offensive line built around such second-year players as Austin O'Brien, Peter Garland and Keith Pollard; and a gritty starting defense which has given

A quick tour around the sports desk: File this under not a big surprise: High school athletic directors and football coaches voted to keep the current Super Bowl structure of having two champions in each division.

The coaches are still hopeful that another week of playoffs will be added to the season, but if that happens, you're going to hear from disgruntled basketball and hockey coaches, who don't want to see the start of their season postponed another week.

Take this as a given: High schools aren't going to give up Thanksgiving Day, which is a cash cow for everyone. That takes away the possibility of playing on the last Saturday of November.

Until the coffers are overflowing with money, schools shouldn't give the Thanksgiving Day pay day.

Even if they suddenly get million dollar budgets, Thanksgiving should stay.

Why deny all of the players a chance to play on Thanksgiving, which is a tradition, so that 12 teams can play a playoff game?

Especially when they don't have to.

One solution would be to play the first playoff game on the Tuesday after Thanksgiving and then the playoffs would be the following Sunday.

Super Bowl-bound teams would rest on Friday and have Saturday, Sunday and Monday to prepare for the first playoff game.

If they win, they would rest on Wednesday, practice Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

At that point of the season, teams don't need that much practice time and the Super Bowl week is almost too long.

Think about it.

From the far right corner of the desk:

If you went into a field somewhere in Kingston and screamed coach at the top of your lungs, you probably hear from most of the coaches on the South Shore.

Easily, the Kingston phone exchange is the most popular in high school coaching circles.

In the Oct. 19 ESPN Magazine, one of the suggestions that Brett Hull has for changing hockey is to take the roofs off of hockey rinks.

Hull says, "Don't you think it would be really cool to make rinks like stadiums? Outdoors with tailgating, the blimp, the moon. That would be unbelievable."

I don't think so.

Just the thought of a January day sitting outside at the Rockland Rink

CHS looks to upset some Super dreams

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

It doesn't seem quite fair at times, but it's just the way things go in this crazy world.

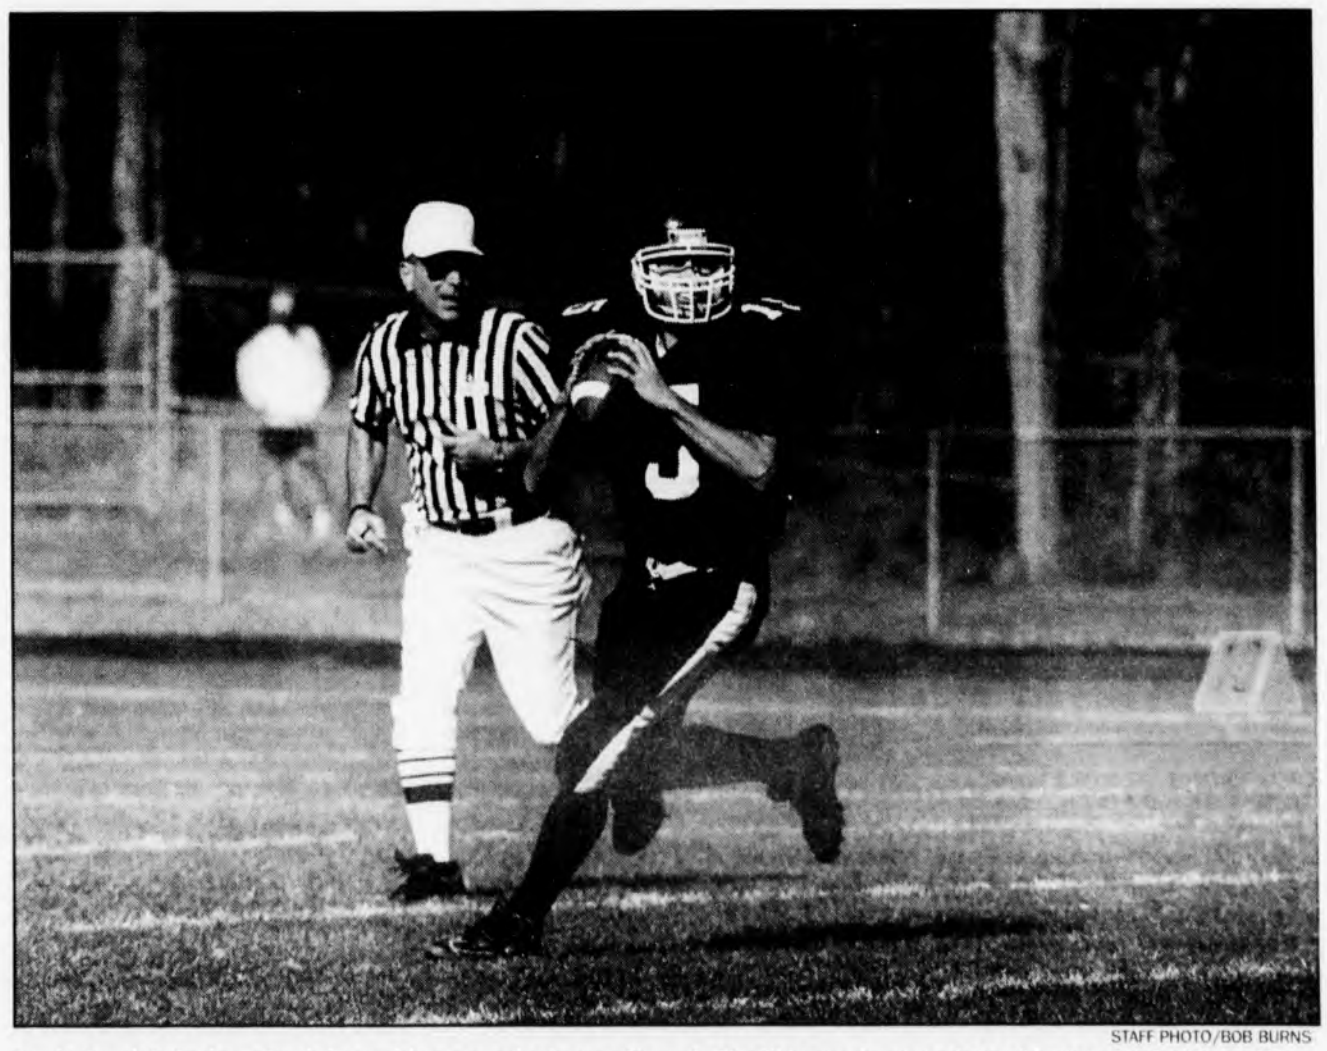
Each week somebody has to step up to the plate and face Brian Fabrizio and the rest of the defending Division 4 Super Bowl champion Norwell Clippers.

And each week for the past two seasons that same someone has gone home, usually battered and bruised, as another notch in the Clippers growing consecutive win column.

This week's contestant is the your hometown Cohasset Skippers, who are flying high after getting the better of Charlestown to the tune of 26-14 in a non-league affair.

The kick-off for the Norwell contest is 5 p.m. from Alumni Field at the high school.

The win over Charlestown sets Cohasset's mark at 4-3, one of the better records seen by the program this late in the season in many a year. With two games remaining (Nov. 13 at Hanover and then back at home on Thanksgiving Day for the traditional Holiday game with Hull), the Skippers need to win one of the remaining three game to guarantee at least a .500 season.



Win or lose, the squad has the respect of Norwell coach Jim Sullivan.

"Cohasset is a senior-based team that has been growing together for a long period of time," said Sullivan. "They have a sophomore back (Daniel Trowers, who has 12 touchdowns), who is as good as any running back we have faced this year. They will be shooting for us but I think we will be ready."

When you are talking about Fabrizio, you are talking about a senior 5'10", 200lb. tailback who is the darling of every college scout's eye up and down the Eastern Seaboard.

The leading scorer in Eastern Mass football, Fabrizio has hit paydirt 28 times this season and connected on

Other teams may have won more games this season and many of them are still alive and playing in the state's post season tourney, but you are not going to find a team that had more fun both on and off the field this season than the CHS girls soccer team.

What else can you say about a team that had the creativity to come up with their own dance routine that they performed before games during the season and then the sheer guts to get out on the floor and perform it at the Homecoming dance.

Move over Macerena nuts.

To the side Tush Pushers.

Step to the back all you Swingers.

Clear the dance floor for the Skipper Shuffle.

"It was just something we came up with out of the blue one day," explained Alyssa McNamara, the senior captain and one of the Skippers' two representatives (along with midfielder Eileen Ridge) to the South Shore League All-Star team. "We were all together at someone's house for the weekly pasta dinner. We had the radio on and we all started dancing.

"A couple of us said jokingly that we should create the official team dance and everyone just seemed to take to it."

The legend just exploded from there as the dance classes expanded to a couple times each week as the squad practiced their moves while waiting for the unavoidable revitalization of the old Solid Gold television show.

"After practice sometime we'd go to someone's house and work on it," admitted McNamara. "I know it seems a little weird but it was something that really bonded us as a team. It brought us closer together."

"I've never been on a team like this before, everyone gets along so well and we all hang out together out of school. We're really a close group."

ALYSSA MCNAMARA

The official team dance was unveiled at the Homecoming celebration to rave reviews.

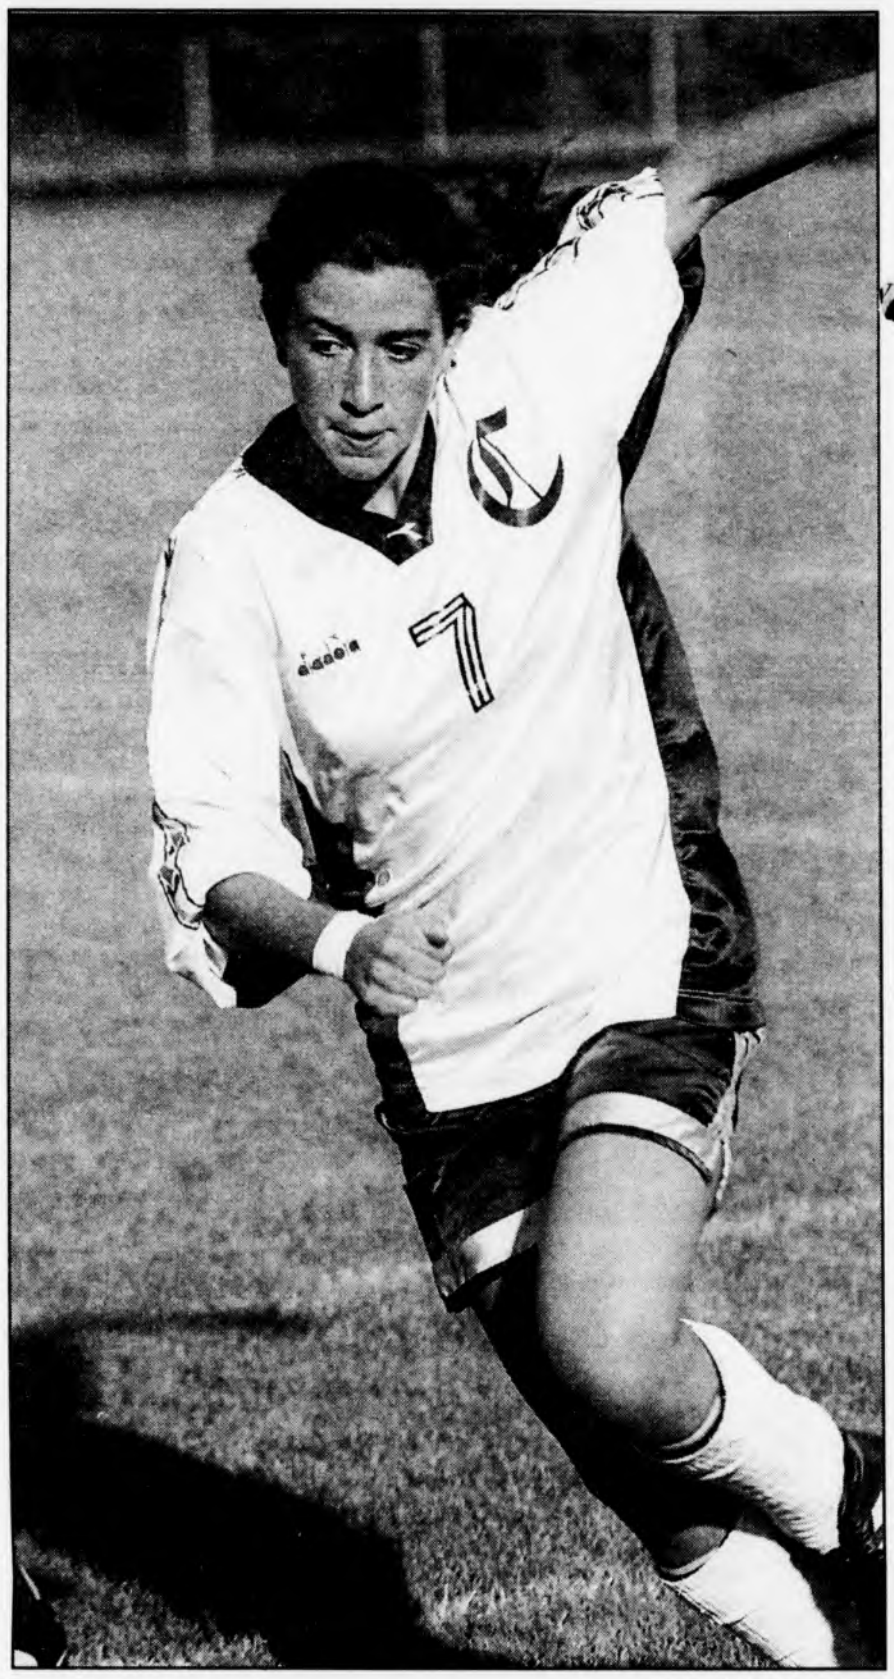
Of course the revelers could do nothing but cheer since McNamara was the voted Homecoming Queen and everyone knows it's not nice to boo royalty.

"It was a great time,' added McNamara. "We got razzed a little bit by our friends, but everyone had fun."

Head coach Debbie Beal said that having fun was one of the things that this team did the best, from their opening day win over Middleboro to a dominating win over Randolph in one of their final home games of the season.

Beal described the aftermath of the Middleboro win, the team's first in two years, as akin to "a block party".

"You could tell right away that this group of kids genuinely liked one another and were happy to be together as a team," said Beal.



"I've never been on a team like this before," agreed McNamara. "Everyone gets along so well and we all hang out together out of school. We're really a close group."

There not only a close group, they're a pretty classy one as well. They were honored as such this season by receiving the South Shore League's annual Sportsmanship Award.

"I think I'm more proud of than they are. It just shows what type of kids they are," said Beal. "They play as hard as anyone, but they are not a mouthy group at all to the other teams or the referees.

"I've never had a problem with this group because of attitude or taunting and I think it's because they are all great friends," added Beal. "They don't harass anyone out on the field and they almost take it personally when other teams get mouthy.

"They are truly an easy going and laid back group. They're just fun to be around."

24 PAT's while amassing 192 points. His closest competitor in Division 4 (Hart Andrade of Ware) is a mere 106 points behind him.

Fabrizio scored four times against Abington two weeks ago and put another four on the board last week against Norton, adding to his average of just under four TD's a game. The law of averages says that there is a good chance the star back will go over the 200 point mark against the Skippers.

According to local experts there are two theories on trying to stop Norwell as they make their way to a repeat Super Bowl appearance: 1. Hijack the bus on the way to the game, or 2. Treat Fabrizio like you were trying to catch a knuckleball and pick him up once he stops moving.

up only one touchdown all season.

The Midgets team is made up mostly of seventh- and eighth-graders, many of whom hope to play for Scituate or Cohasset High School one day.

"It is a good team. It is a solid team. All season we have played as a team. It has not been the kind of effort where only one person stands out," said O'Brien, who is in his fifth year as Midgets' head coach.

"Our defense, I think, has four or five returning starters. We are good in the skill positions," he said.

"When you play as a team, lots of good things happen," O'Brien said. "We just don't have one guy making all the plays."

O'Brien said he and his coaches will work on the team's pass defense during this week's practices and cautioned that Bridgewater is a dangerous team. "If we don't beat Bridgewater this weekend, we don't get into the Super Bowl final game," he said.

Joseph Hughes, president of Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football and Cheerleading said, "The only thing I can say about this year's Midget team is what I have known all season and that is they really played as a team and that it wasn't just one player who stood out. All the kids like each other and hope the best for each other."

Hughes said he was also extremely proud of the Mites and PeeWee teams. The PeeWees just missed a playoff spot and the Mites had all practically first year players. "The Mites and the PeeWees are the future of the Scituate-Cohasset program and they certainly benefited from an abundance of playing time," Hughes said.

Hughes said he hopes that as many of the Mites and PeeWee players and their parents as possible and other townspeople will come out to cheer for the Midgets during this weekend's playoff game.

Two other playoff games involving four teams from other towns in the Mites and PeeWee levels will be played on the Scituate High School field earlier Saturday afternoon. This is the second year that the Scituate-Cohasset program has hosted Old Colony Youth Football playoffs.

Following are the names of the Scituate-Sharks Midget players: Sean Conton, Dan Hughes, Scott Carroll, Andrew Sousa, Rick Mahoney, D.J. Kelliher, Roman Grijalva, Michael Garland, Andrew Ellsmore, Steve Brigham, Bob Kuhn, Brett Clinton, John Chisolm, Patrick Filipi, Jawan Clinton, Mike Shea, Brad Barnard, Matt Sampson, Chris Connelly, Joe Coveny, Austin O'Brien, Chris Komejko, Steve Davis, Steve Bird, Keith Pollard, Josiahs Porter, Mike Neilen, John Sylvester, Brian Marshall, Bobby Ferriter, Chris Cushman, Peter Garland, Geoff Kramer, Matt Cushman, Tom McCarthy, Jared Barelaro, Tim Mullin, Jason Lee and Kevin Thistle.

The Midgets cheerleading squad consists of Nicole Bonomi, Kerry Esposito, Jocelyn Liberty, Marissa Orlando, Sara Sousa, Kathrine Calorio, Nicole Falvey, Colleen McInerney, Erin Perry, Maura Callis, Kelley Dillon, Julie Heffernan, Keelin Mone, Kim Pollard, Katherine O'Donnald, Sara Falvey, Leeann Cushman and Amerila Butman. Cheerleading coaches are Kathy Judge, Sanda Liberty, Chantel Boudreau, Sonny Fiddler and Kiely Trachik.

Tuesday night football?

or Pilgrim Arena is enough to give you chills for a week.

Let's just hope that "Raise the Roof" doesn't become the chant for the folks running the local hockey rinks.

I must admit, though, I could get use to tailgating at hockey games.

Right next to the computer:

All of high school football eyes will be on Norwell on Friday, Nov. 13 when two of the top high school teams in the area clash when Duxbury plays the Clippers in a 6 p.m. game.

It will be a showdown between two of the top running backs in the area in Duxbury's Dave Seger and Norwell's Brian Fabrizio.

Norwell athletic director Bill Gerety is already excited about the match up. He used to be the line coach at Duxbury High and one of the players he coached was the Green Dragons' new AD Tony Battista.

Way in the back of the desk:

One of my favorite stories about Hanover High's legendary coach Judy Schneider:

It was a basketball game in Norton in front of a handful of fans about four years ago. The Lancers' Melanie Kiley, who is now in law school after an athletic career at Brandeis University, dove into the Indians' bench to keep a ball in bounds.

She was unsuccessful, but Schneider turned around to her team.

"That's how you play the game," said Schneider, who called her team over to make her point.

On the subject of basketball, the Massasoit Community College Tournament should have plenty of fireworks this year on the boys side.

Rockland and Avon are battling in one of the games, while Oliver Ames and Randolph are the other match up.

There exists the possibility of a Rockland-Oliver Ames final, which would be one of the games of the year.

Both clubs are loaded and should be contenders for state titles. Rockland coach Bob Fisher has been the guest speaker at the Oliver Ames basketball banquet and is a close friend of their coach, Creig Muscato, who considers Fisher a mentor.

At last year's OA banquet, Muscato was introducing all of the players who will make up the team next year. Everyone was either an All-Hockomock League selection or one of the top defensive players at his position.

After Muscato got done, it was Fisher's turn.

"I don't know if I want to play them," joked Fisher. "This guy is all-league, that guy is the best defensive player in the state. We might not score a point."

Those of us old enough to remember the hockey boom, ought to be getting a little de javu feeling about all of the skating boarding parks being built or being considered in the area towns.

As non-skateboarder, just one question, who is the Bobby Orr of skateboarding these days?

Cohasset Rec offers ski lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct Blue Hill Ski and Snow Board Lesson registrations Thursday, Dec. 3, at the recreation office, Cohasset Town Hall, between the hours of 2:30 and 3:30 p.m. and again in the evening, from 5:30 to 6:30.

Registration forms must be signed by a parent or guardian for participation in this five-week program. Beginner through advanced level instruction is available for children and youth, age 7 and older.

Lessons are scheduled to begin Thursday, Jan. 7, and continue for five consecutive weeks, through Thursday, Feb. 4. The bus will leave each week from town hall parking lot at 3:20 p.m. and return from Blue Hills at about 6:45 p.m.

The fee for the ski lessons and transportation for five weeks is $115 and checks should be made payable to: Town of Cohasset. Those participants who require equipment rentals may rent at Blue Hills and the cost for the five weeks with rental package is $155 per person for skiing and $175 for snow board lesson rental, transportation package, or $115 without snow board rentals.

This is the 22nd year that ski lessons at Blue Hills have been offered through the Cohasset Recreation Department and through the years, hundreds of youngsters have had the opportunity to learn how to ski, or improve their technique.

PSO fall lecture series

Please join the Cohasset PSO for a presentation by Jack Agati on "Birth Order: How Your Place in the Family Affects Your View of the World." This entertaining and informative program explores the many characteristics and styles of behavior associated with the various positions in the family and offers ways in which to use the positive characteristics of each position.

The presentation will begin at 7 p.m. on Nov. 12 and will be held at the Joseph Osgood School.

For further information please call: Maggie Smith 383-1136 or Sarah Porter 383-2029.

Family Math and Science Night

Osgood School's annual Family Math and Science Night for second- and third-graders is Tuesday, Nov. 10, from 6:30 to 8 p.m. in the Osgood cafeteria.

The evening offers innovative, creative ways for parents and children to explore basic math and science concepts using everyday materials found in the home. These "hands-on" activities provide an opportunity for students to develop important problem-solving skills.

Family Math and Science Night for K-1 takes place in the spring. If you have any questions, or would like to help out, call Paula Pozniak at 383-1852.

All school musical

Mark your calendars and save the dates, the CMS/CHS all-school musical, "The Music Man," will be presented at CHS Friday, Dec. 4, and Saturday, Dec. 5, at 7:30 p.m.; and Sunday, Dec. 6, at 2:30 p.m. Reserved tickets go on sale in mid-November. More information will follow.

If any parents, students or teachers are interested in helping with scenery or costumes for the musical, there are big work parties scheduled for Friday, Nov. 6, and Friday, Nov. 13, from 2:15 to 5:15 p.m. at CHS. For more information, call Dee Dee Nicynski at 383-1329.

Cohasset PSO fall fund-raiser

Help raise money for our schools and it could be your lucky ticket to win up to $15,000.

This year the Cohasset PSO has organized a 50/50 Raffle. Only 600 tickets will be sold at $50 each. The winner will receive 50% of the total sold. The fund-raiser will culminate in a two-hour Cocktail Part on Nov. 6 at the South Shore Art Center, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

So take a chance, support our schools and share an evening with friends, live music, hors d'oeuvres and cash bar. Bring your raffle ticket to gain admission to the cocktail party. The winning ticket will be drawn at the party, however the winner need not be present to win.

Raffle tickets are available at: Carousel Antiques, Cohasset Hardware, Buttonwood Books, The Good Sport and the South Shore Community Center.

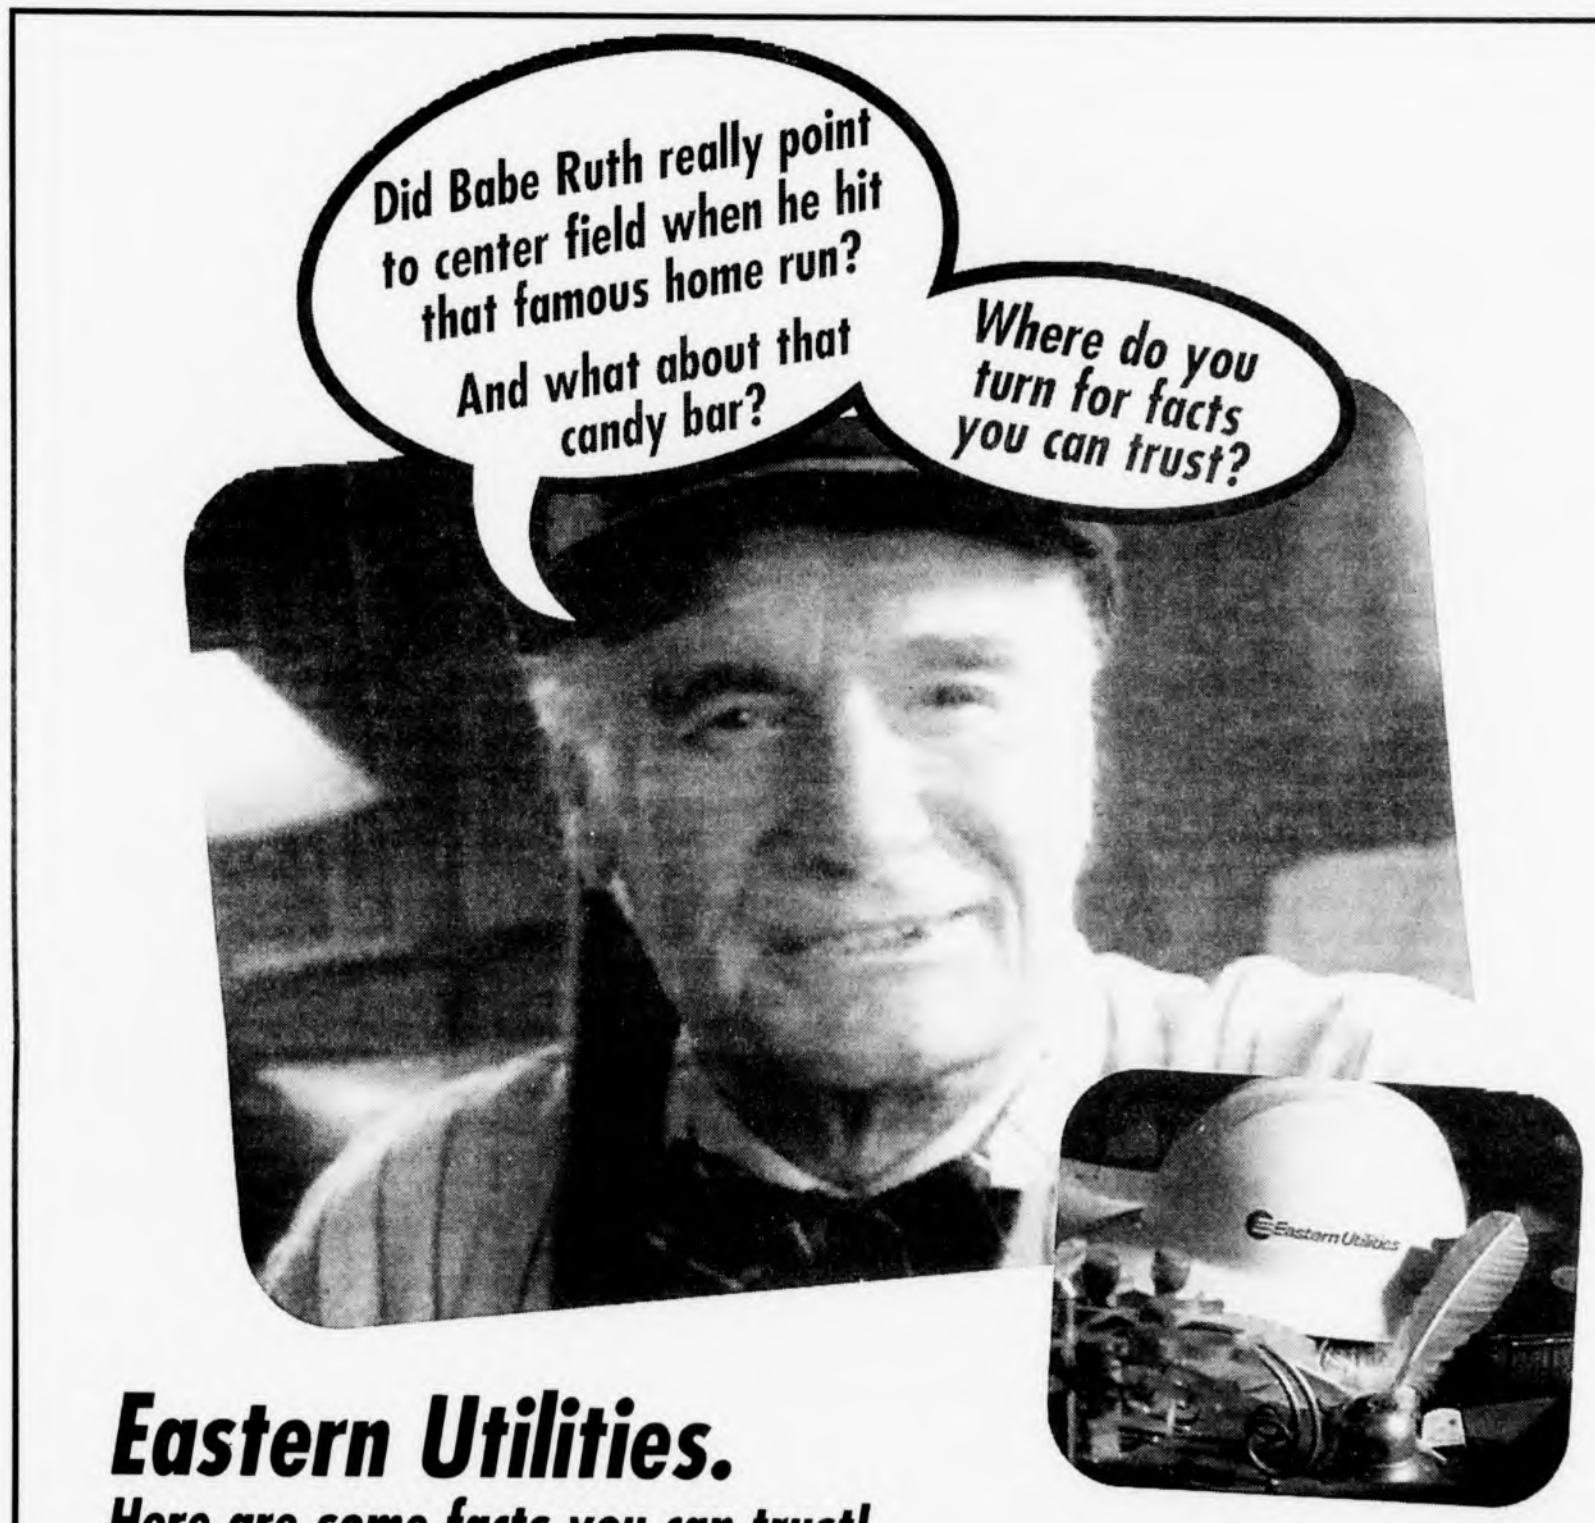
For further information call Kathy Yeager 9820 or Andrea Flynn 6745.

Arts and crafts programs

The Cohasset Recreation Department holds registration for various arts and crafts programs for children age 4 through grade 6, to be taught by Helen Babis-Licare.

Sessions are four weeks in duration, costing $40 per child, which covers the costs of supplies, materials and instruction for four weeks. Classes are scheduled to begin the week of Nov. 16. Osgood and Deer Hill students may stay after school for the programs. Grade K-3 Osgood children are picked up at 5 p.m. at Osgood School, Deer Hill, grades 4, 5 and 6 children are picked up at Deer Hill School at 4:30 p.m. and age 4 and 5 participants will meet at Osgood School from 3:30 to 5 p.m.

MONDAYS: Grades K+1 Osgood 3 to 5 p.m., Nov. 16 through Dec. 7.



TUESDAYS: Grades 2+3 Osgood 3 to 5 p.m., Nov. 17 through Dec. 8.

WEDNESDAYS: Ages 4+5 Osgood 3:30 to 5 p.m., Nov. 18 through Dec. 9.

FRIDAYS: Grades 4, 5+6 Deer Hill 2:30 to 4:30 p.m., Nov. 20 through Dec. 11.

New sessions will begin Jan. 19 through Feb. 12, 1999.

To register, come to the Cohasset Recreation office prior to Friday, Nov. 13, 1st floor, Town Hall.

By the way... As it usually is with legends, these two are a bit cloudy. As for pointing: It was the third game of the 1932 World Series; the Yankees playing at Chicago's Wrigley Field. There was no love lost between the teams - and the Cubs were taunting Ruth as he came to bat in the fifth inning. The Babe took two strikes and then held up two fingers - as if to say: "That's two!" And then he gestured out toward the mound - or maybe the center field bleachers. He hit the next pitch 500 feet into those bleachers - the longest home run ever hit at Wrigley field. Ruth both denied and affirmed that he had indeed pointed. The acclaimed sportswriter Grantland Rice said that Ruth did point - did, indeed, "call the shot." [Source: New York Yankees home page: http://www.yankees.com/ruth.trib/br.story.p4.html] As for the candy bar: The Curtiss Candy Co. in Chicago claimed that the Baby Ruth bar was named for Ruth Cleveland, the daughter of President Grover Cleveland: she was the first baby ever born in the White House. (Ruth Cleveland tragically died of diphtheria at age 13.) However, many people (including the Babe himself) thought the candy bar was named after George Herman Ruth, the Yankee slugger. Media specialist seeks to link library to the world

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

It's been only a month since she came on board, but high school media specialist Joan Gallagher already knows exactly what is needed to transform the library into an organized center for learning and technology.

The call for current computer technology is ubiquitous among school personnel. So much so that the school committee asked town meeting for $350,000 to help bring Cohasset's computer system up to par with other school districts.

"I was surprised at how far behind Cohasset schools are in technology," said Gallagher, who most recently completed a four-year stint as chief librarian at Quincy High School where she oversaw the training of nearly 60 percent of staff and students on Internet use.

That's just what she would like to do in her new digs at the high school library.

"My goal is to be able to work with the incoming technology director so that we can get a more current computer system in place here and train the students on how to use it," she said.

Because of many changes that occur in the competitive computer industry, several years can seriously outmode a computer, which is the situation in Cohasset. "Most of the computers currently in use here were purchased in the early '90s—that's 200 in computer years," quipped Gallagher.

Indeed, Gallagher got on the Net herself in preparation for an incoming class in Applied Technology that wanted to research bridges on the computer. They are currently assigned a bridge-building project.

"Yes, we're set up to access the Net on some of the computers," she admitted. "But even I could fall asleep waiting for the information to come up."

Despite the current slowness of the computers, the students were able to learn a good deal about bridge technology.

"I showed the kids how to use the search engines," she said. "First, they typed in 'bridge' and came up with 300,000 matches. Then, they typed 'suspension,' the section of the world they were interested in, and so on. They have to learn how to use the information that's in there somewhere—it will do them no good to waste time looking through 300,000 matches. The fact is, the Internet is sort of like a library catalogue that spilled onto the floor."

Many Cohasset students aren't strangers to the Net and may often get on it while on their computers at home. But having access to the Net doesn't necessarily mean knowing how to utilize it effectively.

"Even if the kids are set up at home, that doesn't guarantee that they know how to correctly use the Net," said Gallagher. "And since some kids don't have the latest systems at home, we could be creating an educational system of haves and have-nots when it comes to computer technology."

During her four years in the Quincy school system, Gallagher saw how the Internet can be used in innovative ways that allow students a more active approach to learning than the traditional "note-taking" style of learning.

For example, special education students have been found to benefit from the new technology which allows them to go over information as many times as they might need. Also, if a given topic piques the student's interest, it will take only seconds to follow up on other sites. For a child with, say, an attention deficit, those seconds can make a difference. The short time that it takes for an ADD student to locate another encyclopedia volume may be long enough to get caught up in something else entirely unrelated.

"Studies say that SPED (special education) students using the CD-Encyclopedia do well," she said. "They can go at their own pace. know that they won't break anything and the program has a simple logic to it. They can learn about the universe, if they choose. This is the way teaching can be revolutionized open the walls of the library to include the rest of the world."

Including the rest of the world, indeed. How about a school "vacation" to Madrid with $1,000 allotted to each student for travel?

That's what one Spanish language class in Quincy got to do. "One girl wanted a bubble bath in a fancy hotel and another student found himself a hosta and public transportation," Gallagher said. "Each student came up with a different way to spend their money in Madrid exactly to their liking. These kids may get to travel somewhere down the road. Wouldn't it be nice for them to know what to expect when they do and maybe even make friends with people through the Net in advance of arriving there?"

Making "friends" on the Net was the outcome of another Quincy class, which found an Australian pen-pal/teacher through the "Walkabout" program.

"Walkabout" involves students in the adventure of two Australian kids lost in the outback with an aborigine child leading them back to civilization.

"The kids found a man who taught aborigines," said Gallagher. "As they tried to figure out which route the aborigine guide would take with the Australian kids, the students corresponded their ideas to the man via the computer. They typed in to him how they would make their way through the outback. It was also a text-based program. The students had to write sentences, word process and there was geography involved."

"Of course, the kids had regular 'kid questions,' such as 'Do you have D'Angelo sub shops there?' and 'What do Aborigines eat?' That sort of humanized it," she said, referring to the trans-global correspondence that evolved into friendly conversation from the "Walkabout" program.

Gallagher laments the world of knowledge Cohasset students are missing due to their outdate computer technology.

"We could have access to so much on line that at this time we can't easily get into," she said. "We could have full text access to 1,000 journals, but we don't because we don't have the power. There is so much information and the kids can't get to it. They're all going to college for the most part, but even if they weren't, they should be able to learn about this technology and benefit by it. We could share resources with libraries around the world, if our technology were updated. Imagine what the kids could do with that."

Another learning benefit for the students is the energizing effect the Internet can have on teachers. For example, there is a page on the Internet that has 1,000 lesson pages. "It's great if you're getting dry," she explained. "Also, you can contact professionals around the world and share resources and ideas."

Aside from the benefit of technology, Gallagher would like to get the library's books in order.

"The technology is actually my second goal," said Gallagher, who first plans to get the shelves in order with the help of volunteers.

"We're thinking we can bribe some people to volunteer by training them on the 'Net," said Gallagher. "We'll need them to be able to help with training students later. But they will also be doing some of the stuff that lacks glamour, such as filing and that sort of thing.

Cohasset libraries, in general, have fallen by the wayside, according to Gallagher. "The Paul Pratt Memorial Library's Internet is very limited," she said. "It's only text-based. They're just not set up as a library should be. There's no really good story area for the children and the children's room could use some improvement, in general." Having served as director of the Avon Public Library for eight years, Gallagher is surprised at how far behind Cohasset is in offering library services that other, less affluent towns now enjoy.

For now, Gallagher is biding her time, weeding out obsolete books, while waiting for the new computers and other communications technology that town meeting approved.

"This can and should be the center of learning in the school," she said. "It is a classroom. The library staff is not peripheral. I have a masters in curriculum consulting. A good part of my job will be about knowing what is being taught in the classrooms and helping find resources for those courses on the Net. I can be a help to the teachers while also managing the budget and general running of the library.

"That's why I love the job," said Gallagher. "I get to do a lot of different things and come in contact with just about everybody in the school. I think it's the best job you could have."

Luncheon and fashion show benefits GEMS of Hope

Come kick off the holiday season at GEMS of Hope's festive luncheon and fashion show at Kimball's By-The-Sea Tuesday, Dec. 1. Lunch is from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. Enjoy an exclusive show of ladies' and children's holiday fashions from Neiman Marcus and Oilily.

Proceeds from the event will benefit GEMS of Hope projects, all designed to help women build better lives for themselves and their children. Ongoing GEMS projects include funding for the Mary Martha Learning Center in Hingham, funding for a children's school and adult education center in the poverty-stricken community of Pici, Brazil, and loans for women in Baranquilla, Columbia, to start small, home-based businesses. Enjoy an elegant afternoon and make a difference in the lives of women and children.

Tickets are $35. Baby-sitting is available for $5 per child ($10 per family). Call Midge Stone at (781) 383-2281 or Victoria Hurley at (781) 383-9509 for more information or to reserve your tickets and baby-sitting.

Jingle Bell Walk is Nov. 27

The Fifth Jingle Bell Walk will take place on Friday, Nov. 27 (rain date Nov. 28). Join the festivities beginning at 2 p.m. as Mr. and Mrs. Claus arrive at Cohasset Harbor by lobster boat and join in the parade to the Community Center for songs, cookies and punch. The Bells of St. Stephen's Carillon will ring and the bell tower will be open to the public. Later, there will be a gathering on the common for lighting the Luminaria and tree, music and hayrides.

Scituate illustrator to sign

Scituate artist and illustrator Dean Morrissey will draw and sign copies of his new book, "The Song of Celestine," Saturday, Nov. 7, from 10 a.m. to noon at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset.

James Redfield's story of personal inspiration, "The Celestine Prophecy," has been adapted to poetry by Dee Lillegard in an unusual picture book for children. "The Song of Celestine" is a poetic fable whose illustrations by Morrissey not only depict the young boy who "finds his path, but loses his way" while wandering in the woods, but helps the reader understand the meaning of this journey back to safety. A self-taught artist, Morrissey is also the author and illustrator of "Ship of Dreams" and "The Great Kettles: A Tale of Time."

Chamber eyes old teen center

Public restroom possible for village

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Now that the Teen Center has moved out of the Independence Building, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce would like to move in.

Well, not exactly.

But the chamber is interested in buying the building from the town so it could lease out the upstairs and part of the first floor as offices and install a public restroom on the ground level. There is no public restroom in the village — so visitors and shoppers must ask local merchants and businesses to use their facilities when nature calls.

Town Manager Mark Haddad strongly recommends disposing of the building and would like to see it razed. Faced with mothballing the old Osgood School for 18 months while a library proposal for that building comes to fruition, Haddad said he doesn't fancy being responsible for another vacant structure.

Chamber vice president Dean Rizzo said initially the chamber hoped the Cohasset Historical Society would "partner" with the chamber to do something with the old building which once housed the po-

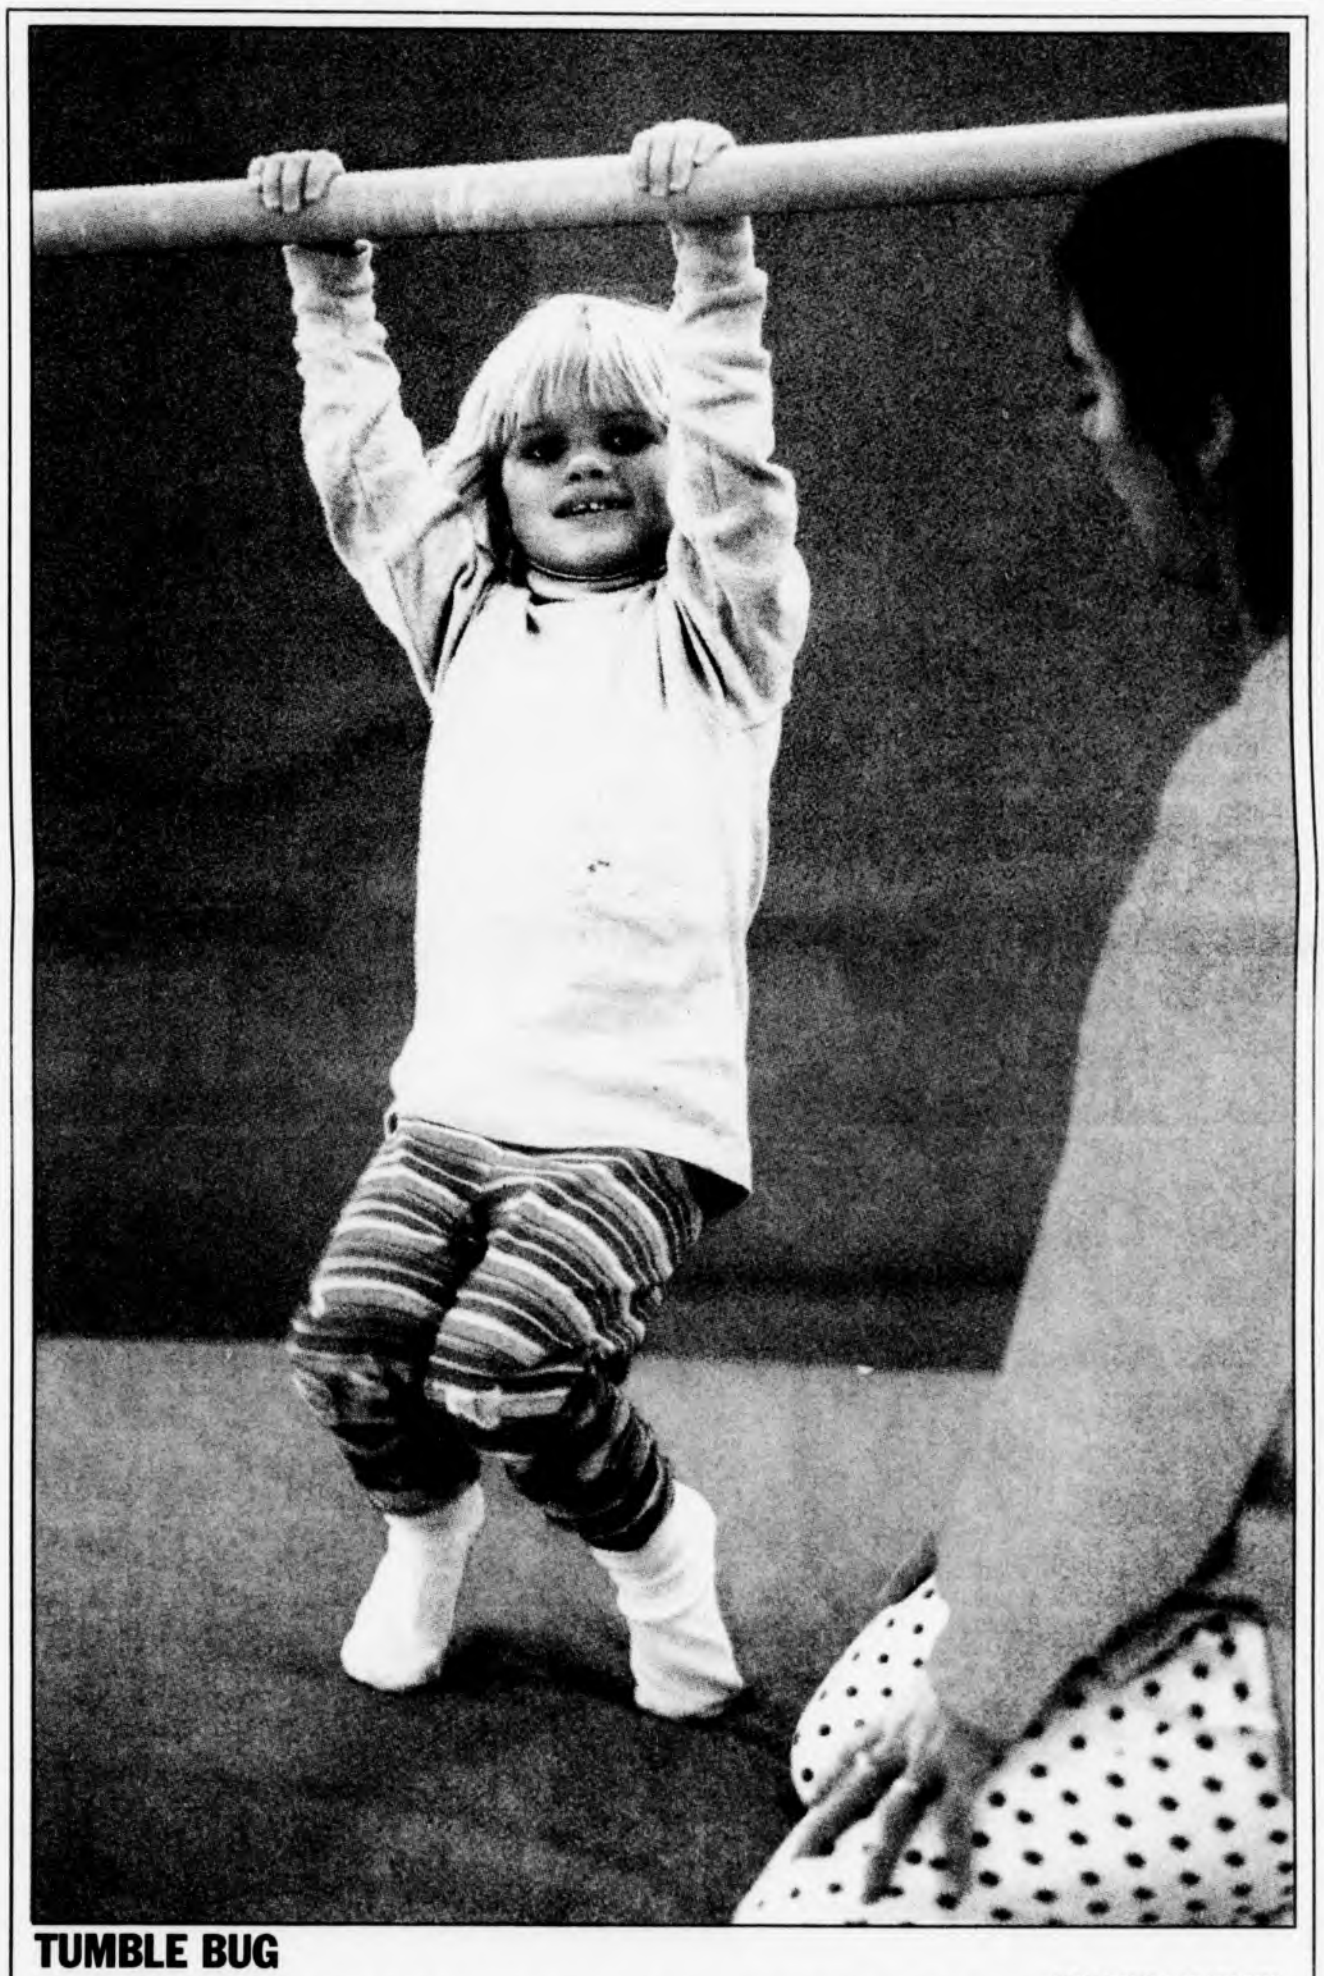
Jerusalem Road subdivision faces another hurdle

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

An appeal by Jerusalem Road residents could further slow down a Weymouth developer's plans to build a 23-home subdivision on the former Curtis Estate.

The appeal, brought before the planning board by attorney Richard A. Henderson, who represents Kenneth and Debra Brewer, is only the latest in a growing number of hoops that developer Steven Corey will need to jump through in order to bring his subdivision to fruition.

In this latest issue, Henderson is arguing that in approving the plan last month the planning board allowed a "more non-conforming lot than (what) already existed there."



The move by the Brewsers was not entirely unexpected by board members, given the amount of opposition that has followed Corey's plans. What did surprise board Chairman Al Moore, however, was the nature of the appeal.

"He raised a very interesting point in his appeal," said Moore.

"It has a side lot set back, but now it also has a street set back which was created and not pre-existing," said Henderson. "Houses aren't supposed to be within 30 feet of a plot line or 50 feet of the street. The 30-foot situation was old but the 50 foot is new."

Selectmen set new tax rate

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

While the tax rate is going down, the amount of property tax homeowners pay is going up.

Selectmen set the tax rate for fiscal year 1999 at $14.95, down ten cents per $1,000 of assessed valuation from last year's rate of $15.05. The fiscal year began July 1.

If homes in town had stayed the same or had gone down in value, this would be good news for the property owner.

But assessors recently completed a town-wide revaluation of property with most values rising.

The average Cohasset home last year was assessed at $322,324 with a tax bill of $4850.97; this year that same home is assessed at $341,124 with a tax bill of $5,099.80, a jump of $248.83.

Assessor Cheryl Pooler said the new tax rate would be reflected in the third quarter tax bills which will be sent out next month. The amounts due on the first two quarters' bills were estimates, she said.

Harbor walkway floated

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

For an estimated $2-$3 million, the village and harbor could be linked by a red brick sidewalk, bike paths and boardwalk along the water's edge, officials said.

The walkways are part of a study, which is paid for with a $5,000 state grant, completed this week by local architect Jim Shipsky to improve public access to the harbor.

The walkway would go from the Hagerty property to Government Island, then along Border Street to Veteran's Memorial park, and then a floated boardwalk would go behind Kimball's to Wheelwright Landing. The walkway would also continue along Elm Street to the village center.

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Register to vote

Any citizen of the United States, who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting or election day, may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before each town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections

The last day to register to vote for the Special Town Election Saturday, Dec. 5, is Saturday, Nov. 14. The Clerk's office will be open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before Nov. 14.

Override election is Dec. 5

The town override election for the North Cohasset sewer project is slated for Dec. 5. The polls will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. at town hall.

The ballot vote will determine how the $2.7 million needed to complete the project will be paid back. If the override passes, the cost will be divided between the users and all taxpayers. If it fails, the users will pay back 100 percent of the cost through betterments.

Building fee not waived

In a majority vote, selectmen decided not to waive the building permit fee estimated at $18,000 for construction of the new $1.8 million parish hall at St. Anthony's Church.

They also decided to change wording in their policy so it doesn't leave the door open for future requests. The old policy said the board shall not waive fees "as a matter of course" meaning that requests should come before them for discussion. They decided to strike that phrase and support the policy that all nonprofit organizations must pay the building permit fee.

Selectmen Merle Brown and Nan Roth wanted the fee waived and were opposed to the change in policy.

Volunteers sought to hang lights

Selectmen are seeking volunteers to hang Christmas lights on the fruit trees around the duck pond for the upcoming Jingle Bell Walk. The South Shore Community Center paid $700 last year to light the trees and has said installing the lights is too much of a financial strain for the center. The annual walk is slated for Nov. 27.

Town Manager Mark Haddad will also check with DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield to see if town employees could hang the lights.

Any volunteers should contact Haddad at 383-4105.

Liquor stores open Sundays

As permitted under state law, selectmen will again allow openings of package stores on from noon to 9 p.m. on Sundays from Nov. 22 through Dec. 27.

Call boxes, a hot item

Town Manager Mark Haddad said so far he has received about 105 requests for the town's 112, obsolete fire call boxes.

Selectmen decided this week to sell the boxes to those residents who wrote to Haddad for $50. Only one firebox will be allowed per family. Money generated from the sale will be deposited into a gift fund, they said.

Selectman Diane Sullivan did not support charging residents for the fireboxes.

Absentee ballots for Special Election

Absentee ballots for the Special Town Election Saturday, Dec. 5, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Friday, Dec. 4. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand-delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand-deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Dec. 5 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instruction to voters are printed on the ballot. To vote, completely fill in the OVAL to the right of your choice.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Men's breakfast club draws a crowd

New group forms to accommodate growing numbers

Alwyn Merrill and Cliff Ward chat over breakfast at the weekly meeting of the Chanticleers at the Red Parrot in Hull.

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset-based Chanticleers — that's French for "roosters," explained founder Alwyn Merrill — have something new to crow about. The 65-and-over men's group that has proven so popular among South Shore retirees is forming an offshoot, Chanticleers II, to accommodate male aging baby boomers who are coming along in years.

"I started the group 10 years ago," said Merrill. "I was 73 at the time and thought it might be nice to go to the Senior Center and take some of the guys out. So I spoke with Kathy Bryanton, who heads up the Council on Aging. She said, 'Really, the only problem we have at the Center is that the men won't get involved,' and she gave me the name and phone number of two men, 92- and 83-years-old."

Merrill drove the men out to Hull, which they hadn't seen in years because they could no longer get about by car on their own, and the three had a great time. So much so that the retired ophthalmologist had a vision — why not turn this visit into weekly jaunts?

The Chanticleers have since grown to include 46 members, with 25 to 30 men showing up weekly, on average. The men are drawn from all of the South Shore towns.

"I'd say it's a pretty wonderful group of retirees," said John Atkinson, an eight-year member. "It's something I look forward to every Wednesday morning. Just to get together with the guys for breakfast."

Newcomer Jack Golden, who has been with the group for less than a year, said that it's "the comradeship of the individuals" that proves to be the draw.

"What I like about it is that most of the fellows are retired folk from all walks of life, yet we have become a very homogenous group. Many of us used to see each other in the stores and might wave 'hi' or 'bye,' but now we know each other. You make friends — you have to become friends if you're sitting next to a guy every week," he said.

The popularity of the group has slimmed down their restaurant pickings. As they've grown in size, the restaurants large enough to accommodate them have been trimmed down from 27 to nine. Favorites include Kimballs By The Sea in Cohasset, the Red Parrot in Hull, The Hitching Post in Hanson and several country clubs.

"Our size is a little cumbersome," admitted Merrill. "But we still do what we've always done. We meet up at the Bancroft Street tennis courts near the Cohasset High School and then we all go to eat. We're always treated well by whatever restaurant we go to and I make sure to schedule our breakfast with them ahead of time."

"You should see the way we all meet up for the breakfast," laughed Golden. "Everyone just pairs off automatically. All of a sudden, you've got a whole bunch of cars and everyone starts going into other people's cars It's not planned. It just happens."

"We're on the elderly side, we're retired and we don't know anybody because all our lives, we've worked and spent our spare time with our families. But now, when we go to the shopping center, we run into buddies there."

— ALWYN MERRILL

The group is successful in a way that the senior centers have not been for older men. Why it is that men have traditionally steered clear of the centers is difficult to say.

"You do seem to see mostly ladies in senior centers" admitted Ed Gledhill, editor of the Worcester-based Senior Times, an award-winning publication for senior citizens. "There are plenty of senior centers around, but I know that retired men's clubs are growing in popularity. It could be a growing trend."

Area demographics released by South Shore Elder Services, Inc., show that the total population of people aged 60 or over comprises, on average, 19 percent in South Shore towns. Roughly 30 percent of that number are over 75 years in age.

Indeed, the Cohasset Council of Elder Affairs reports that as of 1996, the over 60 population of 1594 in Cohasset is comprised of 931 women and 663 men.

That comes as no surprise to Scituate Council on Aging chairman Ed McCann, "The fastest growing population segment is 80 years and older. I'm not saying it's the largest, but the fastest growing. There are some demographic numbers that say by the year 2020, 70 percent of the population will be over age 60. We're at a point where we have to start viewing our older years as part of a lifelong learning process."

McCann, who served as Cohasset's interim town manager two years ago, jokingly chalks up the scarcity of men in senior centers "to subconscious machismo."

"Going out with the guys just feels different than going to a senior center," he said. "We have a group here that's similar to the Chanticleers. It's called the men's 8:59 club. They also meet up in a restaurant for breakfast, but they follow it up with some type of program that ranges in anything from an individual speaker to a group."

The program is one of the most successful at the Council, according to McCann. It generates anywhere from 40 to 60 attendees. With some people taking early retirement and a good number of the seniors living longer and in better health due to medical advances, they're looking for enrichment programs.

"For men to have been so active over the years and to come home, retire and sit in a rocking chair is the worst thing they can do," said McCann. "Some people are content with a hobby, but it's great to be able to go out with buddies and pick or choose an interest through a program. It works well for everyone. Spouses can come home, happy with their experience, and they have something to talk about with each other, as well."

And talk is what the men's groups seem to enjoy doing most.

"The jokes bounce around but we also talk to each other privately," said Golden. "You end up talking and everyone gets involved. One member happened to mention a legal problem to a member who turned out to be a lawyer. We have doctors who have been extremely beneficial to some of the guys, explaining what to expect with surgical procedures. We have professors who we learn something new from all the time. We also have the 'Funny Hour' where someone gets up and tells some jokes—nothing too vulgar."

"We get a little on the loud side," admitted Merrill, about the cacophony of men's voices that join together at mealtime once a week. "Well, it's loud until the food comes," he clarified.

Announcements are made by a clinking on glass which is enough to quiet the men.

"We don't hold elections and that's mostly because people volunteer their services," said Merrill. "When the treasurer gets tired, it's over and a new volunteer steps in."

Volunteers also show up to drive a house-bound member to the weekly breakfast, visit an ailing member in the hospital or provide support when needed.

"I think there is a feeling among men that seniors centers are about knitting classes for women. These groups are more attractive to them and give them a social circle that most of them used to have through work."

— NASREEN SHIBLI, S.S. ELDER SERVICES

"I think the breakfast club is an excellent idea," said South Shore Elder Affairs Director of Planning, Nasreen Shibli. "I think there is a feeling among men that seniors centers are about knitting classes for women. These groups are more attractive to them and give them a social circle that most of them used to have through work."

Because the Chanticleers have so many interests, the group has formed sub-clubs that meet for bridge, supper, sailing, an overnight foliage visit to Vermont and a mid-winter visit to the Cape that included swimming in the hotel's heated pool and walking on the beach.

The success of the group has drawn about four new members each year, according to Merrill's calculations. With so many members already joined, the time seemed right to start a new club.

"There are lots of baby boomers coming along in years and I'm sure that they will be building up their group just like we did," he predicted. "We just have a wonderful time. Many of the men have belonged to groups before, like Kiwanis. But in this group, there's a friendship that develops.

"We're on the elderly side, we're retired and we don't know anybody because all our lives, we've worked and spent our spare time with our families. But now, when we go to the shopping center, we run into buddies there."

Member Joe Willard, who records many of the group's activities on computer, keeps an updated of members' names with hobbies listed alongside. For the Chanticleers, a fishing partner, bowling "team," or tennis buddy is only a phone call away.

"We come from a different era," explained Merrill, about the Chanticleers' ability to get on so well with one another. "We grew up in a time where we trusted one another. We settled on a handshake and didn't need lawyers. We still work within that world."

Modernism can creep in though. "Sure, we've had some women who have joked about women's liberation and how they're going to storm our men-only club," he laughed. "But it's a guy's club and the women are just kidding with us. Really, it would be great for them to create something like this for themselves, too."

lice department.

But the society said it has enough to manage, Rizzo said.

He said the chamber would work with the South Shore Chamber of Commerce to renovate the building into useable space by redoing the top floor and refurbishing the downstairs to include a public restroom.

Selectman Diane Sullivan was skeptical that tenants would want to lease space in building that doubled as a public restroom.

Selectman Nan Roth said razing the building wasn't an option because it might leave a "hole." The building is nestled in the ledge below St. Stephen's Church on South Main Street.

Dean Rizzo said the chamber would work with the South Shore Chamber of Commerce to renovate the building into useable space by redoing the top floor and refurbishing the downstairs to include a public restroom.

If selectmen do opt to sell the building, they would issue a request for proposal. They may do that anyway to see what the building might bring and to give the chamber an idea of its value. Nevertheless, disposal of the building would need town meeting approval.

In the meantime, they directed Haddad to work with the building inspector and fire and police chiefs to see what needs to be done to mothball the building.

The teen center has moved over to the "Garage," which was formerly the DPW garage, in the town parking lot.

Selectmen set new tax rate

Selectmen agreed with the board of assessors to keep a single tax rate in Cohasset so residential and commercial property is taxed at the same rate.

Assessors Chairman Jim Laggrotteria explained that out of 352 towns in the commonwealth, about 1/3 have a split tax rate which taxes commercial and industrial property at a higher rate than residential. Towns with a split tax rate have more than 25 percent of their property as industrial and commercial. Cohasset is 93 percent residential.

Therefore, Laggrotteria said it would be unfair to shift more of the tax burden to the town's small business community. He pointed out that while a split rate means only a few dollars of savings to the homeowner, it can add up to big money for the business owner. With a tax rate shift of 21 cents off the residential rate, for example, $3 is added to the commercial rate. Under that scenario, the owner of a home assessed at $350,000 would pay $5,159 in taxes this year (savings of about $73) but the owner of a business of the same value would pay $6,121 (an increase of about $890). Under the single tax rate, which has been used continually in town, both pay the same.

The average Cohasset home last year was assessed at $322,324 with a tax bill of $4850.97; this year that same home is assessed at $341,124 with a tax bill of $5,099.80, a jump of $248.83.

Report says CHL is contaminating watershed

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill may be contaminating surrounding wetlands with volatile organic compounds (VOCs) and lead, according to a report by Norfolk Environmental, an industrial and hazardous waste consultant. Norfolk Environmental prepared the report for the water commission even as the town is negotiating with the owners of CHL to close the private landfill. The report was commissioned to help water commissioners and town negotiators design a closure plan for CHL that addresses all current and future environmental problems caused by the landfill.

The water commission will meet on Nov. 16 in the high school auditorium to discuss the results of the study. Members of the public are invited to attend the meeting and participate in a question-and-answer session with representatives from Norfolk Environmental. The meeting comes just two days before the scheduled opening of board of health site assignment hearings for CHL. The CHL sub-committee continues to meet in closed door negotiations to try and hammer out an agreement that will close the landfill and settle all outstanding environmental and legal issues. There are still five unresolved lawsuits between the town and CHL in various courts.

Norfolk Environmental examined data compiled over many years about environmental conditions at the landfill. Previously, the massive environmental data related to the landfill had not been examined as a whole to identify possible trends, patterns, oversights and areas for further analysis. Also, members of the health board and other town board have stated in the past that CHL's monitoring wells may not be sufficient for determining the amount of contamination coming from the landfill.

The water commission will meet on Nov. 16 in the high school auditorium to discuss the results of the study. Members of the public are invited to attend the meeting and participate in a question and answer session with representatives from Norfolk Environmental.

The conclusions of the report will be used to identify the effects the landfill is having on the Lily Pond watershed, the town's water drinking supply. Information from the report will also help officials describe the kinds of contamination coming from the landfill, and to recommend ways of dealing with that pollution through a closure and post-closure plan for CHL.

The report identifies the historical presence of VOCs that exceed state approved levels at monitoring wells in Whitney Woods, which is between CHL and Lily Pond. Norfolk Environmental also confirmed the existence of bedrock fractures with the potential to carry contaminants from CHL to Brass Kettle Brook, which is a tributary of Lily Pond. One of the more troubling aspects of the report comes from the presence of elevated levels of lead in water from Brass Kettle Brook and another tributary stream. The report says analysis of the data suggests the lead is coming from the landfill.

"The study found a water-bearing bedrock fracture that could be draining contaminants from CHL toward Lily Pond," said water commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. "They have also found evidence that contaminants have in fact been migrating toward Lily Pond through surface water drainage as well. The study also questions many of the assumptions that have been made about the ground water flows from CHL."

Based on the conclusions of the study, CHL should install new monitoring wells in more locations so the town can better assess the effects of the landfill on the watershed.

"CHL should be required to install new monitoring wells to identify contamination from the landfill that could have been detected years ago, if we had been looking in the right place," McNabb said. "One reason why no one has documented the migration of pollution from CHL draining to Lily Pond is that we've been looking in the wrong place for it."

McNabb urged residents to attend the meeting and participate in the question-and-answer period with Norfolk Environmental.

suggested by Corey.

"We couldn't stand it anymore and so we sold our home of 15 years," said Harriette Hunter. "One week there was a roadway under consideration that would have come up to our kitchen and the next, we were faced with the possibility of a moat. We didn't feel that the town was looking after the people who lived there."

Apparently, the Brewer's home was too close to the lot line to begin with, but that was a pre-existing non-conforming situation. But the board's approval of Corey's plans inadvertently created a front yard where the Brewer's had a side yard, creating a non-conforming situation with the home too close to the street..

Some say the greatest challenge facing Corey is that the sewer commission is unlikely to grant the developer permission for a tie-in to town sewer. The sewer commission maintains that it has already reached its limit on the amount of permitted waste they can send to the Hull treatment plant from North Cohasset.

"We have a contract with Hull for 85,000 gallons per day of treatment capacity and if we exceed that, the town is subject to certain penalties," explained sewer commission chairman Ted Guild. "Therefore, we cannot tie in more than we've already committed to with Hull and that's the reason we can't tie in Jerusalem Road Estates."

The proposed subdivision needs the hook-up because many of its acres are on wetlands and ledge, with not enough land fit for on-site septic systems. The only option left for the subdivision's houses would be sewer hook-up, but the sewer commission's policy is to first service pre-existing homes.

According to Guild, many of these homes wouldn't have been built by today's stricter codes.

"The sewer is the biggie," said Moore. "The sewer commission is taking a very hard stand that there just isn't any more room at the inn. Some may think it sounds unreasonable at first. but it does make sense to fix what's bad before we create more things that will need fixing."

Corey is also expected to go before the conservation commission at some point. At issue is whether a stream called Rattlesnake Run — running through the property — is a perennial stream and therefore protected under the state's Rivers Protection Act.

"Rattlesnake Run qualifies for protection from building within 200 feet under the River Protection Act because it's found on a USGS Topographical Map as a 'blue line,' which indicates that it's a perennial stream," explained conservation commission Chairman Jeff Waal. "If a person wants to challenge that, he has to prove the stream was dry during a non-drought season."

Waal maintains that the 200 feet protected under the Act will not cut much into Corey's 55-acre site. "It will probably be a different layout than what he had planned on, though," said Waal..

Moore expects that the appeal will cause a significant delay for Corey.

"This appeal can go on for a long time," he said. "There is nothing urgent about it. Very often, the technique can be used as a delaying action. Sometimes if someone is trying to get something done under the gun, you can shut them down."

Harbor walkway plan is floated

The same red "pavers" would be used on the sidewalks along the route as the ones slated for the reworked village sidewalks.

"This (consistent color scheme) would communicate to people that this is a public walkway," Shipsky said.

The plan is part of an ongoing effort by the Village Revitalization Task Force to find ways to enhance the village and harbor area.

Under Shipsky's plan bike paths would also be created on both sides of Border Street and Elm Street. He explained that along Border Street, the boardwalk would be on the other side of the sea wall, so the parking depth along could be increased. Currently the sidewalk along Border Street is delineated with a painted white line and cars usually park over most of the walkway.

The walkways and boardwalks would also include landscaping and "nodes" where "something special happens," Shipsky said. For example, benches could be placed in the node by the waterfall at the Border Street Bridge where the public would watch kayakers.

Selectman Tom Callahan said while interesting, the project was "prohibitively expensive" and therefore, had little chance of success.

Task force chairman Dean Rizzo said the group didn't want to be restricted in its vision by cost.

"There are grants available and we can slowly implement this."

— Dean Rizzo, task force chairman

"There are grants available and we can slowly implement this," he said.

Rizzo said the task force planned to apply for another $5K grant from the state Dept. of Environmental Management to see how the project could be broken out into phases and what agencies would have to be dealt with.

"We need to find out all the parameters," he said.

Callahan was not persuaded.

"I think this is unattainable," he said. "It's too expensive. I don't want to see you waste energy on something that is not achievable."

But Selectman Nan Roth said it is critical that the task force moves to the next stage.

"We should go for the next grant so at least we have the information and know the sources of funding," she said.

On a lighter note, Shipsky pointed out there are 152 signs in the village-harbor area. Part of the study was to look at signage. He described the proliferation of signs as a "bewildering array of messages."

Selectman Diane Sullivan suggested the traffic committee look at the signs to see which are necessary.

"They'd only put more up," cracked Bob Davenport, a regular at selectmen's meetings.

Callahan joked that maybe one sign at the entrance to town which "tells you everything" is the answer.

Shipsky's model of the boardwalk/walkway plan is on display at the building commissioner's office at town hall.

Fire overtime is topic at board meeting

Selectman Diane Sullivan commented on the overtime budget for the fire department at selectmen's Oct. 20 meeting. At that time, she noted there was $33,000 remaining out of $118,000.

Town Manager Mark Haddad explained that seven firefighters were out on injuries this summer and all are back but one. He went on to say there is a vacancy on the fire department and that Civil Service sent the list out too late for the candidates to be interviewed, so a new certification list had to be requested.

Roy Fitzsimmons, 116 Doane St., also questioned the overtime because there is no minimum manning at the fire department. Haddad said it is the policy of the fire chief to keep four firefighters on shift at all times for safety reasons.

The Oct. 26 Special Town Meeting added $40,000 to the fire department overtime account which as of Nov. 2, had a balance of $58,596.

This week, Haddad reported that a firefighter currently on sick leave is due back this month. He also said interviews are being scheduled to fill the firefighter vacancy.

AROUND TOWN

LOST NECKLACE

On Oct. 28, Regina Schultz was taking an early-morning walk from her house to the post office, something that she often does. The difference is, this time she lost her necklace en route, and would love to have you take up the search to find it for her! It is silver, with a large silver pendant on it, and it is somewhere between North Main Street and Ripley Road. Regina is offering a reward to anyone who finds it, she is truly devastated at her loss! So, don the walking shoes and the specs, and help a dear lady in distress ... if you happen upon it, give her a call at 383-0598.

FIFTH CHS REUNION

The Class of 1993 is holding their fifth reunion in a few weeks, Nov. 27, to be exact. It will be held from 7 to 10:30 p.m. at the Cohasset Lightkeepers House. Karyn Murray is the gal in charge — if she hasn't been able to locate you, give her a call at (617) 782-6373. A grand evening is planned, don't miss it! There have been lots of reunions from the various classes of CHS recently, just ask anyone who has attended, how much fun they really are!

NEW GRANDPARENTS

Have you seen that dream-like, far away look that Vee and Arthur Roebuck have been donning recently? Yep, you guessed it, they are proud new grandparents! Their daughter, Amy, and her husband, Andrew, became parents of a little girl, Alexandra Roebuck Jones. The big event took place Oct. 26 in San Diego, Calif. Alexandra's Dad just made the big event, he was on his way from the Gulf (where he was stationed), and when the ship docked in Australia, he was flown home! Vee was able to go to San Diego to meet and squeeze Alexandra (and ,of course, fall madly in love at the same time) — you can bet that she and Arthur will be finding a way to see her again real soon! It's amazing what grandparents will do to find a way to see their precious bundles, even busy couples like Vee and Arthur! Congrats to all of you!

CONSIGNMENT SHOPS

Andy Merrill suggests that as you prepare for Jack Frost and "Ole Man Winter," you keep the Cohasset Consignment Shop in mind! Located in Shaw's Plaza on 3A, it has a grand assortment of men and women's coats by Burberry, Perry Ellis (to name a few); those entertaining for Thanksgiving will find silver turkey platters, serving dishes, bone china dessert plates, cut glass vases, bowls, even china! There is even a wide collection of oil paintings to choose from — they always liven a home up and change its appearance a little! Shoppers not only find treasures, but their purchases help support many worthwhile programs run by the Social Service League. To consign items, the hours are 10 to 11:30 a.m., Monday through Friday; the shop is open Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Sundays from noon 'til 4 p.m. If you would like to volunteer to be a worker there, call 383-0687, you are needed!

HUMANE SOCIETY BENEFIT

This Saturday, Nov. 14, from 3 to 8 p.m., there will be a charity Art Auction to benefit the Commonwealth Cares Humane Society. Between 3 and 5 p.m. there will be a viewing, complete with refreshments and cocktails; the actual auction starts at 5 p.m. There is a suggested $5 admission fee (which your name will go into a door prize award for). To name but a few of the artists who have donated their work for this worthy cause: JoAnn Chittick, Jeanne Repogle, Rose Farbush, Nancy Connelly, Ellen Morin, Marylou Clark, Columbia Pierson ... the list goes on! There will also be an Arts and Crafts section, where you can purchase such finery as a hand-knitted sweater from Norway, jewelry, etc. Paul Kukstis will be the auctioneer. Everyone is urged to attend, call Sharon at 749-6945 for more information.

BORDER PATROL OFFICER

Cohasset native Jed Terry graduated from the Border Patrol Training Academy in Charleston, S.C., after completing a 20-week course that included Spanish, immigration law, firearms, tactics and rough-terrain driving. Terry, 24, has been assigned to the San Diego, Calif., Border Patrol Sector. A 1992 graduate of Cohasset High School, Jed is the son of David and Suzanne Terry. He earned a bachelor's degree in psychology from Northeastern University in 1998. "The challenge, the action and the pride led him to choose the Border Patrol," Terry said. He advised anyone interested in joining the Border Patrol to keep a positive attitude and never quit! We are hoping to hear more from Jed about his chosen field as time goes by!

AFFORDABLE ARTWORK

The South Shore Art Center is presenting "Within Reach: Inspirations for the Holidays" in the Dillon Gallery from Nov. 13 to Dec. 23. You will find affordable artwork by Gallery Artists such as Andy Buck, Bill Bancroft, Marylena Corrado, Mark Del Guidice, John Foster, Julie Morringello, Emi Ozawa, Martin V. Simpson, Charles Swanson, John Schackmuth and Lawrence Wong; Faculty Feature: Anne Heywood. Once again, you can shop locally — and be proud of it while you are pleasing your gift recipient!

'Tis the season for cooking

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

'Tis the season for cooking, hip hip hooray! When it is dark and cold, nothing beats planning a hearty meal to take the chill away! The one thing that everyone loves to come home to is the smell of soup cooking ... the other is seeing a fresh batch of cookies cooling on the counter, just waiting to he devoured by a hungry child (or adult) with that sweet tooth nagging them to eat! It is with this in mind that I present two great recipes.

GARLIC PIPERADE SOUP

20 garlic cloves
2 cups sliced onions
1 cup sliced peppers
3 tablespoons oil
3 cups peeled, seeded and sliced ripe tomatoes
2 cups beef broth
3 to 4 slices crustless dark bread salt and freshly ground pepper
grated cheese (optional)

Blanch the garlic in boiling water for 30 seconds, run under cold water and drain. Cook the onions and peppers in the oil for about 10 minutes, until wilted and golden. Add the garlic and tomatoes. Cover the pan and cook over low heat for 30 minutes. Pour in the broth and heat to the boiling point. Break bread into large pieces and add to the soup. It will disintegrate and thicken the soup; adjust the amount of bread to the thickness you desire. Add more broth if necessary. Add salt and pepper to taste. Serve with grated cheese if you wish. This recipe yields 3 to 4 servings, and a triple batch makes approximately 4-1/2 quarts.

CHOCOLATE CARAMEL COOKIES

1 cup butter (no substitutes), softened
1 cup plus 1 tablespoon sugar, divided
1 cup packed brown sugar
2 eggs
2 teaspoons vanilla extract
2-1/2 cups all-purpose flour
3/4 cup baking cocoa
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 cup chopped pecans, divided
1 package (13 ounces) ROLO candies

In a mixing bowl, cream butter, 1 cup sugar and brown sugar. Add eggs and vanilla; mix well. Combing flour; cocoa and baking soda; add to the creamed mixture and beat until combined. Stir in 1/2 cup pecans. Shape dough by tablespoons around each candy. In a small bowl, combine remaining pecans and sugar; dip each cookie halfway. Place with nut side up on ungreased baking sheets. Bake at 375 for 7 to 10 minutes or until top is slightly cracked. Cool for three minutes; remove to wire racks to cool completely. Yield: about 5 dozen.

LIBRARY CORNER

Trustees say thanks

The Board of Trustees, the staff and the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library would like to thank all Cohasset voters for their support to move the library to the old Osgood School. We are honored for the opportunity to utilize and maximize a valued town building to its greatest potential. Thank you for your continued support.

Library reception for new director

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library Board of Trustees and the Friends of the Library invite the residents of Cohasset to a reception to welcome our new Library Director, Janet Husband, Sunday, Nov. 15, from 5-7 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. This is an invitation for all residents of the town of Cohasset to meet and greet Mrs. Husband in her new role as Library Director.

Book gift fund established

Selectmen established "The Town History Committee Book Fund," so that donations to Town History Committee, which oversees the compiling of the third volume of the town's history, will be tax deductible.

Cohasset Arts Booster Club seeking community support

The Cohasset Arts Boosters have been helping the students of the arts at Cohasset High School since 1985. It's an organization of parents and friends of the arts who want to see that students have the support in two very important ways. First, of course, is financial. A fund raising letter has been sent this week to all the parents with students at the high school asking for a donation. This money will be used to pay for such expenses as membership fees for the state drama festival, art and photography supplies for special projects which are not provided in the school budget, the publication of the student Literary and Arts Magazine, "Whispers and Shadows," and two scholarships to graduating seniors and one undergraduate study award. The club has been fortunate to be one of the recipients of a grant from the South Shore Music Circus which helps a great deal in funding some of the above projects.

The second way the club provides support is through planning and hosting several events during the year which provide a venue for their talented singers, musicians and artists to perform in front of an audience. The Cabaret will be held in January and the Pops Night will be in May. If you would like to help with one of these events, please call Donna O'Donnell, Arts Boosters President at 383-6113.

If arts education is something that you feel is important and would like to show your support by making a donation, you may send your tax deductible donation, payable to Cohasset Arts Boosters Club, to: Mrs. Kathy Gray, Treasurer, 40B Nichols Rd., Cohasset 02025.

Ambulance billing update

The fire department billed for 37 ambulance transports last month for a total of $13,795.50. So far this fiscal year, which started July 1, the town has collected $48,402.98 out of a possible $56,994.87 in ambulance bills.

Collections can apply to prior year bills and it can take from two months to two years to collect on some of the cases, according to Jane Henderson, billing clerk.

Community Newspaper Company (CNC) is greater Boston's fastest growing media company. From this facility, we publish 19 weekly newspapers, 18 weekly shoppers and a variety of niche publications. Come and grow with us. We offer competitive wages and a comprehensive benefits package including a 401(k) plan.

We currently have the following Marshfield-based positions available:

Advertising Manager
We seek an aggressive, experienced sales professional to direct a team of highly motivated retail advertising representatives. Primary responsibility is revenue growth, therefore the successful candidate must be able to hire, train and develop a climate which fosters individual initiative within a team concept. Prior experience with goal setting, performance appraisal and the ability to develop and mentor sales reps is essential. The ideal candidate has experience in cross selling a diverse product line (internet, weeklies, niche products) to maximize company revenue and customer response. Excellent opportunity for those who seek a challenge. Unparalleled financial opportunity for an aggressive overachiever.

Real Estate Account Executive
Join our South newspaper group and enjoy unlimited earning potential while assisting customers with their plans for success. This challenging position requires one to two years of outside sales experience preferably working or consulting with real estate businesses, a high energy level, and someone who can work as well independently as with a team of other professionals. Knowledge of real estate advertising sales with either newspapers, shopper, cable, radio or telephone directories would be a plus.

Sales Coordinator
Terrific opportunity to join our dynamic sales team. Provide administrative and customer service support to a team of account executives. Assist in communication with clients, coordinating advertising proofs, complete insertion orders, research billing issues and provide phone support. Ideal candidates will have previous customer service experience, excellent phone manner and proficiency with Microsoft Word and Excel.

Editor FOR NORWELL, HANOVER AND ABINGTON-ROCKLAND MARINERS
Looking for an organized and energetic individual to help us nurture and grow our newspapers in Norwell, Hanover, Abington and Rockland. The ideal candidate should have several years experience editing community weeklies. We're looking for a creative editor who can write insightful editorials, lead a staff of reporters (both rookies and seasoned) and give the papers increased visibility in the communities. Outstanding news judgment, proven track record of editorial innovation and strong staff management skills critical. These are dynamic, vibrant communities where readers care deeply about local news.

We have entry-level and skilled positions available in our mailroom and pressroom.
On-call Sheetfed Technicians - Evenings. Work on Ryobi and Hamada two-color presses. Light stripping and bindery experience preferred. Great opportunity for self-starter.
Press Joggers - Full-time positions in our pressroom on the 2nd and 3rd shift. Stack, jog and assist in press set-up. Heavy lifting, standing and bending required.
Collators - Full-time positions in our Mailroom on 2nd and 3rd shift. Assisting with the mailing/inserting operation. Heavy lifting, standing and bending required.

Rules of the road

If you have been within 100 yards of a teenager on the verge of receiving a drivers' license this year, you know the recent change in the regulations is topic number 1.

Last week, on Nov. 4, the new Junior Operator Law took effect, putting tighter limits on what a teenager has to do to receive a learner's permit or a junior operator license (you must be at least 16-1/2 years old, in the latter case).

For those among us who learned to drive Dad's old standard-transmission Chevy on some back-country road, or who spent countless hours making three-point turns in the high school parking lot with Mom in the passenger's seat, the new requirements are a major change. For today's teenagers, they represent one of those annoying, but necessary, rites of passage toward adulthood.

We know things are tough for teen drivers today but, with more and larger vehicles on the road than ever before, we're glad the regulation bumps are higher, too. They are one way to slow teens down and keep them safe as they drive up the steep learning curve toward experience.

But consider this: Shouldn't the regulations also serve to raise awareness about the needs of adult drivers, which can change with changing times. Many of us received our licenses before the advent of air bags and before two out of three vehicles on the road became four-wheel-drive behemoths that could crush a sedan in what might have been just a fender-bender in the past. All the focus these days on competency testing — of students, teachers and other professions — makes us wonder if Massachusetts should consider having all adult drivers take the written and driving tests again, after, say 10 years on the road. After all, can you honestly remember how many feet away from a fire you are supposed to park? How many feet should you allow for passing another car? How many feet should you allow behind a fire engine? And who has the right of way on a Massachusetts rotary?

No amount of "book learning" can replace actual time behind the wheel. But that time behind the wheel does not guarantee a competent or knowledgeable driver. The idea of tightening up the rules for young people is to give them as much of that experience as possible, with proper training and supervision, before sending them off on their own. The idea for periodic competency testing is to keep adults from driving with cruise control rather than up-to-date information and good judgment.

We recommend the state consider a periodic drivers test -every 10 years for drivers without any significant violations and more frequently for chronic violators. Every one of us has a vested interest in knowing that teen drivers are held to high standards before they can take the family wagon out alone. And every one of us has an interest in having all drivers achieving a basic level of competence behind the wheel and a basic knowledge of rules of the road and driving etiquette.

Editor's note: If you're puzzling over the above questions: Park at least 800 feet from a fire; leave at least 400 feet to pass another vehicle; and allow at least 300 feet behind a fire engine. And the car already in the rotary has the right of way.

Library not answer for Historical Society

TO THE EDITOR:

This time I cannot agree with Joe McElroy. The people of Cohasset would be ill served if the Historical Society bought Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The Society should put its limited resources toward programs, exhibits, staff and efficient climate-controlled storage space for archives and collections. A fancy Palladian building with 20-foot ceilings, costly maintenance and limited parking for a building that size does not answer the needs.

Thinking positively, if the library building were marketed as a single family home with classical columned facade, on high ground overlooking protected wetland, convenient to village, it could bring the town top dollar.

The possibilities are glorious: View through to the marsh from the entrance rotunda, fine drawing room to the left, elegant dining room on the right with fireplace and breakfast nook. The '50s addition provides ample space for a master suite above and additional bedrooms below. A media/fitness center fits comfortably in the "children's section." Kitchen above and garage below extending the '50s addition complete the splendid picture.

Any takers?

NDA community grateful for support

TO THE EDITOR:

The girls at Notre Dame Academy have a favorite song that begins "We are one body, one body in Christ and we do not stand alone." it has been sung in joy and now in grief. The truth of the words, however, remains the same. Community, grounded in the good God, is foundational to our educational institution. The recent tragedy that touched the lives of the Darling, Clancy and Courtney families and the family of Notre Dame reminded us all of what a community means.

We are grateful for the cards, faxes and e-mail messages that have come from parents, alumnae, friends and strangers all over the world. These words were displayed in our foyer and have brought comfort to our students and staff. We are grateful for the flowers, candy and food that gave us emotional and physical strength. We are grateful too, for your visits and presence with us during these difficult days.

We particularly want to thanks Sister Ann Dominic and the Catholic School Office for their concern, support and presence at the memorial service and the wakes; the Catholic schools in the Archdiocese of Boston for their cards, flowers, offers of assistance, contributions to the scholarship funds and their presence at the memorial service and the funerals; the clergy from the local parishes who came to NDA as soon as they heard of the accident to assist with the acre of our students and staff; the Pembroke and Hingham police departments for their attention to our girls and assistance with security; Bertucci's, D'Angelo's, Dunkin Donuts and parents who provided food for our staff and counselors, the media (TV, radio and newspaper reporters) who respected out initial need for privacy and who treated our girls with compassion; NDA alumnae who sent cards and flowers, contributed to the scholarship funds, or came to NDA to assist in the office or share their own experience with the girls.

These days have been difficult but they have also been encouraging because we have seen how strong and grounded in faith our young women are. We have seen how much they love one another. We have been reminded once again that life is precious and fragile and that each day is a gift. No kind gesture is too small, no compassionate word goes unheard. Colleen, Erin and Allison have reminded us how important an individual life is and how much each of us can change the world.

As we draw near to the Thanksgiving season, we carry all of you to the heart of our good God. May God give you and your family abundant blessings.

Gratefully,
Sister Barbara A. Barry, SND

Election '98 wrapup

No regrets

Both sides learn lessons in state rep. campaign

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Democrat Garrett Bradley has no regrets about his unsuccessful campaign to unseat longtime state representative Mary Jeanette Murray.

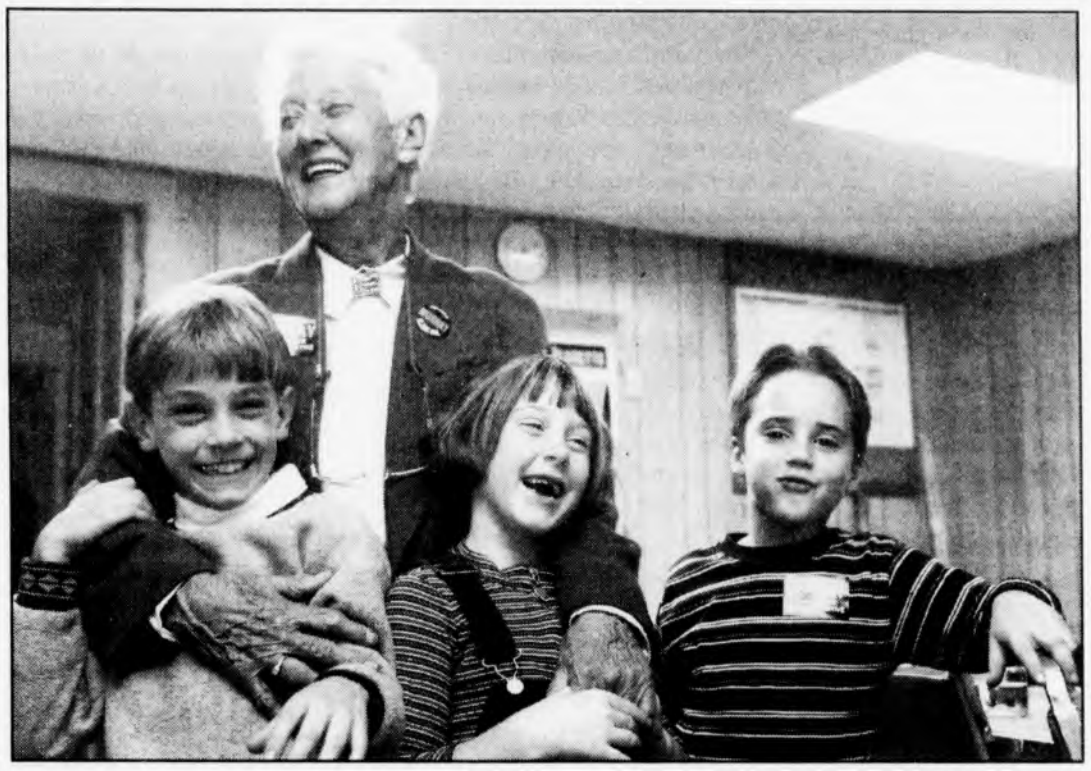
"What I'm most proud of is doing it right," the Hingham resident Bradley said of his failed election bid against the Cohasset Republican.

"Obviously, you want to win," he continued. "But it's also about how you play the game. How we ran this campaign was as important as the outcome. Mary Jeanette and I were able to outline our differences in a respectful and cordial manner. That's why we have campaigns; to say we don't agree and then let the voters decide."

Less than 24 hours after his concession to Murray, Bradley and supporters were out thanking voters for their support, manning a spot on Route 3A, hoisting placards saying "thank you" to voters.

Many have attributed Murray's 22-year career as a state representative to her constituent service and lifetime in politics. Bradley recognizes that was a formidable obstacle to overcome.

"A lot of people who are candidates get discouraged by the process but I loved being part of it," said Bradley. "The support was tremendous throughout the campaign and 7,000 people came out to vote for us."



It has been a long fight for Bradley, beginning with his primary win against Josh Cutler and Walter Murray. "I think both of those guys did a great job and I think the experience was helpful to me," said Bradley.

Despite a promising campaign and strong local support, Bradley lost Hingham to Murray in a 4,211 to 3,853 vote count. "I knew it was over when I lost Hingham," said Bradley. "I called at that point to congratulate Mary Jeanette on a her campaign and on her win."

It is not entirely surprising that Murray won the election, given that voters are less likely to unseat an incumbent and especially not one with a loyal following.

"I think that everyone recognized that Mary Jeanette Murray has done a wonderful job," said Murray campaign organizer Don Hussey. "She's put in over 20 years of constituent service, and we asked people to take that into consideration; to come out and vote for her."

Bradley campaign manager Margy Charles stated that "I think that Garrett's excellent campaigning kind of fired up Mary Jeanette to get all the seniors out."

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray celebrates her victory with her grandchildren Max Murray and Jennifer and Ben Curley at Murray campaign headquarters at the Sons of Italy in Hingham.

State Republican committee vice chairman Polly Logan of Cohasset agrees there was a loyalty factor at play in the Murray win.

"Her support was based on loyalty for all the things that Mary Jeanette has done for this district," she said. "That's what inspired such a large turnout. She's done such an outstanding job for the leadership. I think she did a lot of things that people don't even know she's done. She's well-liked at the state house and manages to put things through."

Murray, who served in the House of Representatives through 12 consecutive elections, has faced little to no opposition in the last decade and was in a tough fight this time.

"I'd never raised money for elections because I didn't have opposition, so when Bradley announced at the very beginning that he'd already raised $27,000, it was like, where did he get it?" recalled Murray.

Eventually, Bradley had $90,000 in financial backing for his campaign which made possible the type of advertising that won praise from Hussey.

"I think Bradley really did a tremendous job, right down to the generator with a bank of lights to illuminate signs," he said. "He planned down to details."

Campaigning at work

Murray was not without her own campaign strategies. During the last two days of the election, and seemingly overnight, Murray campaign signs blossomed on the front lawns of a good number of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset homes. In the past, Murray has avoided signs out of fear that it might offend some people.

"We also had done a lot of sign holding," said Murray supporter Jack Linsky. "Toward the end, we used the editorial endorsement from the Hingham Journal. We highlighted the key points and handed it out at the dump and also mailed it out. We thought that was fair enough, since the opposition had handed out a Hull piece that was not in support of Mary Jeanette."

Perhaps the most flamboyant bit of advertising in the Murray campaign was Nancy O'Toole's old-time election caravan, replete with banners, flags and music.

Aside from his lit signs, Bradley had an impressive collection of worn-down pairs of shoes; tangible proof that he covered the Third Plymouth District territory, literally.

"I knocked on 12,051 doors, talked to 13,430 people by phone and feel proud about the campaign," said Bradley. "I found that people really want to talk about the issues. I was struck by how much they knew about them and by how willing they were to come out on their doorsteps to discuss them with me."

Still, Hussey would have advised Bradley to pay attention to another voter detail that he learned himself through experience in his 1990 senatorial bid for election.

"I have some campaign software that's been developed over the last 10 years," said Hussey. "I can do demographics, geographics, phone data and I can break a campaign down piece by piece. We used that to focus on the unenrolled and Republican voters, as well as the Democrats that Mary Jeanette had done some constituent work for."

Hussey knows from which he speaks, having done exactly what Bradley did nearly 10 years ago.

"I ran for state senate back in 1990 and did pretty much what Garrett did," he explained. "I sold my business to raise dollars for the election. I felt you only live once and should try to make a difference. So I did the walking from

Rewriting yesterday in today's terms

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see that science has beaten the tabloids to yet another sex scandal in the White House.

DNA tests on their descendants appear to prove that President Tom Jefferson had more than the Louisiana Purchase in mind when he was with his slave girl, Sally Hemmings.

Proof of the liaison turned out to be Eston Hemmings, 6-foot-1 inches tall and a violinist of some skill like his father, who freed him along with the rest of his slaves when he died in 1825.

Unfortunately, the fact that our third president has been dead for 173 years must come as a bummer to Ken Starr and his $400-a-day consultants, who have just about run out of clues in their investigation of the 41st.

The DNA tests were made by Eugene Foster, a retired University of Virginia professor, who matched the DNA from descendants of Tom and Eston and found that they were the same within 1 per cent of error.

Unfortunately, the fact that our third president has been dead for 173 years must come as a bummer to Ken Starr and his $400-a-day consultants, who have just about run out of clues in their investigation of the 41st.

It's getting to be a lucrative cottage industry, this business of rewriting of history according to the standards of today using the sciences of today.

Not too long ago they dug up the body Zachary Taylor, the 12th president, to see if he really died from eating a bowl of spoiled cherries on a hot day or if he was poisoned. He wasn't.

Even as we speak, the Vatican has a panel of scholars examining the Inquisition to see if the Pope should apologize for those long ago times when Catholic "thought police" tried, tortured and killed thousands of heretics.

"The Church cannot cross the threshold of the new millennium without pressing its children to purify themselves in repentance for their errors," said Roger Cardinal Etchegaray. Even those hundreds of years old.

Now if the English would only apologize to the Irish for hundreds of years of persecution, and the Turks beg forgiveness for the massacre of those Armenians, and the Bolsheviks for their shabby treatment of the Romanovs.

Then maybe the descendants to Sitting Bull will apologize for what the Native Americans did to George at the Little Big Horn.

An article in the Journal of Forensic Science explores the theory that Adolph Hitler was pushed over the edge by a World War I psychiatrist who used hypnotism to cure the young corporal's "hysterical blindness."

"Perhaps you yourself have the rare power, which occurs only occasionally in a thousand years, to work a miracle," the shrink is said to have told him. "You are young; it would be too bad for you to stay blind. You know that Germany needs people who have energy and blind self-confidence."

Dr. David Post, the author of the article, theorized that the hypnotist convinced the apprentice fuhrer that he would "have to regain his eyesight so that he alone could lead Germany out of the darkness and into prosperity."

So the Holocaust wasn't entirely the Adolph's fault after all.

Isn't it fun, using 21st century tools to rewrite history according to today's standards? And you don't even need a grassy knoll.

door to door. But you have to micromanage your voter data base because 45 percent of the people you talk with just don't vote so you've wasted your time talking to people who won't show up."

Nonetheless, Bradley isn't disheartened by the amount of time he spent campaigning. "I learned that if you educate yourself on the issues and you work hard, you can make a difference in a campaign, even if you don't win," he said. "People really are educated about the issues in their community, maybe even more than on national issues. I found that very encouraging."

An important dialogue

According to Logan, people may be more informed thanks to the increase in local cable coverage of town meetings and political debates which offer them a view of political processes that they might not have otherwise seen.

In an election stained by some mudslinging in the gubernatorial race, the Murray-Bradley debates maintained a stable decorum.

Bradley recalled a woman who told him that she had watched the televised debates with her children to educate them on political process. "She said that they watched the governor's debate disintegrate as it went on and that when they watched my debate with Mary Jeanette, she told her kids, 'That's the way it's supposed to be—a debate on the issues.'"

"We were hoping that his performance in the debates would elevate him," said Timothy White, Hingham Democratic Town Committee Chairman. "I think the election results were not surprising, given that Murray is a 22-year incumbent. We had two challenges in the primary and I think it was surprising that in this campaign, as well as the one in which Josh Cutler and Walter Murray ran, there was such a lack of negativity. It could have set a good example for a few other statewide campaigns. The focus was on the issues like education, which is important with the Education Reform Act coming up again in the next two years."

For now, Bradley plans on "rest and relaxation."

"I've been a lawyer for three years," said Bradley. "I'm shopping my resume around to some firms and prosecutor's offices. My wife, Heather, has given me a deadline for a few weeks and then we're going to Aruba. I've had a couple of calls already. I think that the people that are calling me have watched the race. When they see someone who can work from 5 a.m. until midnight, they like that consistency."

So far as the ultimate reason for the choice of Murray for another two years, Bradley can't say. "I really don't know what the voters were trying to say," he said. "You never know why someone will vote for someone. They may be a one issue person, have a personal connection.

"I don't know if there was 'one thing.' I think it's more complicated than that. Mary Jeanette ran a terrific campaign. I met a lot of people from her side who were very respectful and wished me luck. It's encouraging that we were all able to do this in a positive manner. Actually, I congratulate everyone on a good race."

Bradley thanks one and all

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who participated in last week's elections. It was my first time being involved as a candidate, and I enjoyed every minute. In particular, I would like to extend my sincere thanks to the more than 150 people who volunteered on my campaign as well as the more than 7,000 people who voted for me.

Also, I would like to congratulate Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray on a terrific race. We were able to highlight differences between ourselves while still remaining cordial. I wish her luck in the next two years. I also would like to extend my thanks to those who supported Rep. Murray for a tough, but clean, campaign.

Elections are about drawing distinctions between candidates and offering voters a voice. It is my hope that future elections in this district will generate the same interest this election generated. Once again, my wife Heather and I extend our warmest thanks to all those involved and our best wishes to Rep. Murray.

Reasons not to vote

TO THE EDITOR:

There are only three reasons not to vote: dead, brain dead, or deathly ill. But some pretty silly reasons not to vote are presented, such as: "there isn't any difference between the candidates," "they are all liars and crooks," "I'm tired of the scandal-mongering," etc. Facts are: there is usually a vast difference between candidates, they are as honest as the rest of us, and the scandal-mongering is conducted primarily by the media in response to the public's insatiable appetite for it.

The author of a recent letter published in a major daily newspaper deserves first prize for childishness; he was offended because the poll workers didn't greet him with a warm hello!

Almost all poll workers (maybe all) are unpaid volunteers, probably tired and bored with overhearing the same comments for hours, and certainly prohibited from saying anything that could be construed as an attempt to influence a vote.

Countless millions long for the right to vote; only fools decry the priceless right that they can enjoy.

Planners give Beach St. neighbors the floor

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The neighbors who have faithfully turned out over the years to express their opposition to Ellen Morrisey's plans to create an access to her property off Beach Street were surprising reticent when given the floor by planning board Chairman Al Moore.

Though the room was filled to capacity, few were willing to speak out about what they would like to see happen with Morrisey's plans for access, which was surprising, given the high turnout for Morrisey's appearances before various town boards. As a consequence, nothing conclusive came of the meeting.

This is an informal gathering," Moore informed the audience of 20 at the Nov. 4 meeting. "There is nothing pending before us tonight. Personally, I'm a little confused about what everyone here wants. Hopefully we can all end up on the same page by the end of tonight's discussion. We are talking about the hill at Highland Avenue behind town hall and the Beach Street front of Ms. Morrisey's property."

The 20-acre site, with its four parcels of land and 12 remaining acres owned by Morrisey, has been up for some kind of permit request by Morrisey for five years now. She maintains that she holds rights from Mohawk Way, along Beach Street and over to Highland Avenue behind town hall.

"Ellen has been coming before the planning board for years," said Moore. "She wants to maximize her return on her property and she has a right to want that. But she's sort of stuck between a rock and a hard place on access and I feel she could work that out. Also, I'm still not sure what she wants."

The issue is a complicated one. There is access to the site from Mohawk Way, but that driveway is already shared by two homes situated there. An additional lot hooking on to that drive would qualify that land as a subdivision and set a precedent, Moore has explained in the past.

"Personally, I'm a little confused about what everyone here wants. Hopefully we can all end up on the same page by the end of tonight's discussion."

— Planning Board Chairman Al Moore

There is another means of access for Morrisey through a 100-year-old path.

Morrisey stated in the meeting that "the solution is to use the driveways that are there," referring to the old path and Mohawk Way.

The only other alternative would be to create access by blasting through existing rock there.

"That would be a massive project," said Moore. "Maybe there is some way that this can be worked out. If I were king for a day, I'd say, 'let's develop it and do the best we can with four nice lots and make everyone happy on the access. But there are some that feel strongly that they have a right to prevent that. That's why I was hoping that people would speak up."

Former zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo attempted to explain the neighbors' reserve.

"The problem is we're all neighbors, but we all live on different parts of Beach Street so each alternative would affect all of us differently," he said. "I think each one of these proposals has its own set of problems; some shared and some unique. But if you're looking for an unanimous view, I think you'd see people split along where they live."

Board member Robert Sturdy argued that the site required the wisdom of Solomon and could only really be settled in a court of law. "This is like trying to work with Jell-O," he said. "You can't sink into it."

Indeed, the complexity of the site even led to confusion among the various lawyers present.

An attorney for abutter Robert Lewis stated that his client owned the driveway on Mohawk Way and disagreed with Morrisey's view that she has a right of way to that access.

Another attorney, Richard Henderson, reminded those present that "you can't have more than two houses sharing a driveway. The right of way goes through the Lewis' property and then to Morrisey's—it comes from somebody else's property."

"We're not in a position to amend?" asked Morrisey. "I think that's why we're all here. I think we need to have closure on this."

Neighbors seemed more concerned with voicing opposition to blasting than closure.

Iri Bloomfield, 37 Beach St., felt that the blasting was "too close to the homes and could cause damage."

And John Mueller, 45 Beach St., explained that "we're concerned about run-off and blasting. I get run-off now because so many trees were removed up there."

"That driveway will be a water tunnel down into my driveway," added Judith Chute, 46 Beach St.

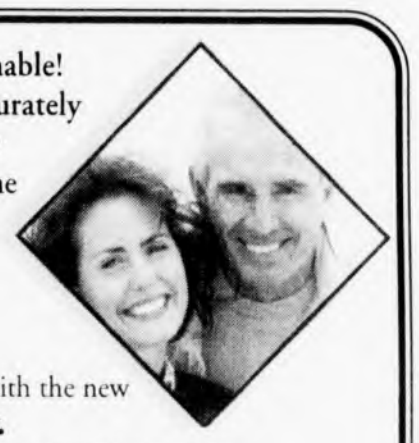
"There are some that feel strongly that they have a right to prevent this," said Moore. "I just wonder that if they pursue that to an extreme, maybe they will regret what they get. I get angry when people come in and threaten us and hold up high density, low income housing because I think that's terrific. If that's what you want to do, that's what you should do. But I'm not so sure that's what all the abutters would like to see done. I would like to see those folks come together and come to a consensus on how to proceed."

Bakery plans okayed for Lilac House

Fans of the colorful Lilac House can expect an enclosed glass bakery that can be viewed by passers-by.

The South Main Street building which once housed Lilac House Antiques and Flowers by Joann, will need some demolition work completed prior to putting up the visible bakery and replacement clapboards, which is why engineer Neil Murphy came before the planning board next week. The work is part of the Red Lion Inn project. Both buildings are owned by Cohasset resident Gerde Ordleheide, who said he plans to open a cafe bistro and bakery in the Lilac House.

Board members approved the proposal.



"And it won't be purple anymore?" asked Moore.

"That I can't promise you," said Murphy. "It's the Lilac House."

Hingham Militia marshals troops for the millennium

New members sought for living history group

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Hingham Militia is gearing up for the year 2000 when the group expects increased demand for its services at turn-of-the-century celebrations.

The popular Revolutionary War era reenactment group is a familiar sight in Hingham on Veteran's Day, Memorial Day, the Fourth of July and the Lincolns' birthdays celebration.

What some may not know is the 25-year-old "Living History" organization also participates in other events in the area including Flag Day in Quincy, the veterans parade in Wellesley, business openings, and reenactments, speaking engagements. Another little know fact is that members of the Militia come from all over the South Shore.

Jim Jamieson, who serves as captain of the Second Suffolk Regiment Hingham Militia, said the group which currently numbers about 25 people would like to grow to about 60 or 70.

"That way we can field 20 at any time," he said.

"The whole thing has been fun - and it's great being part of a group that stands for something."

— Capt. Emeritus Brian McSweeney, Hingham Militia

Jamieson said the militia needs fifers, drummers, flag carriers and those who just like to dress up as "camp followers."

Hingham Town Moderator Thomas O'Donnell said the group is an invaluable part of Hingham.

"They're wonderful," he said. "They are not there for the defense of the town but rather to enjoy.

"They provide a sense of history for the town. It's hard to imagine

BUSINESS NOTES

Marlette head of Piper aircraft group

At the recent International Comanche Society Fly-In held on Nantucket Island, local Cohasset resident and Town Moderator, Attorney George Lane Marlette was elected head of the Northeast Division (or Tribe as it is called) of the organization. The international group is comprised of owners of Piper Comanche aircraft worldwide. The Northeast tribe which Marlette now leads represents members from Massachusetts, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Maine, Maryland, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, Virginia and West Virginia.

Lovers and preservationists of this Piper classic, which has been out of manufacture since the mid-1970s, meet regularly to share information on parts, safety procedures, travel destinations and service innovation. Members attend so-called fly-ins across the country throughout the year, and attend a national convention each year. This year, newly elected Northeast Tribe head, Marlette, will travel to Cambridge, England in July for the annual seminar and events of the International Comanche Society (ICS).

Marlette owns a single engine, four place 1959 Piper Comanche PA 24 which he flies out of Plymouth airport. He is a practicing attorney in Brockton, President of the Board of Directors, Brockton Visiting Nurse Association and a member of NAELA, the National Academy of Elder Law Attorneys.

Militia

Hingham without the militia."

The town's earliest soldiers date back to the 17th century who formed a "trayned band" to fight the Dutch and the Indians. During the Revolutionary War, the First Company of Foot, Second Suffolk Regiment — on which today's Hingham Militia is modeled — participated in several key battles including Bunker Hill, Brandywine, Ticonderoga and Valley Forge.

Jamieson said everyone furnishes their own gear but the militia will supply a list of "sutlers" (storekeepers) to contact for authentic outfits and equipment. The militia provides training for new members and has some equipment to loan which must be returned following the event, he said.

Just like their forebears, the group uses 75-caliber smooth bore muskets and black powder. Members roll their own cartridges, Jamieson said. Those with muskets must obtain a firearms ID number.

Anyone age 16 or under who wants to join must have a parent with them.

Dues are $10 a year and cover the cost of mailings. Although the militia does get paid to march in some parades, most of the money to pay for equipment, black powder and gasoline to travel to events comes out of their own pockets.

But the time and expense is worth it, Jamieson said.

"This is a lot of fun," he said.

Needless to say, photographs of the Hingham Militia at events frequently appear in newspapers. And spectators often ask to have their picture taken with a soldier.

"We often say, 'let's go sell some Kodak film,'" said Jamieson about how photogenic the group is.

Brian McSweeney, who is captain emeritus of the regiment and marches at the head of the militia, is a familiar figure in his Scottish, MacQueen-Tartan kilt.

"I enjoy showing off!" laughed McSweeney about why he continues to participate.

"The whole thing has been fun — and it's great being part of a group that stands for something," he said.

The current militia formed in 1974 in anticipation of the nation's Bicentennial.

Jamieson said the organization is already getting bookings for the year 2000.

"We've had a call from Berlin, Mass, which is planning a one-day festival," he said.

Anyone interested in joining the militia should call Jamieson at 740-2713.

The CHS field hockey team missed the tourney by a single point this season, but look for the young squad to come back ever bigger and better next season.

Field Hockey looks to the future

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

CHS field hockey coach Debby Bostwick doesn't want to focus on the fact that her squad missed a repeat trip to the state tourney by only one single point this year.

The future's too bright to dwell on the past, she insists.

"We've got a number of things going in our favor," said Bostwick. "We're only losing three players to graduation, there were 35 players in the pipeline playing on the junior high team this year and some of the younger kids got some good playing time at varsity this season. All those factors can only help us next season.

"We knew this was going to be a rebuilding season for the program, but I think we had a nice season," she added. "I'm already looking forward to next year."

Others must have shared her opinion as three Skippers from the 5-6-4 team were selected to play in the All-Star game last weekend at Mashpee, where the South Shore League dropped a 1-0 to the Patriot League.

Named to the team were center fullback Megan Connolly, center halfback Katie Devine and center forward Andi Shaughnessy.

While Devine and Connolly are seniors, Shaughnessy had the honor of being the only sophomore named to the team and will be back to help lead the Skippers next season.

"All three played quite a bit in the game," said Bostwick. "The town can be proud of all three of them. They represented their high school with great pride and sportsmanship."

"We knew this was going to be a rebuilding season for the program, but I think we had a nice season. I'm already looking forward to next year."

DEBBY BOSTWICK

Besides Devine and Connolly, Jill Magner also served as a captain this season. Bostwick said all three would be missed tremendously when she gets the team back together next September.

She called Connolly "the nucleus to the team" who was both a role model and a dictator on the field.

"She was like having another coach on the field," said Bostwick. "Megan not only was a great player, but she was the one who made sure everyone knew their assignments out on the field. You couldn't have asked for a better captain. We're going to have a tough time replacing her leadership qualities next season."

Devine was "always solid as a rock" in holding the defense together while always marking the oppositions top scorer, said Bostwick. "She's not really a quick player, but she's was always quick enough, smart enough and strong enough to be in the right place at the right time when we needed her."

On Magner, Bostwick said the sweeper was another leader on the field in making sure that everyone had their defensive assignments while also making sure that Skipper goalies Melissa Romano or Kristen Considine were of a positive mental attitude in the net.

"She was as smart a player as you're going to see," added Bostwick. "Jill was a great teacher on the field who got the most out of their ability.

"All in all, I think that we had a great group of girls this season. There were no attitude problems at all and the captains did a tremendous job keeping the team as a unit. They really stuck together."

The deal on the 'real' Super Bowl

If someone hasn't already told you, the Super Bowls are coming up this weekend.

EXTRA POINTS

DAVID WOLCOTT

Oh, you didn't know that there was more than one of them?

This is definitely not the over-glittered, over-commercialized, seven-hour pre-game show filled with not a single actual useful fact that the NFL holds each January. You know, the one that never, ever justifies the seemingly endless hype that proceeds it.

Not at all. This weekend is the real deal when it comes to the Super Bowl my dear readers.

This is the one where night games are usually avoided because it's past most of the players' bedtime.

This is the one where most of the players still sleep with their Batman PJ's with their Hulk Hogan night light on.

This is the one where the mother of the star quarterback really just might sneak into the locker room to make sure that her "big sweaty guy" had his soup before the game.

There are no shoe deals or any other product endorsements on line. No three-picture movie deals to mull over. No stupid group end zone dances, either. No arrest records.

Just football.

What a concept.

Welcome to the world of organized youth football.

And you thought all the kids were just playing soccer in the fall these days.

"Not so long ago you'd only get 15 or 20 kids coming out for a team. Now getting as many as 70 kids wouldn't be a surprise," said one coach this week. "Youth football is really on the upswing right now."

The success doesn't lie. Silver Lake had all three of their youth teams (Mite, Peewee and Midgets) playing for a spot in an Old Colony Super Bowl game for the first time in 30 years.

And they weren't alone. Other South Shore communities still in the CHS turns their attention to Hanover

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset fell to 4-4 Friday night when the undefeated Norwell Clippers swept into town. Norwell, ranked 12th in Massachusetts, delivered a 41-14 thumping, pushing the Skippers along the line of scrimmage.

The host Skippers didn't execute effectively during the game, a problem compounded by uninspired play on the part of some of the team. Norwell's highly touted running back Brian Fabrizio ranked up 23 points on touchdowns, extra points, and two-point conversions.

Cohasset finally got on board in the fourth quarter, though, when Daniel Trowers rushed for two touchdowns. The first carry stretched 60 yards after the handoff, and was sprung by the still-battling Skipper offensive line. Captain Justin Golden lofted the ball through the uprights for the point after.

Trowers' second score was similar to the first, and came just a few minutes later.

Again, the sizable Cohasset crowd rose to its feet as the sophomore took the option pitch from quarterback Jamie DeMichele, ran behind blocks to midfield, and then streaked into the end zone for six. Golden's boot split the uprights, making the final score 41-14.

Highlights were few and far between for the home team. Unfortunately for the Skipper defense, the secondary was tested time and again after Clipper ball carriers broke through the front line. The defensive backs responded nicely as Raheem Shepard conducted a clinic in form tackling, making several nice sticks. Greg Taylor helped defend the run, even gaining backfield penetration against Norwell's formidable offensive front.

The game's bottom line was that Cohasset was overmatched by the Clippers' power and speed. Facing one of the best teams in the state, the Skippers took a beating, but will have to keep their heads high to close out the season.

Playing their final away game this season, the Boys in Blue will head to Hanover to face the struggling Indians Friday night. Hanover lost their chance at a South Shore League title last Friday in a 14-7 league running over the weekend included Marshfield, Scituate, Rockland, Duxbury and Cohasset.

They'll finish the year at home against Hull on Thanksgiving morning in a 10 a.m. game.

So much for youth football being a dying sport.

And don't think winning a Super Bowl wouldn't be as important to these kids it would be to the much bigger kids come January.

But remember, these are still kids. It's playing football and the other little things that set their hearts aflutter.

Things like playing in front on the largest crowd they've ever seen or sharing a joke with their buddy on the bus ride to the game.

It's not all the financial goodies at the end of the pro sports rainbow.

For these kids, it's all about the little things.

"Playing a game under the lights," was Silver Lake Warriors running back Trevor Ponte's immediate response when asked about what he'd be looking forward to most when he took the field at Scituate High. "We've practiced like that before, but I've never played a regular game under the lights before.

"It's going to be awesome because you'll feel like a real professional football player," she added. "I can't wait."

Pembroke's Billy Flynn seems to be a natural born football player. He plays linebacker at 110 mph and he likes it that way

Why, you ask?

One simple reason.

"I really like to tackle people," he said with a devilish grin. "There's nothing better than putting a good hit on someone."

A true linebacker, right down to the dirty uniform and the mischievous glint in his eye.

"I like the contact," he added. "I'd play hockey for the same reason but I don't quite know how to skate. I don't like basketball or soccer at all really. Football is my favorite sport, no doubt."

"I like that you get to hit people," said all 6'5, 300 pounds of Ryan Mann. Okay so it's closer to 5'2", 63 pounds., but he still packs a mean punch at cornerback.

Another one of his friends seems to have everything in perspective.

"God put me on this Earth to do one single thing," said Kevin James, a peewee defensive tackle and an offensive lineman to boot who will obviously be a media darling if he's ever to make it into the pro ranks. "To tackle people."

Yeah. Just makes you want to strap on some shoulder pads and roll around in the mud, doesn't it?

Recreation/Boosters Basketball registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department/Booster's Basketball registrations will be held for girls and boys in grades 1 through 8, at town hall, Saturday, Nov. 21, from 9 to 11 a.m.

The fee for the program is $40.

Checks should be made payable to: Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club, (CBBC). Shirt charge is included in the fee. Details on the basketball program will be available at registration. Games are played Saturdays, but not during any vacation periods in order to avoid conflicts.

The recreational basketball program is made available via the joint efforts of the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club and the recreation department, providing youngsters with a teaching and recreational opportunity.

Evaluations will be Saturday, Dec. 5, and schedules will be available at registration Nov. 21.

The CBBC will also register parents who wish to coach and sponsors at the Nov. 21 registration.

This year two levels of sponsorship are available, Team Sponsor, $75; and Team and Program Book sponsors $100.

Junior lacrosse registration is December 12

Registration for the 12 and Under and 14 and Under Cohasset Youth Lacrosse programs will be held Saturday, Dec. 12, from 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School.

The 12 and Under program, starting its fourth year, is open to boys and girls currently in the fifth and sixth grade. Registration is $75, which includes a uniform, practice jersey and a youth membership in US Lacrosse, the national governing body for lacrosse. US Lacrosse membership includes a subscription to a new magazine especially designed for kids.

The 14 & Under program is for middle school students. The program is limited to Cohasset residents, but players do not have to be enrolled in the Cohasset school system to be eligible.

Cohasset's junior lacrosse program is a member of the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League, the nation's largest youth program. In general, games are played Sunday afternoons. Practices currently are scheduled for late afternoon Mondays and Fridays. The teams will begin practicing in early March, games start in April and the season concludes with the MBYLL Jamboree in mid-June.

While the schedule should minimize conflicts, problems do sometimes arise. "Every coach prefers that players be there for games and practices," says 12 and Under coach Chuck Jaffe, "but we know there will be times when a child has a different game to go to. So long as they can attend practice often enough to learn the basics — and so long as they tell us when they can not make a practice or game — we don't think lacrosse should be a problem with other events."

Bob Inman assists Jaffe on the 12 and Under level.

Terry Kahn runs the 14 and Under program.

Lacrosse is a contact sport; both practices and games include hitting. In accordance with Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League rules, all players must be equipped with sticks, gloves, shoulder and elbow pads, and helmets with mouthpieces.

Hockey equipment is allowed, although Jaffe warns that hockey gloves are not flexible enough to allow a child to manipulate and control a lacrosse stick. In addition, the MBYLL is considering changing the rule that allows hockey helmets, a decision which is not expected until winter.

Jaffe also notes that while the 12 and Under team welcomes girls, it does not play girls' lacrosse, which avoids full contact and is played under different rules and with slightly different equipment. "Many girls play in the MBYLL," he said, "but there is an adjustment to make when they get older and start playing girls' lacrosse."

At the 12 and Under level, Cohasset will once again try to field two teams in the spring. Last year, the program took on 40 children — including a limited number of fourth-graders — and split into two squads for the first time. "The kids got more repetitions in practice and a lot more playing time in games, which made the players better and the season more fun," Jaffe says. "So long as we have 36 kids sign up, we'll go with two teams again this year." Cohasset must make the decision on how many teams to field by January, so early registration is critical for the program.

There will be more information on the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program available at the Dec. 12 sign-up. If you have an age-eligible child and can not attend the registration session, call Jaffe at 383-9858 or Terry Kahn at 383-0032.

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct Blue Hill Ski and Snow Board Lesson registrations Thursday, Dec. 3, at the recreation office, Cohasset Town Hall, between the hours of 2:30 and 3:30 p.m. and again in the evening, from 5:30 to 6:30.

Registration forms must be signed by a parent or guardian for participation in this five-week program. Beginner through advanced level instruction is available for children and youth, age 7 and older.

Lessons are scheduled to begin Thursday, Jan. 7, and continue for five consecutive weeks, through Thursday, Feb. 4. The bus will leave each week from town hall parking lot at 3:20 p.m. and return from Blue Hills at about 6:45 p.m.

The fee for the ski lessons and transportation for five weeks is $115 and checks should be made payable to: Town of Cohasset. Those participants who require equipment rentals may rent at Blue Hills and the cost for the five weeks with rental package is $155 per person for skiing and $175 for snow board lesson rental, transportation package, or $115 without snow board rentals.

This is the 22nd year that ski lessons at Blue Hills have been offered through the Cohasset Recreation Department and through the years, hundreds of youngsters have had the opportunity to learn how to ski, or improve their technique.

Ragged Mt. Learn to Ski/Snow Board package

Through the auspices of Buckles and Boards of Marshfield, Cohasset Recreation will make available a 5 week Ski or Snow Board package at Ragged Mt. For Cohasset Youth age 10-and-over.

The 5-week program will be Saturdays, beginning January 9 through February 6, 1999 and costs $199 per for the weeks of skiing/snow boarding and Motor Coach transportation.

Equipment rentals are available at both Buckles and Boards and Ragged Mt. For those requiring equipment.

Motor Coach leaves from Buckles and Boards, Route 139, Marshfield, each of the Saturdays at 6 a.m. and returns at about 7 p.m.

Should you have the interest in this unique opportunity please call the Cohasset Recreation at 383-4109.

Information regarding Blue Hills Ski Lessons starting January 7, 1999, will be forthcoming shortly.

Registration will be Thursday, Dec. 3 only from 2:30-3:30 p.m. and again from 5:30-6:30 p.m. at the Recreation office, 1st floor, Town Hall.

Indoor golf registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for beginner level instruction in golf, to be taught by golf pro, Dan Neary. Classes are held Thursday evenings at the Cushing Elementary School gym, Scituate, beginning Nov. 5.

Lessons are five weeks in duration, meeting one hour weekly at a cost of $65 per person.

Classes are limited to eight people and registrations are accepted on a first enrolled basis.

Should you require the use of golf clubs for the classes please indicate this at the time of your registration and you will be loaned clubs free of charge.

Openings remain in the 7 p.m. and the 8 p.m. classes.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 383-4109.

ART NOTES

Watercolor artist at Conservatory's Staircase Gallery

"Art has been my profession since college days," says Kay Shaw, South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery artist through the end of December. "Summers were devoted to work in the field of commercial art, and, as time passed, I engaged in graduate studies in painting which I continue to this day."

Primarily a plein air artist, Shaw often uses the local subjects and natural surroundings of the Massachusetts South Shore in her paintings. She also paints subjects from her travels to the Caribbean and the "Jersey Shore."

Her paintings reflect a wide variety of interests, with recent interest in the human figure and showing people in everyday situations.

A Scituate resident and South Shore Art Center artist, Shaw is a native of New Jersey. She majored in art and earned her BA degree from Skidmore College. She continued her art studies at Boston Museum School and at South Shore Art Center in Cohasset.

"Coffee Break," a watercolor by Kay C. Shaw is on display at the Staircase Gallery in the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham.

Shaw's paintings can be viewed in the gallery Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Saturday, 9 a.m. to noon. South Shore Conservatory is located at One Conservatory Drive in Hingham. Admission is free. For more information, call (781) 749-7565, Ext. 16.

Children's Holiday Art Series

The Children's Creativity Workshop is offering several holiday theme art experiences. In December "holiday Folk Ornaments," and "Santa's Workshop" will take place for three sessions for ages 8 - 12 years.

Creating a keepsake "miniature Menorah" will be offered to boys and girls ages 9 - 13 years. During the December vacation Monday, Dec. 28 through Wednesday, Dec. 30, the following workshops will be given "Winter Wonderland" ages 6 - 8 years, "Fantastic Factories," ages 8 - 12 years, "My Dream Room" ages 9 - 14 years.

Registration is now open. For more information call 749-2453.

Wine, cheese reception Sunday

There will be a gallery show and wine/cheese reception from 2 to 6:30 p.m. at the Red Parrot, 1 Hull Shore Dr., Hull, featuring historic prints and photographs of the South Shore and surrounding areas from Pasquale's Prints. Also Victorian Landmark Watercolors by Elizabeth Trubia, New England Watercolor Series by Carol Carney and Boston Harbor Tugboat Muster by Maura Ballou. For reservations, call 925-1115.

Workshops for adults

South Shore Art Center workshops are still available for the fall semester including Handcoloring Black and White Photographs Monday, Nov. 16, from 7 to 10 p.m., The Polaroid Transfer Process Saturday, Dec. 5, from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. and handmade cards Saturday, Dec. 5, from 2 to 5:30 p.m. Call (781) 383-ARTS to register or for more information.

Workshops for children

The South Shore Art Center is hosting two holiday workshops for children. Start a tradition by making ornaments as a family in Family Ornament Workshop Saturday, Nov. 21, Dec. 5 and 12, from 1 to 3 p.m. Children grades pre-K to third can rejoice in the holiday season and create festive decorations, gifts and yummies in Holiday Happenings. PreK-K will be held Monday, Dec. 7 and 14, from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Grades 1 to 3 will be held Thursday, Dec. 10 and 17, from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Call (781) 383-ARTS to register or for more information.

Works of art on display at high school gallery

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

A boring brick passageway at Cohasset High School has been transformed to a gallery featuring the art work of talented students.

A $2,500 fund-raising grant from the PSO made the project possible. But it was also the hard work of high school teachers Mary DeLeon and Al LaFontaine, as well as a plentiful supply of young talent, that brought the gallery undertaking to its colorful fruition.

"What we decided to do with the grant was ask the different schools to come up with proposals of projects and this particular one came to our attention," said PSO publicity chairwoman Elaine Breslow. "Last year, it was felt that the high school doesn't always get a lot of attention and this idea was something that was student-generated in its interest." So the PSO decided to fund the project which was completed in the late spring."

LaFontaine installed compressed cardboard over the hallway's brick walls. DeLeon painted the covering in white to serve as suitable backdrop for the students' watercolor, pencil, wood and ceramic works, all illuminated by track lighting the pair arranged to have installed.

Their students have produced a colorful collection of Monet-inspired watercolor landscapes, pencil sketches and birdhouses that can be admired by fellow-classmates as they make their way from English lab.

DeLeon can sometimes hear students stopping as walk down the hall between classes.

"'Hey, that's my friend's painting,' or 'Oh, that's new,' I'll hear them say," said DeLeon, who has found the gallery a good vehicle for students to critique art work.

"I use this area in my work with students. They critique their own as well as other students' work," she said.

Some examples of their creativity: a sketch by Matt Morde befitting a fashion magazine; pen and watercolor greenery by Julie Lavallo; a philosophical modern piece by Danelle Anderson; an abstract acrylic by Stephanie Parkinson and a Monet landscape by Matt Santoro.

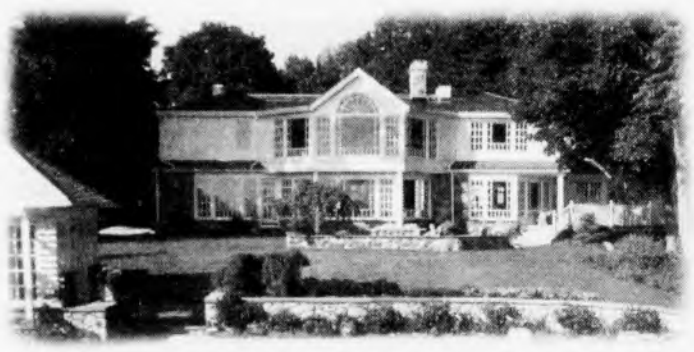
Art teacher Mary DeLeon mounts art work on walls of the new gallery in the middle/high school corridor.

Another section of the corridor holds a collection of birdhouses made by LaFontaine's students in his industrial design, furniture design and applied technology classes.

Craig Parker's red bird "barn" with ranch-style fence and Justin Maitland's birdhouse with a gray elephants-entryway are only a few of the inventive dovecotes there.

LaFontaine's students design their work on paper and then see how close their building replicates the original design. "It's a learning tool to get more focused," LaFontaine said.



Students, who are currently working on building tables soon to be displayed, know not to expect any help from LaFontaine, who refuses to offer students stymied by the task any ideas. "If they struggle, that's how they learn. I want them to figure it out for themselves. Self-discovery and learning to be independent-that's my goal for when I teach," he said.

"We are always asking the community for money for the PSO and so we'd like the community to know what we're spending their hard-earned dollars on. With something like this gallery, it comes back to the community and students so that everyone can enjoy it."
— Elaine Breslow, PSO publicity

Ceramic instructor Bonnie Muir's students have a variety of coil pots laid out in a display case donated by the South Shore Art Center. "The Center has been very good to us in the past," DeLeon said.

Needless to say, the PSO is pleased with the results of its grant.

"Sometimes you make offers of things and nothing comes to fruition but the school followed up on this immediately and I think everyone feels proud to see the fruits of everyone's labor," Breslow said. "We are always asking the community for money for the PSO and so we'd like the community to know what we're spending their hard-earned dollars on. With something like this gallery, it comes back to the community and students so that everyone can enjoy it."

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Health education council

On Tuesday, Nov. 24, there will be a meeting of all community resident interested in serving on the Community Health Education Advisory. Community participation is an essential component of effective health education programs. The Cohasset Health Education Advisory Council has been active since 1974 and acts in advisory capacity to the schools and as an advocate for comprehensive and sequential health instruction for all students. Meetings are usually held quarterly and/or as needed.

The meeting will begin at 7 p.m. and will be held in room 103 at the high school (enter the main entrance, take a right, second door on the left.)

Ripley Media Center upgrades

Recent improvements at the Ripley Media Center at Cohasset Middle High School have upgraded the look of the facility. A new rug, clean painted walls and a new library media specialist have contributed to the changes. Joan Gallagher, a veteran of both public and school libraries, has set her goal for this year. She wants to expand the materials collection and work with staff and students to use both traditional and newer research tools to their fullest.

Parents or other Cohasset residents who would like to volunteer to assist with ongoing, as well as, special projects are invited to call the Ripley at 383-2447 for details.

PSO fall lecture series

Please join the Cohasset PSO for a presentation by Jack Agati on "Birth Order: How Your Place in the Family Affects Your View of the World." This entertaining and informative program explores the many characteristics and styles of behavior associated with the various positions in the family and offers ways in which to use the positive characteristics of each position.

The presentation will begin at 7 p.m. on Nov. 12 and will be held at the Joseph Osgood School.

For further information please call: Maggie Smith 383-1136 or Sarah Porter 383-2029.

NDA hosts open house

Notre Dame Academy, a Catholic, college preparatory high school for young women, will host an open house Wednesday, Nov. 18, from 6 to 8 p.m. Prospective students may tour the school, meet with faculty and register for the Archdiocesan entrance exam, scheduled for Saturday, Dec. 12. Applications will also be distributed.

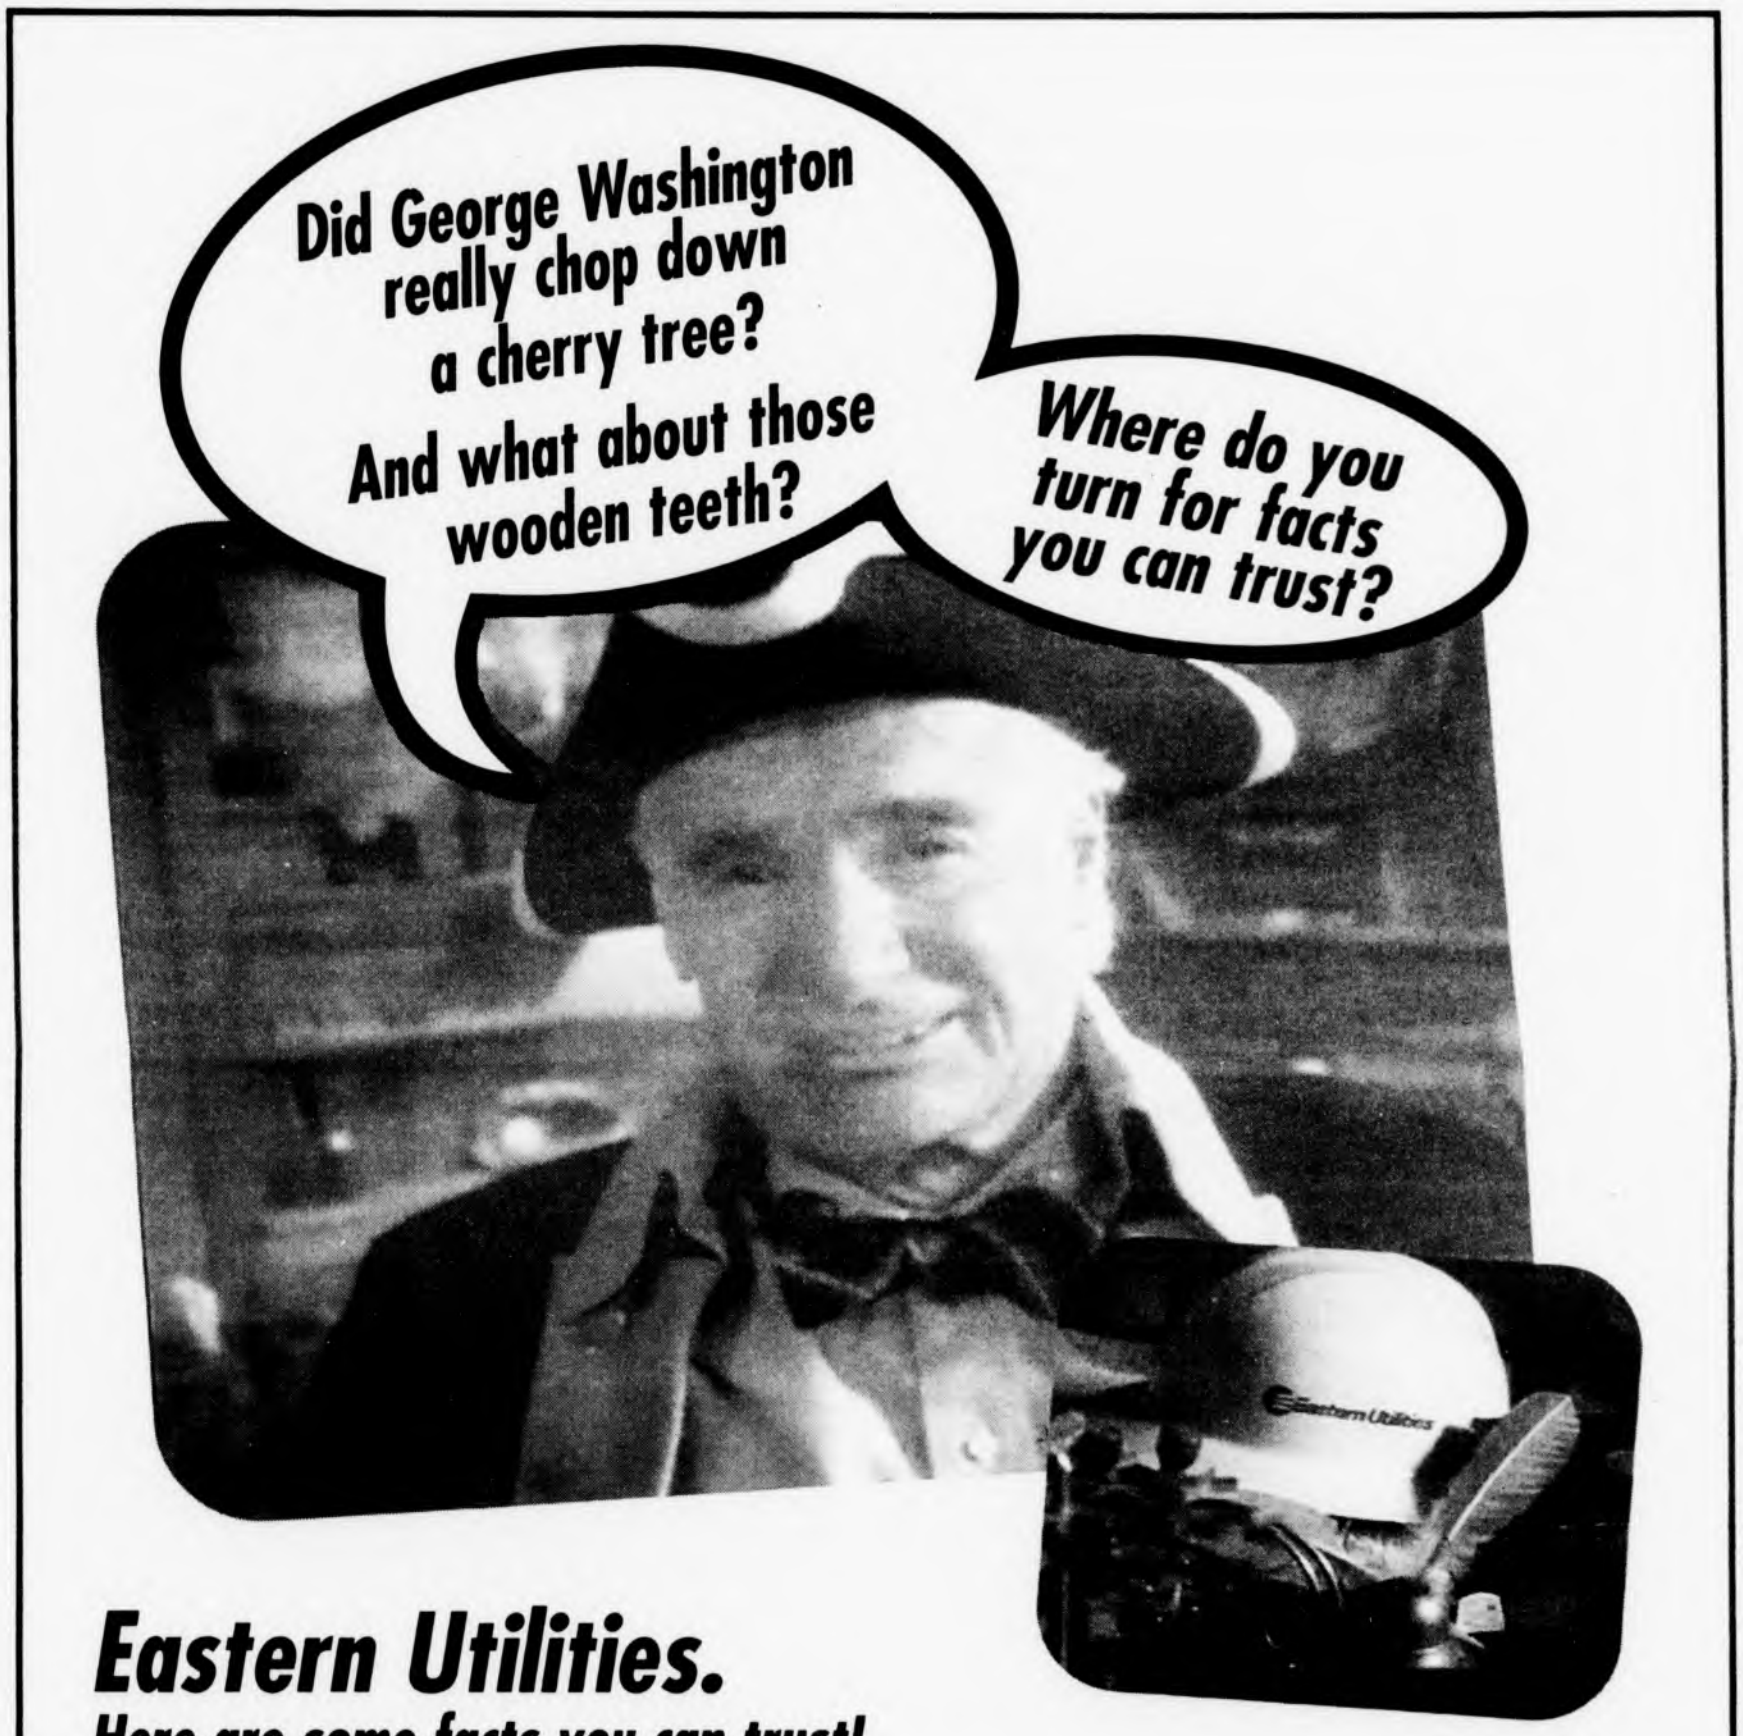
Notre Dame Academy is equipped with a multi-media language learning center, a library/media center, two networked IBM computer labs, a chapel and athletic fields. Enrollment in grades 9 to 12 is approximately 550 students, representing 40 communities. Nearly 100 percent of Notre Dame graduates attend four-year colleges.

For more information regarding Notre Dame Academy, call the admissions office at (781) 749-5930.

Apply for college scholarships

State Sen. Robert Hedlund calls on outstanding high school students to apply to him for a college scholarship.

Hedlund can nominate several students for a state-proposed scholarship, the Teen Anti-Drug Lifetime Leadership (TALL) Award. High school seniors who have demonstrated interest in anti-drug causes are invited to apply.



The Governor's Alliance Against Drugs will award the scholarships to 11 students from across Massachusetts, one student from each district attorney's region. Ten students will receive $1,000, and the most outstanding student will receive a $2,000 award.

All finalist must be nominated by community leaders such as Sen. Hedlund, school officials, D.A.R.E., officers or religious leaders. Hedlund will only be able to nominate students to be finalists; he will not choose the actual winners.

"This is a great reward for students working hard to fight drug abuse," Hedlund said. "It won't be easy to choose qualified nominees from all the deserving kids in our district, but I encourage any outstanding student to give it a shot."

Any high school senior who plans to attend public or private college next fall can apply. Students should write a brief (1 to 2 pages) letter outlining their anti-drug activities and leadership qualities, and mail it to: State Sen. Robert Hedlund, 66 Sea St., Weymouth 02191.

Letters must be received by Dec. 15. The senator and his staff will review applications and inform nominees of their success in the following weeks. Nominations will be submitted to the governor's anti-drug office by the end of January, and winners will be announced by Gov. Paul Cellucci's office in the first week of March.

Eastern Utilities.

Here are some facts you can trust!

- With deregulation, you will be able to buy electricity from a competitive supplier.
- But Eastern Utilities will still be your distribution or "wires" company.
- We'll still maintain power lines and provide safe reliable service.
- We'll still get you back in power after any storm or other emergency.
- We'll still manage billing and provide customer service.
- We'll still be in our communities — offering safety-education programs to children & adults.
- We'll still offer conservation programs to help you save energy and money.

Christmas tree sale fund-raiser

First Parish in Cohasset is again offering fresh cut Christmas trees to be picked up the morning of the Village Fair, Dec. 5, 9 to 11:30 a.m., at the Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main St., or the following day, Sunday, noon. to 1 p.m.

Trees from 5 to 9 feet tall will be sold for $35. Buyers may choose from a nice selection of trees. Order by Nov. 22 to be in a drawing for a free tree! Call 383-9845 to order or for more information. Pre-orders are being taken.

The Fifth Jingle Bell Walk

The South Shore Community Center invites family, friends and the entire community to join them in the holiday spirit at the Fifth Jingle Bell Walk. Now a Cohasset tradition, sponsored by SSCC, it will begin at 2 p.m. Friday, Nov. 27, as Santa, Mrs. Claus, and the elves arrive by boat at Cohasset Harbor (Border St.). After Santa distributes jingle bells to everyone, he will hop aboard the horse-drawn hay wagon, and the parade will follow him along Elm and Main Sts., to the Community Center building.

At 2:30 p.m., everyone will gather in the Community Center gym for hot chocolate and cookies and sing-a-long tunes. There will be an opportunity for photos with Santa, face painting, and arts and crafts for sale through the South Shore Art Center display in the Senior Room.

Merchants in the village and about town may participate by offering treats or discounts.

There will be free hayrides around the Common and the bells of St. Stephen's Carillon will be ringing. The bell tower will be open to the public for viewing the bells in motion.

At 3 p.m. there will be a turkey trot for the little ones, with proceeds to benefit the Community Center Nursery School.

As dusk arrives, the tree will be lit on the Common and the Luminaria around the Duck Pond, and there will be more music and holiday singing.

Appalachia Service Project Thanksgiving pie sale

The Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project, community student volunteers engaged in a home repair/home building ministry serving Central Appalachia, will once again be baking homemade pies and breads for its Thanksgiving fund-raiser.

The Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project Volunteers will bake apple, pumpkin, mincemeat and pecan pies as well a cranberry, pumpkin, and lemon poppy seed bread. The price of the bread is $5 per loaf, while the price of the pies is $8 for the apple, pumpkin and mincemeat.

Order forms will be available from the students and adults preparing for next summer's trip, at local churches, or by calling the Second Congregational Church at 383-0345. Order deadline is Wednesday, Nov. 18. The pies and breads will be available for pick-up on Sunday, Nov. 22 from 11 a.m. - 1 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church, or can be delivered that afternoon.

Winter coats at consignment shop

Prepare for Jack Frost and Ole Man Winter and rush to Cohasset Consignment Shop for Burberry, Perry Ellis, cashmere, Camel Hair men and women winter coats, also, silver platters for holidays.

The Cohasset Consignment Shop, located on 3A in Cohasset, Shaw's Plaza has a grand assortment of men and women's winter coats, Andi Merrill of Scituate announced.

Merrill added that those entertaining for Thanksgiving will find silver turkey platters, serving dishes, bone china dessert plates, cut glass vases and bowls as well as a wide collection of oil paintings.

To consign items hours are 10-11:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. The shop is open Monday through Saturday 10 a.m.-4 p.m. and Sunday 12-4 p.m. There will be no consignments Veteran's Day, Nov. 11, but the shop will be open 10 a.m.-4 p.m.

Shoppers not only find treasures but their purchases help support many programs of the social service league that serves the South Shore towns of Hingham, Norwell, Hull, Scituate and Cohasset.

For information on volunteering, call 383-0687 as the shop is staffed with volunteers and are needed, Merrill noted.

'State Fair' continues this weekend

Hingham Civic Music Theatre (HCMT) will present the Massachusetts premier of Rodgers and Hammerstein's musical "State Fair" this Nov. 14 at 8 p.m., and 15 at 2 p.m., at Rockland High School, Rockland. This presentation is part of HCMT's 50th anniversary season, which celebrates 50 years of entertaining the South Shore. For tickets and information, call Cathy Campbell at (781) 749-0083 .

This premier production is being directed by Mark Bono and choreographed by Tina Combs-Fabrizio. Assisting as stage manager is Debbie Rawson and as pianist, Shawn Spencer. "State Fair" boasts a cast of 40, featuring residents of Hingham, Milton, Quincy, Weymouth, Hanover, Cohasset, Scituate and many other South Shore communities. The show will be performed at Rockland High School while the group's new facility in Hingham is being renovated.

For more information about Hingham Civic Music Theatre's 50-year history, call Violet Villani at (781) 749-4271. For other information about the group, call Joel Leonard, president, at (781) 749-6431.

Hingham Civic Music Theatre is a non-profit organization serving the entire South Shore.

Susan R. Page, M.D.

Susan Ruth Page, M.D., of Ashokan, N.Y., died Monday, Nov. 9, at home. She was 51.

As a physician, wife and mother, she had an active and extensive family medical practice from 1986 to 1995 in Rockland, Cohasset and Scituate, before moving in 1995 to Ashokan.

Dr. Page began her work career as an R.N., graduating from Mary Hitchcock Memorial Hospital School of Nursing in Hanover, N.H. Higher education was extremely important to her. She continued her education in the medical field earning a B.S. in Nursing cum laude from Pace University School of Nursing and, following pre-med courses at Columbia University completed in 1980, was awarded in 1985 her Doctor of Medicine (M.D.) with honors from Case Western Reserve School of Medicine.

She was born Dec. 26, 1946, in White Plains, N.Y., the daughter of the late John Malcolm Page and Gladys Harvea Fitch Page.

A service for family and friends will take place at home in Ashokan Saturday at 2 p.m. Arrangements have been assisted by the Lasher Funeral Home in Woodstock.

Remembrances to honor Dr. Susan Ruth Page may be made to the Oakwoods Friends School (in Poughkeepsie, N.Y.) Scholarship Fund.

Bettina Gray

Bettina Gray, 83, died Oct. 31 in San Diego, Calif. Ms. Gray was the daughter of William C. Gray, early automobile industrialist. Bettina, known to her friends as "Big Mo," attended Beaver Country Day School in Brookline and studied drama at the Erskine School in Boston. She also studied drama in Austria, as well as with Elia Kazan in New York. She starred in a film called "The Beauty Queen," filmed mostly in Cohasset during World War II, to help raise money for war bonds. She was very active in the Cohasset Dramatic Club during and after the war.

On settling in California to be near her children, she studied both painting and photography. She became well-known for her photographs of hang-glider events and has had her photos exhibited in the Smithsonian Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C. She was instrumental in establishing the America's Cup of Hang-Gliding. She returned many summers to Cohasset and Scituate, where she felt her roots were. She made an extensive photographic record of the mossing industry in Scituate and accompanied the mossers out to their working areas. Some of these are on exhibit in the Maritime Museum in Scituate.

Her interest in painting and photography took her to England, France and the South Pacific. She photographed Monet's Garden in France and the Sissinghurst Castle Gardens in England. The photographs at Sissinghurst were taken with permission of the National Trust of England and were to be published in a portfolio. Many of her photographs were exhibited in Paris, France, in a show called "Black, White and Gray."

Her children include William P. Liscomb of San Marcos, Calif., and the late Bettina Bancroft of Beverly Hills, Calif. She leaves two brothers: Preston Gray of Plymouth, and J. Neal Gray of Scituate, and three grandchildren: Elisabeth Goth of Rancho Santa Fe, Calif.; Megan Liscomb of Carlsbad, Calif.; and Russel E. Liscomb of San Marcos, Calif. The late Micheal Goth, a grandson, preceded her passing. Funeral services were private.

Bettina Gray

Dorothy F. Booth

Dorothy Farr Booth, 74, died Thursday, Nov. 5, at home in Cohasset.

Mrs. Booth graduated from Middlebury College in 1947 and began a career as a book designer in New York and Boston. She lived in Cohasset since 1960 and was an active volunteer in the community and the First Parish Church in Cohasset. She and her husband, the late Robert S. Booth Jr., enjoyed sailing and golfing.

She leaves her children, Susan Booth West of East Falmouth, Robert S. Booth III of Streamwood, Ill. and Edward F. Booth of Boston; her mother, Mildred S. Farr of Hingham; her brothers, E. Lincoln Farr of Longboat Key, Fla. and Richard S. Farr of Nashua, N.H.; four grandchildren, Brenton M. West, Brian T. West, Katrina P. Booth and Robert [illegible] for Booth IV.

A memorial service will be celebrated Saturday, Nov. 14, at The First Parish in Cohasset at 2 p.m. Interment will be private.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Service, Cohasset and Norwell.

Donations in Mrs. Booth's memory may be made to the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, 44 Binney St., Boston, MA 02115.

Cohasset Village fair is Dec. 5

Village Fair preparations are underway in Cohasset for the town's traditional holiday celebration to be held Saturday, Dec. 5, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. All the churches on the town common, in addition to the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church, have begun plans adding greater variety with more booths to this annual event.

First Parish is offering fresh cut Christmas trees that may be picked up the morning of the Village Fair at the Parish House, 23 N. Main St. Trees are from 5 to 9 feet tall and will be sold for $35. Orders placed by Nov. 22 will be entered in a drawing for a free tree. To order your tree, call 383-9845. On the day of the fair, First Parish will sell hand-painted tree ornaments. The church will donate a tree to Wellspring in Hull as well as to the Cohasset Food Pantry. In addition there will be a Swedish coffee shop with Scandinavian coffee, pastry and breads. An old-style "Jumble Sale" with a little bit of everything from attic treasures to closet clear-outs and bargain basement furniture will complete their holiday offering.

Saint Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave., will offer its holiday book sale. There will be novels, poetry, non-fiction, children's books, cooking, craft and gardening books, even CDs, videos and computer programs. A number of prize books will be offered by "silent auction." If you would like to donate books in good condition for this sale, you may leave them at St. Stephen's Parish House Wednesdays and Thursdays from 8 to 11 a.m. and 2 to 4 p.m. St. Stephen's will also offer its "General Store" of baked goods and home-made candy. Coffee, doughnuts, soups and crusty breads will also be offered on fair day in the parish hall. Proceeds from the Saint Stephen's portion of the fair will go to the many social services provided by Wellspring in the town of Hull.

The Appalachia Service Organization will sponsor the "Secret Room" at Saint Stephen's Church. This room is for children only who enter to purchase small holiday gifts for their families and friends. The gifts will be wrapped by volunteers before the children leave, keeping the gifts a "secret" until Christmas. The Appalachia Service Organization will send 99 teenagers to West Virginia to meet the people of Appalachia, learn about their culture, and help renovate homes there for people in need. The organization will hold a craft sale at the Congregational Church, and sponsor Santa Claus, who will meet with children on the Town Common.

Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., will offer a boutique offering handcrafts including pine cone wreaths, Christmas tree skirts, wooden snowmen and Santas. There will be an old-fashioned New England clam chowder bar, and a booth selling baked goods and cheese. Proceeds from the Congregational Church's booths will go to their Outreach program.

For the first time, the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church will hold their Village Fair booths, highlighted by Greek pastry, at the Community Center, 3 N. Main St. Other offerings will include crafts, boxwood trees and wreaths, a White Elephant table and boutique.

METCO rounds out academic experience for all involved

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

METCO families and host families, as well as community members, gathered in the high school cafeteria recently for the annual fall dinner that celebrates the positive presence the program has brought to the town for three decades.

Founded in 1966, METCO (Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunities, Incorporated), is a state-funded, non-profit organization that places minority children in suburban public schools to "provide the opportunity for an integrated public school education for children of color from racially imbalanced schools in Boston and Springfield."

METCO is the nation's oldest voluntary desegregation program. At its inception, it had only 220 students spread throughout seven participating towns.

Today, METCO students can be found in 32 towns in metropolitan Boston and there is a waiting list of 14,700, according to METCO associate director John Shandorf. Cohasset currently has 48 of the program's students enrolled in its public schools.

Shandorf explained that the program has been on the receiving end of criticism in the past, with some questioning its success.

"What is success, anyway?" he queried. "We have critics of the program who don't see the advantages of integrated education. They want to focus on how the students are achieving and specifically, on how they're achieving in comparison to the resident students. But what should be looked at? The district's ability to educate a diverse student population or the success of the individual student?"

For Boston METCO representative and mother Caroline Remy, the program has been a success for her son, Manasseh Remy, who delivered a Martin Luther King, Jr. speech at school in honor of Diversity Day that was attended by TV anchorwoman Liz Walker last March.

"We've been involved for four years," said Remy. "I got involved for my son. I think it's an excellent program and I think it's an excellent opportunity for both neighborhoods. We learn from them and they learn from us about our different cultures."

Remy and her son have forged ties in the community through his involvement with METCO.

"We have a Jewish family whom we congregate with from time to time and we socialize in their home and they come here," she said. "The soccer team is excellent, the schools are excellent, and my son benefits from both-he's a good soccer player and a good student."

"I think it's an excellent program and I think it's an excellent opportunity for both neighborhoods. We learn from them and they learn from us about our different cultures."

— Caroline Remy,
mother of METCO student

METCO has had more than 5,500 students graduate during the last 32 years, according to Shandorf.

"In our most recent statistics, of those who have graduated over the last five years, more than 85 percent at least indicate that they are gong on to higher education," he said.

Shandorf also points out the hard-to-measure success of the program's impact on the hosting town's students.

Alicia Robertson, 5, comes up with a winner at the annual METCO dinner at the high school.

"We want to have that looked into," he said. "Anecdotally, we've had a number of Caucasian students who were impacted as students in the suburban districts enough to want to work with us. We've had several interns come to work here because they saw METCO at work as they grew. We have to look at that, too, when weighing the success of the program."

At the very least, Shandorf can report that the METCO students are within the bell curve of the resident students in terms of testing and grades.

Susan Etkind, METCO host family member for four years and founder of the Cohasset Diversity Committee, now part of the PSO, held a meeting a METCO and Diversity Committee meeting at her home last week.

"We are trying to get the schools to develop a school-wide plan and program to deal with multiculturalism," she explained about the evening's agenda. "In the past, we organized a diversity day last year. Our dinner (Nov. 1) was a success, with 75 in attendance-maybe even more, since there was a group of about 20 kids down in the gym having some fun."

Cohasset METCO representative Betsy Connolly gave the program high marks.

"METCO is such a wonderful program. We have such limited diversity here in Cohasset and the Boston children really make a sacrifice in traveling that long distance every day to and from Boston.," she said.

Landfill hearing put off as closure talks proceed

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission was supposed to meet on Monday night to discuss an environmental report critical the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill's impact on the Lily Pond watershed. But the water commission didn't meet.

According to water commissioner John K. McNabb Jr., the meeting was delayed because of pressure from the CHL subcommittee which has been meeting behind closed doors to negotiate a post-closure settlement with the owners of the landfill, Paul and John Barry. McNabb, who represents the water commission on the CHL subcommittee, said members of the subcommittee pressured him to postpone the meeting, fearing it would have a negative impact on negotiations with CHL.

"I'm perplexed," McNabb said. "This is information that CHL is worse than anyone ever imagined. The bottom line is that CHL would like to suppress this report and the negotiating committee won't oppose that. This report contradicts everything CHL has ever said about the landfill not damaging the environment. I'm very upset and outraged that [the committee] has placed all this pressure on me."

Kevin Ulmer, chairman of the CHL subcommittee, said it would be inappropriate for him to comment on McNabb's statements given the delicate nature of the negotiations.

School safety traffic issues raised by PSO

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

An "accident waiting to happen" was the description PSO President Jane Pescatore used in her letter to school committee Chairman Rick Shea, addressing growing concern about the pick-up and drop-off situation at the new Joseph Osgood Elementary and Deer Hill schools.

According to Pescatore, who wrote the letter at the request of the PSO board, there are several issues that need to be addressed by the school committee. Namely, the traffic flow at the Osgood; the parking lot at Deer Hill, which does not have clearly marked parking spaces and is too narrow in its dimensions and provides poor visibility; and the lack of a crossing guard at the Sohier Street entrance-exit area.

Pescatore requested that the school committee support Cohasset parents "in their efforts to address these issues and to achieve speedy, long-term solutions. The school committee said that they've hired a consultant, but I

Wireless Internet service is coming to Cohasset

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Imagine opening up a battery powered laptop computer, firing up a cordless modem with a rechargeable battery and using e-mail or the Internet from any spot in Cohasset, indoors or outdoors, at any time of day or night, in any weather. Does this sound like the Cohasset of the future? Well, it is, but it isn't a vision of the future decades from now. Wireless modems are coming to Cohasset next year thanks to the selectmen's approval of a 25-year contract with Metricom Inc., of Los Gatos, California.

Ricochet is the name of the wireless modem network. Metricom plans to install receivers about the size of a shoebox on streetlight poles throughout town. The receivers are placed every 1/4-mile to 1/2-mile, about six per square mile, in a checkerboard pattern. Metricom will pay $60 per pole per year to Eastern Edison for the use of the streetlight poles. Although the town gets no money from the deal,

Saving Osgood School wing

Selectman Diane Sullivan strongly objects to the demolition of the 1954 wing of the old Osgood School to make way for parking and handicap access to the proposed library in the former school building.

"I don't support lobbing off the 5,000 square-foot wing, the taxpayers paid for that," said Sullivan at last week's selectmen's meeting.

She also wants to explore the possibility of constructing senior housing along with the library at the site.

Last month's town meeting overwhelmingly supported the library concept and appropriated money for the design phase. Voters did not support selling the building to a private, for-profit developer who proposed turning the building into condominiums for seniors.

The library only intends to use the central section of the old school, so Sullivan thinks affordable housing for seniors could be developed in the 1954 wing and the back section, which library trustees suggested could be leased out.

Advice on master plan

Representatives from the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC), a regional agency that includes Cohasset, attended last week's selectmen's meeting to help set a course for a master plan. The last master plan for the town was developed in 1961, Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said.

"We are committed to a new master plan for the town and are looking for guidance on how to proceed," McMorris said.

Jean Christiansen of the MAPC said a lot of communities are in the same boat. She said Newton, Hingham, Lexington, and Holbrook are developing master plans.

She estimated the cost of a master plan in the $85,000-$100,000 range.

Christiansen and Edward Tirrello of MAPC say the town needs to establish a long-range planning committee to bring together the different groups in town such as the zoning and planning boards.

The committee would define the goals and establish priorities. Tirrello explained there is state law, which defines the elements that a master plan should include, such as land use, economic base, circulation pattern and open space.

MAPC can help the town develop a "build out" analysis that can also be a useful tool, Christiansen said. The build out would look at what the zoning ordinances allow and what could happen if everything could be built.

Four-way stop at Doane Street

Selectmen hope a new four-way stop and island at Doane and Beechwood streets will alleviate any safety hazard caused by some newly planted bushes in the Beechwood Cemetery.

Doane Street resident Roy Fitzsimmons objected to the plantings and said they caused an obstruction at the intersection endangering the residents of the street.

"The simple solution would be to remove about 20 feet of bushes from the Beechwood Street side and put them on the Doane Street side about 20 feet back," Fitzsimmons said.

He said none of the residents were asked about the bushes before they were planted.

Selectman Merle Brown said the bushes were part of the project to upgrade the Beechwood Cemetery.

"The idea is to separate the cemetery from the street," he said.

Brown said the addition of the fourth stop sign at the intersection allows more visibility because cars must now stop there.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the four-way stop and island should be given a chance to work but the issue would be revisited if safety continues to be a problem.

St. Anthony's permit fee waiver denied

Selectmen would not agree to reconsider their refusal to waive the $18,000 building permit fee for the St. Anthony's parish hall currently under construction.

Church member Francis Collins of South Main Street said the other churches in town were granted waivers in the past and the community center was forgiven 1/2 its fee for a new addition.

But Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the board adopted the "no waiver" policy last week out of fairness.

She said this way moving forward, all non-profits would be treated the same.

"The town must pay its bills anyone else and we need to have the income to do that," McMorris said.

But Collins pointed out that St. Anthony's parishioners are taxpayers.

"We are the only church in town not to have undertaken a big project," he said. "I hate to think your policy is discriminating."

Collins said the parish hall would have been built years ago but the sewer issue had to be resolved.

"I am dismayed and upset that St. Anthony's is not afforded the same waiver as everyone else and I ask you to reconsider," he said.

Selectmen adopted the policy last week in a majority vote with Selectmen Nan Roth and Merle Brown dissenting.

Osgood Reuse Committee disbanded

Selectmen voted to disband the Osgood Reuse Committee, charged with finding the best way to return the former elementary school to the tax rolls. After two years of study, the reuse committee recommended the school be sold to a private developer who would develop senior citizen condominiums in the building. But town meeting nixed that proposal in favor of using the old school as the site for a new library.

Thanksgiving breakfast

The Sons of the American Legion will host a Thanksgiving Breakfast at the Legion Hall from 7 to 10 a.m. on Thanksgiving. The cost is $4 for all you can eat. Proceeds will benefit the scholarship fund and other programs of the Sons.

Osgood being mothballed

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen this week that plans are underway to mothball the old Osgood School. He said the water has been turned off and the pipes drained. The windows will be boarded up in the rear of the building but the plywood will be painted to match the brick so it won't be such an eyesore. A fence will also be installed to prevent trespassing. Haddad said he would work with recreation director Jack Worley to find a space for the popular summer playground program that has used the school in the past. For safety reasons, the school must be off limits to the program, selectmen said. Worley hoped the gym and an adjacent classroom might be available. The new Osgood and Deer Hill don't provide enough field space for the three age groups in the program.

Road rage incidents pick up speed

Can escalate into violence

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Tailgaters and erratic drivers, beware. State and local police departments are stepping up efforts to control incidents of "road rage," which have become more prevalent in recent years.

Incidents of road rage have increased seven to eight percent a year nationally according to reported events, said Arthur Kinsman, manager of government relations for the American Automobile Association (AAA).

Aggressive drivers who are operating their vehicles in a way, which endangers fellow motorists, evidence road rage.

Unnerving incidents often encountered by motorists on the road include tailgating, cutting other drivers off, expressing anger or making obscene gestures, speeding and changing lanes without using directionals.

But road rage is considered a deliberate attempt or intent to harm another driver or damage his or her motor vehicle.

A recent national study conducted by AAA showed that 25 percent of American drivers admitted driving aggressively; 58 percent said they have caught themselves speeding; and 26 percent said they've expressed anger to other motorists.

There is a difference between aggressive driving and road rage, Kinsman said, even though the terms are often used interchangeably.

Aggressive driving is generally operating a motor vehicle without regard for another motorists' safety.

"But this kind of behavior isn't always the result of anger or frustration," said Kinsman. "Some drivers are passive-aggressive — tailgating, neglecting to use their turn signals and driving at high speeds. With some drivers, it's almost unconscious."

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan thinks the term road rage is used too loosely.

"In my opinion, road rage occurs when someone set out to commit a crime," he said. "Road anger is what we see more often as a result of people being impatient and losing their temper."

Although aggressive driving or "road anger" is what Cohasset police see more often, two incidents in the last six months are examples of a disturbing trend.

Noonan said a woman frustrated with a "tailgater" who was on her bumper pulled over on Forest Avenue. An argument ensued and the tailgater slapped the woman, he said.

In another more frightening incident, a woman called 9-1-1 on her car phone to report a tailgater pursuing her along Rt. 3A and following her down Forest Avenue. Police advised her to continue past her house. Cohasset, Hull and state police then converged on the perpetrator in Hull. He was arrested and charged with operating under the influence and as it turned out he had weapons in his car, Noonan said.

Motorists who experience incidents of road rage should take down the license number of the offending driver.

Road rage incidents can escalate into extreme violence, as evidenced by the death of a young man on Rt. 95 a few years ago. An angry motorist following a roadside argument killed the victim with a crossbow. The incident involved a number of motorists exhibiting harassing behavior.

Psychotherapist Sherry Johnson of Hingham attributes incidents of road rage in part to a lack of graciousness.

"We've lost that as a culture, and we take for granted that we live in a violent world," she said. "We see evidence of that in every arena of our lives, from political issues to road rage to anger exhibited in the corridors of our workplace."

Violence is often much more accepted than graciousness.

"But the reverse of that should be true," Johnson said. "What's needed is to treat each other in a kinder, friendlier, healthier manner."

A recent national study conducted by AAA showed that 25 percent of American drivers admitted driving aggressively; 58 percent said they have caught themselves speeding; and 26 percent said they've expressed anger to other motorists.

3-D program

The Massachusetts State Police have been targeting drivers who drive dangerously through its "3-D" program. An unmarked Mustang cruiser tracks aggressive drivers, identifies the offender and videotapes the incident. The driver's speed is also read.

A marked cruiser travels a mile or so ahead of the unmarked cruiser and snags the offender.

"With the state program in place, you could be driving like an idiot right past an unmarked state trooper's car," Kinsman said.

The end result isn't always just a ticket, either, although hefty fines are often levied on motorists with multiple violations.

"Drivers caught behaving aggressively can have their licenses suspended immediately if they pose an immediate threat," he said, especially motorists who simultaneously exhibit violence, aggression and anger culminating in aggressive driving, for example.

Brendon Potter of Brendon Potter Insurance Agency in Hingham is aware of the road rage issue, although he hasn't seen any related insurance claims.

Nevertheless, aggressive driving causes many accidents, particularly tailgating.

"About two of every five incidents involves tailgating," he said. "The single most advice I can offer to avoid accidents is, Don't tailgate. Needless, avoidable damage is caused by this kind of driving."

A number of claims involving tailgating have involved young drivers.

"Some kids I've talked to say they lack practical experience," said Potter. "They need to be told, whether by parents or driver trainers, to avoid tailgating. In fact, we mention to all young drivers who come in for insurance to keep their distance."

He suggests leaving one car length between automobiles for every 10-mph. The downside, however, is that motorists will sometimes take advantage of the open space and cut in.

Potter suggests drivers call the police from their cellular phones when tailgating or other incidents occur.

"If someone is drunk or harassing a motorist, maybe they'll be caught more often if the incidents are reported," he said. "We're always in a crowd on the road these days, no matter what time of day or night it is. People are always busy, always rushing. We need to slow down, all of us — it's our lives."

Both aggressive acts and blatant road rage pose dangerous conditions for drivers.

Road rage is usually the result of aggressive driving and can turn into an ugly incident, sometimes over a trivial cause.

"Everyone gets angry, and it's sometimes hard to control it, especially if there is other stress in your life. We live in a fast-paced society," Kinsman said.

Even individuals who are not aggressive by nature can become hardened in a hostile driving environment.

"They sometimes do things they wouldn't ordinarily do in their daily lives, at work or at the mall," he said.

Noonan, the Cohasset police chief, says road rage and road anger is a sign of the times.

"I think everybody - both men and women are in a hurry. Everyone is working, no one gets much time at home, so they don't like obstacles in their way," he said.

Staying cool behind the wheel

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Incidents of road rage are on the rise nationwide and even in suburban communities like Cohasset and other South Shore towns.

Art Kinsman, manager of government relations for the American Automobile Association, offers some tips to avoid getting involved in stressful and sometimes dangerous situations on the road, including when driving to work:

•To avoid anger and frustration, motorists should allow themselves enough time to get to work and anticipate that traffic delays will most likely occur.

"If you're caught in traffic, just accept the fact that you're going to be late for work," he said. "It's a fact of life."

Drivers traveling on Rt. 3 and in the greater Boston area often encounter a hostile environment.

"There are too many cars in too small a space," he said. "The situation naturally creates traffic jams and frustration."

• Realize that motorists sometimes feel a false sense of protection while inside their vehicles.

"People sometimes feel sort of detached and can lash out at other drivers," Kinsman said.

•Don't underestimate the capacity of another individual towards violence.

"The person could be just out of jail or a drug user," he stated.

•Avoid verbal or other exchanges, because there's no way of detecting the emotional state of the person you're engaging with.

• Call *77 (state police) from a cellular phone and let a police officer deal with drivers who are exhibiting road-rage behavior.

"It's a grave mistake for drivers to try to be the enforcers," said Kinsman. "Don't try to teach another motorist a lesson even though you may be in the right. If a driver is acting aggressively, he or she is capable of more aggression."

A false sense of security, which is sometimes felt behind the wheel of a 3,500-pound vehicle, can lead to trouble.

"A car is not a protective cocoon," said Kinsman. "Motorists need to realize their cars aren't bulletproof. Angry people may follow you home, and you can't stay in your vehicle forever."

•People who have problems with anger management can seek counseling if the problem is pervasive in their lives.

Psychotherapist Sherry Johnson of Hingham said the real issue with road rage is what's going on inside a person who exhibits these aggressive tendencies.

"Those can include issues of insecurity and a sense of powerlessness and other things that get transposed into a false sense of power — of being able to take your automobile and make other people victims of your own sense of insecurity and powerlessness," she said.

With an increasing awareness of road-rage incidents, it's a good time for drivers to reassess their driving habits.

Police enforcement on the local and state level is a major part of the effort to help stop incidents of road rage.

"Motorists should keep in mind that the police are out there looking for it," Kinsman said.

Landfill hearing put off as closure talks proceed

"We have been exchanging documents and moving toward a middle ground," Ulmer said. "We are reviewing the latest documents sent to us by CHL, and for that reason have postponed the site assignment hearings until Jan. 6. We thought we could settle this sooner, but it's a very complicated settlement with many complex details."

Other members on the committee include selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris, and former zoning board chairman Mark DeGiacomo.

CHL attorney Anton Moehrke also could not discuss details of the settlement, but he confirmed that negotiations are moving closer to a middle ground.

"We have moved from the conceptual to working through the details," Moehrke said. "Obviously, this is a multi-faceted negotiation involving lawyers, officials, and experts. We have been negotiating a multi-faceted settlement of all disputes involving all town agencies and a number of public health and safety issues including wetlands, odors and groundwater. We're trying to work something out that's fair to all involved."

Moehrke could not offer a timeline for completion, but he said the current negotiations are focusing on detailed, lengthy and substantive issues.

"We're trying to find common ground and we can't do it overnight," Moehrke said. "That doesn't mean we're bad people. We are interested in talking to everyone, and we are trying to assure everyone that we will respond to all the concerns being addressed. I've been involved in environmental negotiations for 25 years and have never seen anyone get everything they are looking for. CHL won't have all of its concerns addressed."

The water commission report, performed by Norfolk Environmental, compiles and interprets thousands of pages of material about CHL gathered in the past. Norfolk looked at the material, which included numerous prior environmental reports, to see where information overlapped or where data had not been interpreted completely or correctly. The report finds a strong likelihood that CHL is contaminating the Lily Pond watershed with volatile organic compounds and hazardous substances such as lead. The study also confirms the existence of water-bearing bedrock fractures that could carry contaminants into the watershed and eventually to Lily Pond, the town's drinking water supply.

"We're trying to find common ground and we can't do it overnight. That doesn't mean we're bad people. We are interested in talking to everyone, and we are trying to assure everyone that we will respond to all the concerns being addressed."

— CHL attorney, Anton Moehrke

McNabb said he thinks public officials are afraid to accept the report now because it could alter the negotiations.

"Some public officials don't want to publicize the report," McNabb said. "I think some town officials are interested in an agreement just for the sake of having one. I think they're upset with the implications of the report because it sets the groundwork for a battle. If the town doesn't h[illegible] this information it's easy to take the agreement as negotiated. What's the point of getting this over with if we have to deal with contamination leaking to Lily Pond right now?"

McNabb said he scheduled the meeting to provide the public with information in the environmental study, which is, legally, a public document. The report is available to members of the public at the library or town hall. McNabb said he scheduled the meeting specifically to take place before the site assignment hearings, which, previously, had been scheduled to begin last night. McNabb said he finds it odd that members of the negotiating committee are upset about a meeting regarding a public document.

"Many of the other public officials want to know why we have to have a meeting about the report," McNabb said. "Obviously, when you have a public report you don't always hold a meeting. CHL doesn't like it. Well, so what. I'm puzzled why town officials are so interested in keeping CHL happy and so uninterested in getting information to the public."

McNabb added that one of the intentions of the meeting was to educate public officials about the report, but they don't seem that interested. He said many committee members admitted they hadn't read the report. McNabb found that particularly odd because the reports finding are summarized in the first three pages.

Where to store sailing club floats at issue

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

In the summer, floating docks serve a popular purpose but in the winter, they're not only an eyesore but can damage vegetation.

The Cohasset Sailing Club, a non-profit organization that operates on a shoestring budget, is being asked to move its floats off the grounds of the club so they don't hurt the grass.

But club officials say storing the floats on the paved circular driveway in front of the building, as suggested, is not feasible.

For one thing, space is an issue. The floats cannot be stacked because of their weight and construction. Also, that location would require extra moves by the crane that lifts the floats — adding more to the annual removal cost, which the club cannot afford, said club spokesman Charles Peterson.

Hamilton Tewksbury of the Government Island Study Committee (GISC) would prefer that the floats be stored someplace else. He suggested stacking the 26 floats "two high" so they could fit in a smaller area.

Selectmen, who saw the matter reaching an impasse, directed Town Manager Mark Haddad to work with the club, GISC and park department to find a resolution to the issue.

Selectman Tom Callahan reminded the sailing club about the controversy that ensued when the yacht club stored its floats on the Hagerty Property off Parker Avenue two winters ago.

"The townspeople don't like private floats on public property," he said.

The sailing club, which attracts upwards of 200 youngsters every year, is on town-owned land, selectmen said.

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Metco sponsors 'Black Nativity' trip

The Cohasset Metco Committee is sponsoring a matinee trip to "Black Nativity" Saturday, Dec. 12. This joyful Christmas musical is a gospel rendition of the birth of the Christ Child and a cultural gem not to be missed.

The National Center of Afro-American Artists is presenting its 29th season of Langston Hughes' gospel song play "Black Nativity" at Tremont Temple's Converse Hall, 88 Tremont St., Boston.

Bus transportation will be provided to and from this joyful Christmas musical free of charge. The bus will leave Cohasset Town Hall at 2 p.m. for the 3:30 p.m. matinee performance and return to Cohasset before 7 p.m.

Call Connie Afshar at 383-6006 for more information.

Appalachia Service Project — 'Secret Room'

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project is once again hosting the "Secret Room" as part of the Cohasset Village Fair Saturday, Dec. 5. This is a super opportunity for children to do their holiday family shopping assisted by caring and helpful ASP teenage volunteers. This 'full-service' shopping experience includes helping the child with the appropriate gift selection, payment (gifts are priced at either 50 cents or $1) and gift wrapping.

The "Secret Room" is located inside the first floor of St. Stephen's Church and will be open from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Plan to arrive early for a great selection.

Appalachia Service Project — Santa Visit

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project has once again invited Santa to come visit the children on Cohasset Common during the Village Fair Dec. 5. Santa sitting in his sled will be on the Common from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Photographs of this special time will be available upon request.

Also, don't forget to check out the Second Congregational Church's Bates Hall for beautiful, handmade Appalachian crafts.

Trailer is properly 'stored', ZBA rules

The zoning board of appeals will let the building inspector's decision to allow a recreational trailer to be stored on the owner's property stand.

James Lennon, 20 Tad Lane, argued the 34-foot Airstreamer violated the town's zoning by-law because it was being stored for more than 30 days. He said the trailer, which is visible from his home, didn't qualify under the exemption of the by-law because it was not enclosed within a garage.

But Building Inspector Robert Egan said the zoning by-law in his view protects against trailers or mobile homes being used as living quarters in lieu of a house.

The trailer is owned by the Campadellis who are keeping the trailer on their property at 14 Tad Lane. They said the trailer will be used solely for vacation travel and would only be occupied off site.

The zoning board focused its discussion on the language of the by-law "except when stored."

"This appears to be the zoning provision by which the Campadellis could legally keep the trailer on the premises," clerk Barbara Power wrote in the decision.

"We believe that the weight of the evidence supports a finding that the trailer at 14 Tad Lane is properly 'stored' as intended to be a legal exception under the zoning by-law's prohibition against trailers remaining in Cohasset for more than 30 days," Power wrote.

She explained that the Lennon's claim that a reading of "except when stored..." cannot mean outside storage. She said his contention is inconsistent with the legislative intent of the zoning by-law to "prevent blight."

The zoning board also noted that the trailer was properly licensed and in good condition.

Override election is Dec. 5

The town override election for the North Cohasset sewer project is slated for Dec. 5. The polls will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. at town hall.

The ballot vote will determine how the $2.7 million needed to complete the project will be paid back. If the override passes, the cost will be divided between the users and all taxpayers. If it fails, the users will pay back 100 percent of the cost through betterments.

Wireless Internet service is coming to Cohasset residents will get the benefit of wireless modems.

"It didn't seem like a big deal," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "The town felt the size of the boxes is small and the benefits offered to residents will be so great that it seemed like an easy deal to approve. All Metricom needed from the town was a right-of-way agreement from us to use the light poles."

The modems are roughly the same size and shape as a television remote control. The Ricochet modems attach to the back of the laptop's screen and plug into the computer's serial port. The battery-operated modems offer about three hours of e-mail service or 12 hours of Internet time. Users of Ricochet do not need power plugs for the computer and modem, and have no need for a telephone wire.

"The town felt the size of the boxes is small and the benefits offered to residents will be so great that it seemed like an easy deal to approve. All Metricom needed from the town was a right-of-way agreement from us to use the light poles."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

The Ricochet system works by sending a radio signal from the modem's antenna to the nearest receiver. The receiver takes the signal and bounces it to other receivers until it reaches a central processing point, located in stations set up every 20 miles or so.

Metricom has had great success with Ricochet in San Francisco, Washington, and Los Angeles. The company is negotiating individual deals with communities throughout the United States near large major commercial areas, such as Boston. Cohasset is one of 85 cities and towns Metricom wants to connect to Ricochet, making the service even more attractive. It is possible that systems like Ricochet will allow people to use modems from anywhere in the country in the future.

The cost of the modem and connection to the service is currently around $400, plus $30 a month for e-mail and Internet access. Consumers can also rent the modems for a smaller initial connection fee.

haven't heard from them or the building facilities committee," said Pescatore. "I would hope we'd get some kind of formal answer."

A formal answer from the school committee may not be necessary, because it is the school facilities committee which is handling the matter.

Apparently, that committee hired an engineer over a month ago. That's why facilities committee Chairman Robert Spofford is so dismayed by Pescatore's letter.

"We brought on an engineer in early October," he explained. "Our committee meets the first Wednesday of every month, but we've met on two other occasions about this issue. We are not letting this slip. Our meetings begin at 7 p.m. and are always posted. Anyone can attend and have input on this."

Spofford objects most to Pescatore's depiction of the school area as unsafe during pick-up and drop-off time. "Is it the best situation? No," he said. "Is it unsafe? No. Are we working on it? Yes. Will it be fixed? Yes."

The trouble is that there are several factors involved in creating an environment that all can agree is safe enough for the children.

The crossing guard situation is a serious one, given the speed with which people travel despite the blinking yellow lights announcing the 20 mph school zone.

"People are just flying there," said Pescatore. "The other day I was trying to come out of Deer Hill. I was trying to go right and another car was trying to come in and another car was speeding and flew around the car that had stopped for me. Had I not seen the other car in time, I would have been hit. I think it's an issue and that everyone recognizes it's an issue. It's just a question of what the solution is going to be."

"The one-lane area (of the driveway) is difficult," agreed Safety Officer Richard Yocum. "There are laws in the books about aggressive drivers but I don't know if we've ever given anyone a ticket for this."

Despite the presence of a police crossing guard and Yocum yesterday morning, the safety officer netted two going close to 40 mph in the 20 mph area, one of whom was a mother with an infant.

"She took the proper precautions to strap her baby in properly," said Yocum, "but there she was, speeding in an area where children cross."

Yocum is concerned because Sohier Street is not the only area where speeding is a problem. "I handed out five this morning on 3A and we handed out 80 tickets there last month," he said. "It didn't slow them down. We kept watch on the Beechwood intersection for two months without a single accident, but we've had to go elsewhere and already there have been two accidents reported there. We can't be everywhere at once."

Which is a problem, given that the crossing guard also can't be everywhere at once.

That situation remains where it left off in February, when Police Chief Brian Noonan wrote to then school superintendent Stephen Hart to request that the schools hire a crossing guard for school opening and closing hours. He is still awaiting word. As it is, the assigned officer is sometimes called away on an emergency.

"The old Osgood was visible from the crossing area," said Noonan. "We could just signal to the school secretary and she'd come out and take over. But we can't do that with the way the schools are set out now and sometimes the dispatcher can't take the time out in the middle of an emergency to tell the school that we have an situation on our hands. So far as I know, we're the only town that uses an officer instead of a hired crossing guard"

Relief may be in sight. According to school superintendent Edward Malvey, a request for funds to hire a crossing guard were recently submitted to the town. "We're awaiting word from the town manager on that," he said. "The entire situation is up for review by a Boston engineering firm that the school facilities committee has hired. We're looking for a long-term solution, so it's a process that will need to be reviewed."

"The only way to know what's going on," said Spofford, the building committee chairman, "is to go to the meetings and be involved. We always welcome members of the community to attend."

As permitted under state law, selectmen will again allow openings of package stores on from noon to 9 p.m. on Sundays from Nov. 22 through Dec. 27.

Block scheduling receives favorable rating

But too soon to decide on its relation to upcoming MCAS scores

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The feedback on block scheduling has been positive so far, according to school committee member Kathy Ofsthun and high school Principal Curtis Collins.

Faculty, parents and students recently attended two sessions on block scheduling.

Block scheduling is only one of the changes in the Cohasset school system since the Education Reform Act of 1993 was enacted. Indeed, the first MCAS test results are due in early December. That might raise questions about how well the schools are doing to incorporate the act's new curriculum demands through the longer instruction time of block scheduling and more interactive teaching methods.

"We took a hard look at the current model and examined it thoroughly to see if it's the best model for us," said Ofsthun. "Curt and I planned to come before the school committee, probably in early December, about where we went with our findings.

"Where we ended up is not dramatically changed from what we have. We're going to stick with the 90-minute schedule," she said.

According to Collins, this is only the second year of the model. "It wouldn't make sense to significantly change it until we see what the results are," he said.

That information will be recorded in a school committee newsletter that will soon be arriving at Cohasseters' doors. Inside, readers will find a column explaining block scheduling, why it is going well and what minor changes might be made.

"We took a hard look at the current model," Ofsthun said. "It's referred to as a 'five-by-five,' and we examined it thoroughly to see if it's the best schedule for us."

According to those involved, it is.

"Everyone seemed happy with things as they are," said Collins. "At most, it may need some tweaking."

"We got good feedback from teachers and students," agreed Ofsthun.

In an informal survey, high school students and teachers were asked what they liked most about block scheduling.

"What the students liked most is that they have fewer courses at a time and can focus on the subjects they are carrying. It also seems that the grades are improving; that they really are doing better with four majors rather than six or seven. So the students were overall happy with the schedule."

— Kathy Ofsthun, school committee member

"What the students liked most is that they have fewer courses at a time and can focus on the subjects they are carrying," Ofsthun said. "It also seems that the grades are improving; that they really are doing better with four majors rather than six or seven. So the students were overall happy with the schedule."

Nearly 50 percent of high schools in the United States are using, or considering using, some form of block scheduling.

Unlike the traditional eight-period schedule, block scheduling consists of about four longer daily periods, frequently employing an alternate-day schedule.

Proponents of block scheduling argue that students learning eight different subjects a day may be receiving fragmented instruction in an assembly-line type environment interrupted by brief periods of hallway scrambling to get on to the next class.

The longer class time in block scheduling, they suggest, allows for more interaction between student and instructor, more time to think and a more active type of learning.

Teachers gain more class time, which means that less time is lost with students settling down at the beginning of class or pulling books shut before the end of class.

A 1995 study by Carl Glick of the University of Georgia found that active learning methods generally led to significantly higher achievement as measured by the National Assessment of Educational Progress. Since block scheduling uses longer instruction time, the rise in students' grades as a result of block scheduling is not unexpected.

According to Ofsthun, block scheduling reflects the best of both worlds, with its an interactive model of teaching more often found in elementary schools that allows for labs and technology to be incorporated into class time; while also allowing students more choice in their semester's subjects, as well as less subjects to focus on.

"Science teachers and language teachers love this because they have time to take advantage of other learning tools," said Ofsthun. "There's less of the chalkboard and lecture-type teaching you traditionally find in high school. Hopefully, the benefits will show on the MCAS scores."

Only three weeks from now, more than 200,000 students will receive the scores that Advanced Systems, a testing company, put to their MCAS examinations.

Collins has said that the scores will be released the day after they come out in the beginning of December.

At that time, teachers will need to explain what the scores mean.

Prior to panicking, all involved should keep in mind that MCAS exams will not become a graduation requirement until 2001 and they are not a requirement for college admissions like the SAT. Grade 10 students will also not receive grades or grade credit for their MCAS exam.

Still, the tests will measure the cumulative skills the students have picked up, beginning with questions at Kindergarten level. That means that not only each year's lessons be reflected in the grade, but also this current block scheduling method.

It is expected that successive MCAS scores will improve as the curriculum changes brought about by the Education Reform Act of 1993 become more familiar. The act, which was meant to equalize the school districts' curriculum, is also expected to be reflected in later tests.

Absentee ballots for Special Election

Absentee ballots for the Special Town Election Saturday, Dec. 5, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Friday, Dec. 4. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand-delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand-deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Dec. 5 to be counted.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

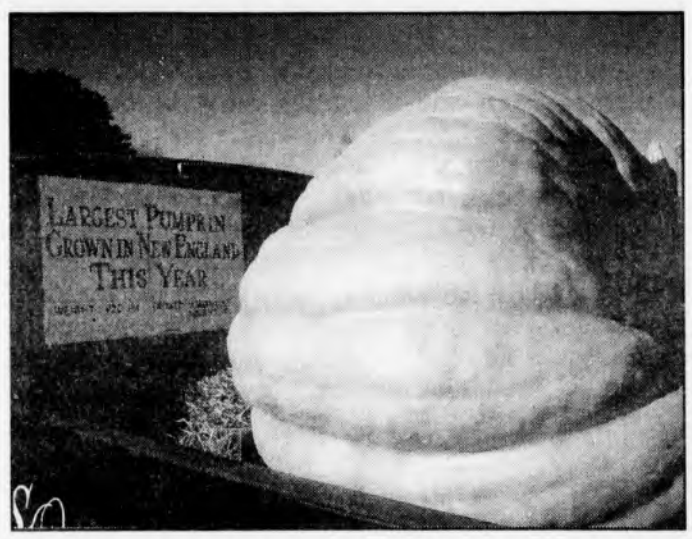
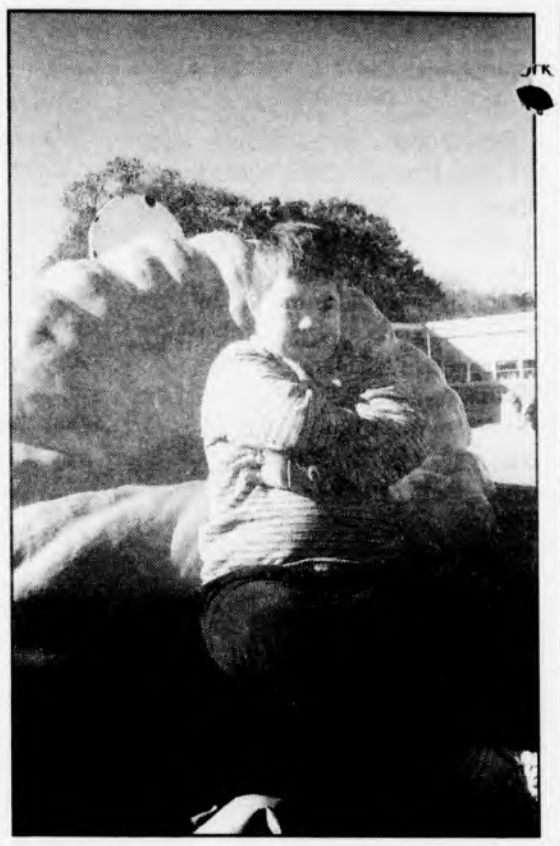
AROUND TOWN

IT'S TIME FOR 'THE NUTCRACKER'

Can you believe that it is time to think about the "Nutcracker" again? It has become a tradition for so many families to attend a performance as a way to begin their holiday season — what fun to watch the toy soldiers, angels, cherubs, dolls, baby mice, reindeer, lambs and party children! The Boston Ballet is presenting 51 performances this year (it is the 33rd annual production) and one of the Cohasset children who will be dancing is Amanda Thompson! Amanda has been a student at the Boston Ballet School for two years and she will be seen in the role of a cherub. What fun it will be to watch for her (there are others who will be in the show from Cohasset, we are here to promise we will let you know their names as soon as we get them). "The Nutcracker" will run from Nov. 27 to Jan. 3 at the Wang Center. Call Telecharge at (800) 447-7400 or in person at the Wang Theatre Box Office.



JINGLE BELL WALK



While on the subject of Holiday Spirit, it is also time to gather for the fifth annual Jingle Bell Walk, sponsored by the South Shore Community Center — it begins at 2 p.m. Nov. 27 at Cohasset Harbor with Santa and his elves arriving by boat — when they dock, they will pass out jingle bells so that all will be in a festive mood as they follow Santa and his elves to the Center for cookies and beverages. From 2:30 to 3 p.m. you can browse in the Senior Room at the center, where there will be art works and crafts for sale; at 3 p.m. your youngster can have his face painted for a hayride on the Common (there will also be bowling in the Community Center alleys); from 3 to 4 p.m., there will be a Turkey Trot (proceeds to benefit the Nursery School), and you can have pictures with Santa in the Senior Room; at 3:45 p.m., you can hear the Harborfest Marching Band playing on the Common and they will end the festivities by lighting the trees on the Common and announce the winners of the Turkey Trot. It is such a good day, don't miss it! By the way, the rain date is Nov. 28, same schedule to be held.

ON THE MEND

Have you seen him? Isn't it great to know that he is "out and about?" We're talking about Bob Leavitt, and it thrills us to know that he is well on the road to recovery! Proof positive that "you can't keep a GOOD man down!"

GIANT PUMPKIN

Deer Hill pupils were treated to a special surprise recently. Thanks to Tom Fallon, the largest pumpkin grown in New England this year made an appearance during recess. The pumpkin weighed 960 pounds!

At right: Nick Sida, a fourth-grader, gets a very close look at this giant pumpkin.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, JOHN

Be sure to give John Litchfield a salute when you see him, he will be celebrating his birthday Thanksgiving Day this year! Kelsie has a "big day" planned for him, and has already purchased his presents! Wait 'til you see 'em, Dad!

GRIDIRON CLUB AUCTION

If you didn't attend, you really missed it! The Gridiron Club auction was a huge success and there were wonderful items up for bid — how about the shirt that Ray Bourke had worn at the game that day; or the autographed Drew Bledsoe football; beautiful hand-crocheted afghans, smocked dress, pies from the Silver Spoon, tickets to Bruins games, hockey sticks signed by the Bruins — that's just to name a few! Be sure to watch for it next year, a great time was had by all!

IN OUR PRAYERS

Take a minute right now to say a prayer for Bob Egan's daughter, Katie, as she undergoes chemotherapy treatments. She is a strong young lady, and we're sure she will be fine, but a little "insurance" through prayer will certainly help! We wish you all the best, Katie, we're all cheering you on. Much love to you!

SOME SAD NEWS

Our sympathies go to Ron Hobson this week — Ron lost both of his parents within weeks of each other, an unimaginable thing to have to cope with. But, being a true showman, his show goes on — we hope that your heart heals quickly, and that all of your wonderful memories of your folks will ease your loss.

ALUMNI FIELD SHINES

Last week Alumni Field was selected as a natural spot to hold high school soccer playoffs, and you would have been so proud of the comments going around about how beautiful it was! Everyone who voted the committee's dream into reality, should give themselves a pat on the back — and Peter Laugelle should get a round of applause for having it in such great shape!

CONGRATS TO MARY JEANETTE

Speaking of congratulations, be sure that you give Mary Jeanette Murray a victory sign when you see her, she really ran a hard-fought election and the people she represents let her know that she is doing a great job! Here's to continued success, Mary Jeanette!

IN OUR THOUGHTS

Our love goes to the Sencabaugh family — to Elsa as she goes to the Cohasset Knoll and to Al as he continues his chemotherapy. Take good care of yourselves!

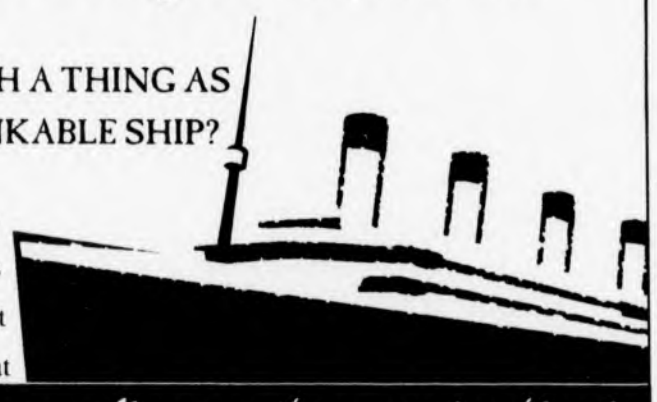
SUBJECT TO A LITTLE NEEDLING



The latest news on acupuncture points out the potential value of this ancient Chinese healing art as a complementary therapy. According to researchers at the University of Maryland's School of Medicine, acupuncture may be helpful as a complementary treatment for arthritis patients whose pain has not responded to other therapies. Acupuncture has also been found helpful for treating complaints ranging from asthma, headaches, and digestive disorders to hypertension, insomnia, and anxiety. This ancient healing art is based on the theory that health can be achieved by bringing balance to the life-giving energy that resides in the body. Thus, it can be a complementary treatment along with chiropractic, another healing art that stresses the inherent healing energy in our bodies.

At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we are trained to improve the health of your spine. With a normally functioning spine, and clear nerve messages, and a healthy lifestyle, your body is better able to heal itself. We will only accept you as a patient if we feel we can help you. Save thousands of dollars a year on medical expenses. Call us and ask us about our "Mothers Morning Out" program. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor where our total approach to wellness helps determine the best treatment for you specific problem. Please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment and start feeling better. Chiropractic works! Let us help you. On November 14th we will be providing services in exchange for food goods to benefit the Scituate Food Pantry. New patients are welcome.

P.S. Chiropractors uphold their responsibility to refer their patients to other health professionals if they believe that doing so is in the patients' best interest.

HAPPENINGS

Tree-lighting to feature Harborfest band

Cohasset's own Harborfest marching band will play for the tree-lighting ceremony on Cohasset Common, Friday, Nov. 27, beginning at 3.45 p.m., and ending with the tree-lighting at 4:10 p.m.

The Harborfest marching band was formed in 1995 by the late Rev. Edward T. Atkinson, minister of Cohasset's First Parish Unitarian Universalist Church as a community band with open membership. Since then they have played annually for the Harborfest Parade. This will be their first appearance apart from Harborfest, and will feature Christmas music.

Steve Biagini, director of instrumental music at Deer Hill School, has guided the band by providing music and expertise. There are 25 members, including some Cohasset residents. Roger Whitley is the drum major and The Rev. Gary Ritts plays Glockenspiel and saxophone.

Any person at least 14 years old, may join the band for this event by calling Steve Biagini at Deer Hill School or Betts Murray at First Parish in Cohasset (383-1100 or Bbetts22@aol.com) right away.

Join Newcomer's Club

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club extends a membership invitation to residents of Cohasset and Scituate. The club is open to all residents, especially those new to the community or those wanting to meet new people and connect to the community. The Newcomers Club mission is multifaceted, inviting members to participate in the social activities, contribute to charitable causes and support community projects.

Club sponsored social events include a Fall Wine and Cheese Party, and Annual Chili Cook-Off, a Holiday Party, and the Lightkeeper's Ball. Special interest groups are available including Galloping Gourmet, Book Group, Men's Poker, Moms and Tots Play Groups, Freewheelers Outings for the family, Sip and Stitch and Ladies Night Out. Other groups are formed as interest groups emerge.

In the past year, the Newcomers Club offered both money and labor to the Purple Dinosaur Playground in Scituate and made a contribution to the new Osgood School Playground equipment. Contributions were also made to the Cranbury Hospice and the Scituate Recreation. Moms and Tots groups plan to entertain senior citizens with Christmas carols.

Membership in the Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club is $25 per year with and additional $5 for those participating in the Moms and Tots program. Membership includes Newcomers Newsletter which alternates with a Reminder Postcard to keep members informed of upcoming and ongoing activities. Applications are available from the membership chairpersons by calling Susan in Cohasset at 383-0688 or Carolyn in Scituate at 545-0221.

Metco holiday wreath sale

The Cohasset Metco Committee is selling balsam holiday wreaths as a fund-raiser again this year. The wreaths are double-faced and are standard, door size (22"). The wreaths will be supplied by growers who furnish fashionable nurseries, yet will cost only $10 each.

The holiday wreaths will be pre-ordered. All order forms and checks should be returned to the secretaries of Osgood and Deer Hill Schools or to Metco coordinator Yvonne Jones at Cohasset High School before Friday, Dec. 4. The wreaths will be available for pick-up at the Cohasset High School gym Saturday, Dec. 5, (the first day of recreation basketball tryouts) from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Decorative, handmade bows will be available for the customers' convenience on that day as well.

Last year's second annual wreath sale made more than $1,600, which funded the Metco scholarship for graduating seniors. The Cohasset Metco Committee and the participating Boston families thank you for your support of the Metco program which provides such positive results for all of us in the community.

Please call Metco PSO representative Connie Afshar at 383-6006 or Jean Hajjar at 383-9917 for more information.

Grading the MCAS

Public schools across the state are gearing up for the MCAS (pronounced em-cass) results due in just a few short weeks. And not since the SAT will an education acronym soon mean so much to so many.

So what is the MCAS (Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System)?

Parents of the 210,000 then fourth-, eighth- and 10th-graders across the state — who took the 15-hour-long state tests in English, mathematics, and science & technology over three weeks last spring — have no doubt heard of MCAS.

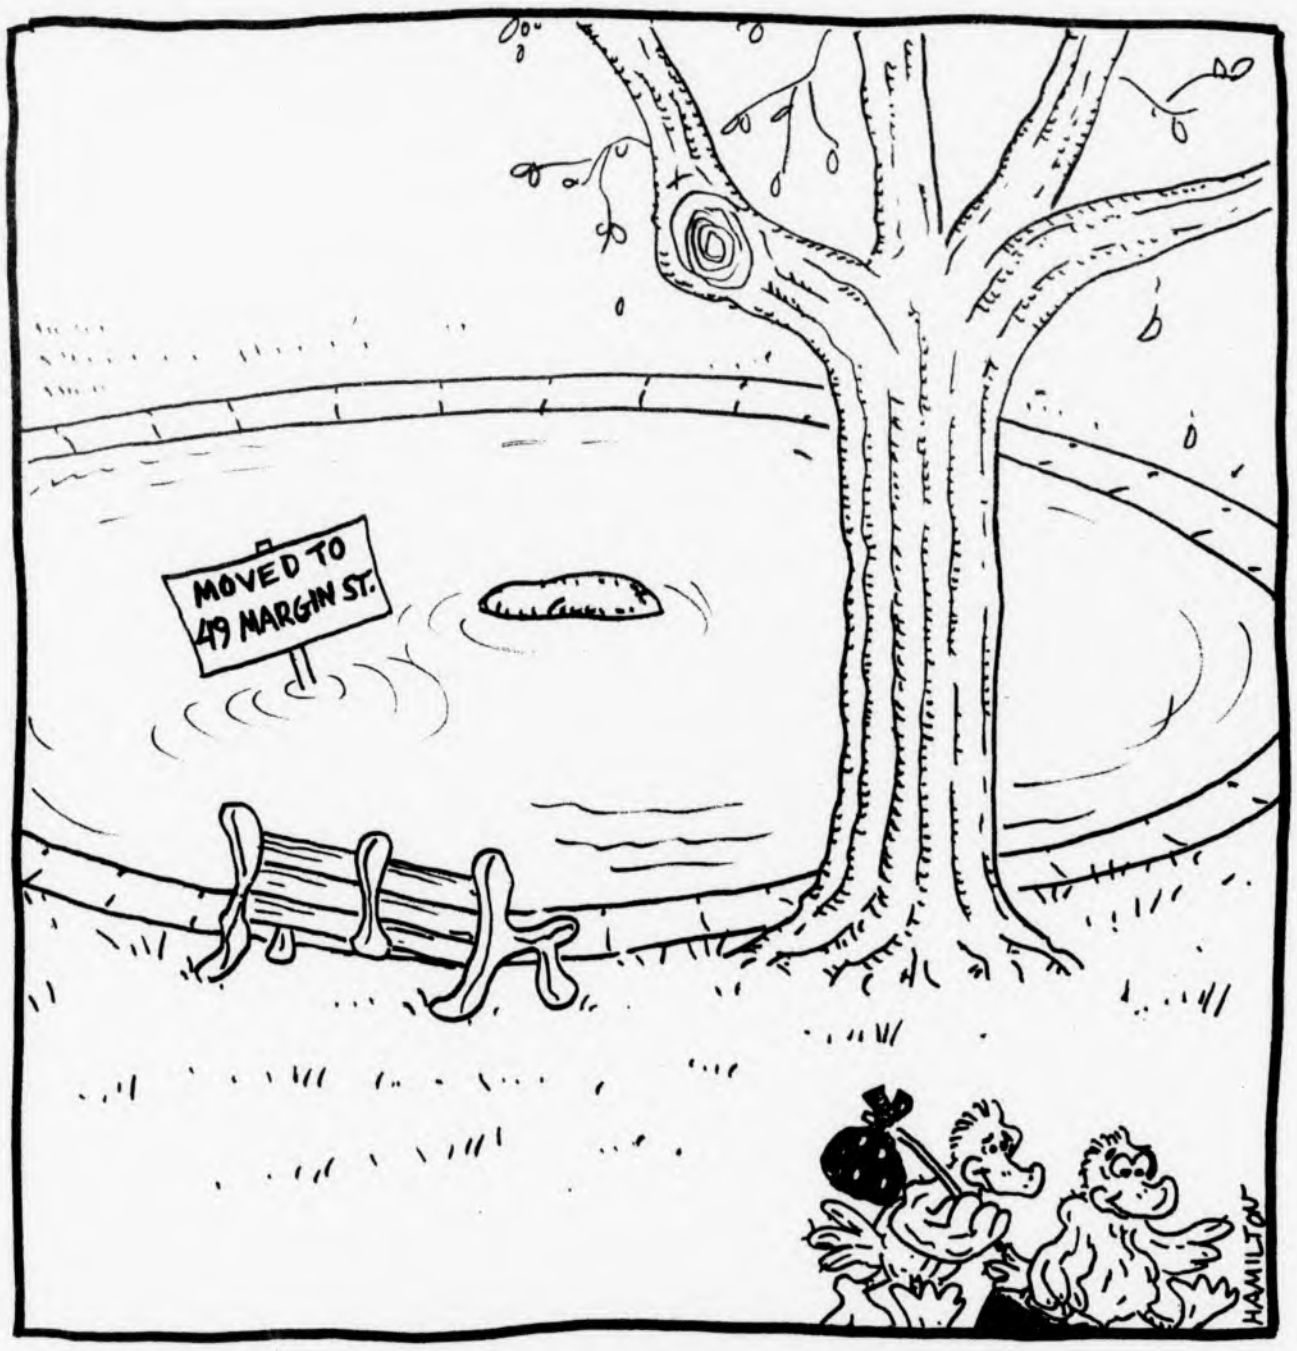
But for many others who don't have children in the schools, MCAS is something they may or may not have read about. That's bound to change even for those with an aversion to charts and figures when the results become available next month and all the number crunching begins.

There just won't be any escaping the onslaught of analysis about what it all means.

MCAS is a cornerstone of the 1993 Education Reform Act enacted to raise public school education standards; a worthwhile goal because few can dispute the fact that education is our state's greatest asset. The purpose of the extensive tests —which include multiple choice, short answer and "open response" questions — is to provide a diagnostic tool, a yardstick so to speak, so school districts can see where they need to improve.

Student reports will include how the pupil performed in a category (failing, needs improvement, proficient, advanced) with further breakdown of strengths and weaknesses shown in sub-scores. For example, an eighth-grader might be proficient in math but the sub-score might reveal a weakness in "ratio, proportion and percent" — information, which could be useful to parents and teachers. On the district level, the sub-score might reveal a failure of part of the math curriculum if a lot of the eighth-graders, for example, did poorly on geometric measurement questions.

The Mass. Department of Education says this year's results will provide a baseline or benchmark to measure improvement in the years ahead. State officials warn that while under education reform, all school districts were given "curriculum frameworks" or specific subject topics to be covered by the appropriate grade level — the curriculum may not yet be perfectly aligned. For example, if a school district did not adjust its 10th-grade curriculum in science that could negatively affect student scores on the science test.



The state expects school districts, which will be held accountable, to analyze the results and do better the next time. Results will be used to qualify schools from exemplary to under performing. And starting in 2001, 10th graders will have to pass all subject areas tested in order to graduate.

The test costs the taxpayers about $30-$40 per student which includes scoring and providing excruciatingly detailed reports for parents and schools.

But as Alan Safran, chief of staff at the Dept. of Education, points out, with an average investment of $6,000-$6,500 per pupil in the state — the money for MCAS is well spent if used to drive education.

"I have a dream that someday superintendents will thank the state for MCAS," he said. "It can be an incredible tool for school improvement."

Marina discussion baffling

To the Editor:

I am truly baffled by the so-called marina expansion "controversy." It seems pretty black and white to me.

Paul Trendowicz has received and continues to receive, consideration for the development of an ill-defined, unsafe, visually obtrusive and environmentally unsound marina.

It's about time the selectmen put the best interest of the community above all else, and not cower to political, financial or other pressures.

We all know what's best for Cohasset and the Harbor. And it does NOT include an expanded marina.

The benefits to the community are nil. To Mr. Trendowicz they are significant. And the impact on the beauty and tranquillity of the harbor — devastating and irreversible.

Let's hope that common sense and long-term vision prevail over greedy self-interest and governmental indecision.

FROM THE STATE HOUSE

Nantasket Beach Seawall design work

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray recently announced that $330,000 in state funds has been approved and released by the Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) to begin engineering work for the rehabilitation of the Nantasket Beach Seawall. The Army Corps of Engineers will undertake the design work, which is expected to begin immediately and be completed within 12 months. The full rehabilitation contract for Nantasket beach improvements is estimated at $4.5 million.

Murray welcomed MDC Commissioner David Balfour to the Hull waterfront where the announcement was made.

"This $330,000 appropriation for survey and design work is the important first step in the rehabilitation of the MDC Nantasket Beach Reservation, which will celebrate its centennial next year," said Murray. "Though compensation state-wide for the infrastructure money has been fierce, we have campaigned hard on behalf of the public gem that is Nantasket Beach. I am grateful for the state's commitment to restoring and revitalizing this unique resource."

Apply for college scholarships

State Sen. Robert Hedlund calls on outstanding high school students to apply to him for a college scholarship.

Hedlund can nominate several students for a state-proposed scholarship, the Teen Anti-Drug Lifetime Leadership (TALL) Award. High school seniors who have demonstrated interest in anti-drug causes are invited to apply.

The Governor's Alliance Against Drugs will award the scholarships to 11 students from across Massachusetts, one student from each district attorney's region. Ten students will receive $1,000, and the most outstanding student will receive a $2,000 award.

All finalists must be nominated by community leaders such as Sen. Hedlund, school officials, D.A.R.E., officers or religious leaders. Hedlund will only be able to nominate students to be finalists; he will not choose the actual winners.

Any high school senior who plans to attend public or private college next fall can apply. Students should write a brief (1 to 2 pages) letter outlining their anti-drug activities and leadership qualities, and mail it to: State Sen. Robert Hedlund, 66 Sea St., Weymouth 02191.

Letters must be received by Dec. 15.

HEALTH NOTES

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

Planning for Growth

In July, a rather remarkable report was issued by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC), one of the myriad state agencies overseeing growth in Massachusetts, (the official agency designated by the state to do regional planning for the 101 cities and towns in the Boston metropolitan area).

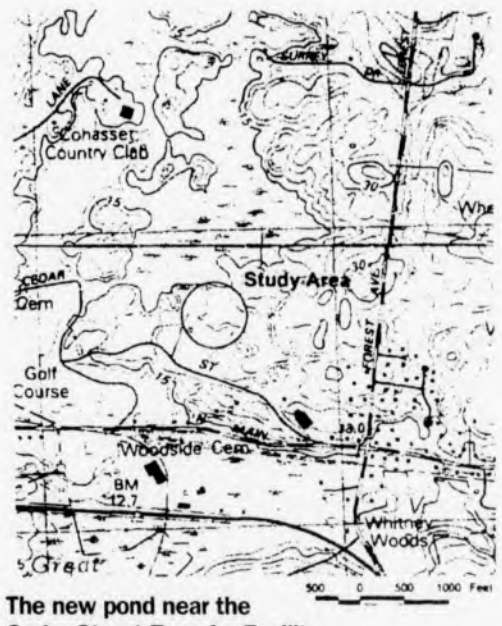
The report called the South Shore Nonpoint Source Management Plan covers 9 coastal towns from Weymouth to Duxbury and 'identifies pollution sources, compiles water quality data, evaluates regulatory measures, and recommends action to reduce pollution and improve water quality.

It is a well substantiated documentation of the current damage to local communities from pollution, and results in 20 years if remedial measures are not taken. It then makes recommendations for change. For example, it predicts that Cohasset will grow in population by 25% by the year 2020, and tells how such growth will severely strain such resources as our water supply and our ability to control pollution. It further indicates that we may not be able to prevent some problems because they will originate in surrounding towns just as other towns have problems originating in Cohasset.

The report covers:

An overview of land use and growth prediction

An analysis of present and future water quality emphasizing drinking water supplies, and coastal shellfish condition as an indicator of overall water quality.



Potential pollution sources which threaten our water supply or our environment.

An assessment of the future fate of our drinking water supply given current predictions of growth for Cohasset and surrounding towns.

An assessment of the effectiveness of our current regulations (zoning, health, waste and stormwater, etc., and makes recommendations for their improvement.

It is a fine report which steps on few toes, but leaves little doubt that without some changes in the way we handle our wastewater, stormwater, solid waste, and threats to our water supply, we will be victims of a gradually degrading environment over the next twenty years.

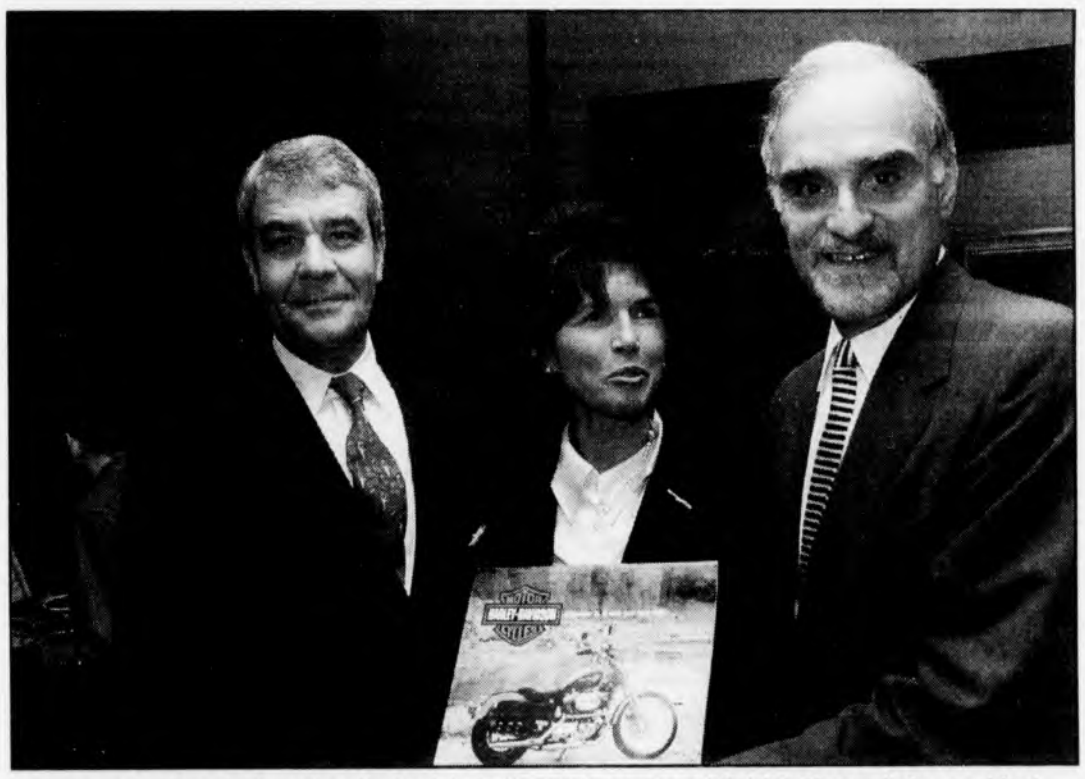
This column will discuss this important report in more detail in succeeding issues.

The new pond near the Cedar Street Transfer Facility

Landfill Leavings

A sidebar to the closing of Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL)which is going ahead, is an assessment of the Cedar Street landfill closing. In the litigation and negotiations around the CHL closing, the issue of fairness came up; CHL claiming that unhealthy conditions at the now closed Cedar Street landfill were being neglected and the town was guilty of a double standard where landfills are concerned. The specific issue was that a portion of the wetlands southeast of the landfill was being damaged by the intrusion of debris from the landfill. A private contractor, Normandeau Associates, was retained to review the effects of landfill activities on the wetlands.

The review concludes that a small pond southeast of the landfill, created by changes in runoff patterns from construction of Cedar Ledge development, was returning to a satisfactory condition. Some damage had been incurred by runoff from the landfill, much of which had been removed during a fortuitous lowering of the water in the pond. Some remaining damage is being naturally contained.



According to the report, available at the Board of Health offices, "it is unlikely that - Rattlesnake run and Straits Pond, the area of critical environmental concern would be affected by the relatively small amount of waste in the wetland.

BUSINESS NOTES

Cohasset resident honored

Francois Nivaud of Cohasset, who left the Boston Harbor Hotel recently after serving the hotel for 10 years as managing director, was saluted by friends and associates Nov. 2 at the Atlantic 101 Restaurant. Among the tokens of appreciation bestowed upon the charming Frenchman for his contributions to the city's tourism industry were a giant American Express Card, a framed photo of the Boston Harbor Hotel (including the French flag, of course), and citations presented by Senate President Thomas Birmingham and Boston City Councilors Charles Yancey and Peggy Davis Mullen.

Greater Boston Convention and Visitors Bureau President and CEO Pat Moscaritolo, a close friend of Nivaud through the years, noted the honoree's fondness for Harley Davidsons and presented Francois with 15 of them — 15 photos of Harleys contained in a calendar.

L-R, Francois Nivaud, Nivaud's wife Annick, both of Cohasset, and Patrick Moscaritolo, president and CEO of the Greater Boston Convention and Visitors' Bureau.

Campbell promoted at Legal Sea Foods

Legal Sea Foods, Inc., a Boston-based restaurant company and seafood processor, announces the promotion of Cohasset resident Joseph Campbell to vice president of operations — Northeast Region.

In his new position, Campbell is responsible for all New England and New York restaurant operations, as well as for expanded operations in the region. For the past two years, Campbell held the position of area director of Legal Sea Foods.

Prior to joining Legal Sea Foods, Campbell was director of operations for the New England Restaurant Company, and before that, for five years he was area supervisor for the Barrett Restaurant Company. Earlier he worked as a multi-unit manager for the New York-based Pearl Street Restaurant Corporation.

A 1980 graduate of Boston University with a bachelor of science degree in business administration, Campbell lives in Cohasset with his wife Janet and their two children, Alyssa and Benjamin.

Trustee named at Boston Medical Center

James Marten, Ph.D. was recently elected to the board of trustees at Boston Medical Center.

Marten is a venture capitalist who began his career in the medical field by founding Biomedical Sciences, Inc., formed to provide same-day service for clinical chemistry. He co-founded Delmed, Inc., a sterile fluids manufacturer and Applied ImmuneSciences, Inc. a biotechnology developing therapeutic devices for treating malignant autoimmune diseases. He serves on the Board of Visualization Technologies Inc., and Microspring Corporation. He is also president of the North American Foundation for University of Leeds, Inc. He also served on the board of trustees for the former University Hospital and is a trustee of the Boston Chamber Music Society. Marten is a resident of Cohasset.

Breslow chairman of anesthesiology department

Cohasset resident Clifford Breslow, MD, has been elected chairman of the department of anesthesiology at South Shore Hospital.

Breslow, who is board-certified in anesthesiology with subspecialty certification in pain management, received his medical degree from New York University, completed his internship and residency at Brookdale Hospital Medical Center in Brooklyn, N.Y., and completed a fellowship in pain management at New Jersey Medical School. He also served as an attending anesthesiologist at Yale-New Haven Hospital. and as an assistant professor of anesthesiology and anesthesia coordinator of the liver transplant service at Yale University School of Medicine.

Breslow has been a member of South Shore Hospital's medical staff since 1993.

Thoughts on Mo's defection

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Well, it's finally over. Mo Vaughn has left Our Olde Towne Team for greener pastures, the green being money, something not much less than $15 million for a year for six months of swinging a bat at a baseball four or five times a day.

And, incidentally, striking out approximately once in every four times at the plate.

Now I know how Bill felt when Paula took the $850,000 golden parachute and she couldn't even hit a split-fingered fast ball. It's relief.

Over the past year, more trees probably sacrificed their lives in the paper mills of Maine so that Dan Shaughnessy, Steve Buckley and their friends could record Mo's downfall than at any other time since Pearl Harbor.

Is it possible to have too much money? I never thought so when I was picking beans on Old Man Arnold's farm for 10 cents an hour between seven o'clock in the morning and noon. Now I'm not so sure.

But there is no truth to the rumor that President Bill postponed his threat to invade Iraq until the Mo thing was cleared up lest the papers didn't have the space to print both of them and you know who'd win in that scenario.

Those of us who have business or financial degrees from Harvard Business School are enjoying the current baseball season immensely.

That season, of course, started in October when the players who had earned free agency lined up on the auction block to rent themselves out for a year or two to a team for which they would do whatever baseball players do in the summer.

Just the other day I noticed that a free agent named Greg Colbrunn signed with the Arizona Diamondbacks for two years for $1.8 million as a backup first baseman.

It wasn't that long ago, before the wild expansion of teams in the big leagues and the discovery of free agency, he'd be first basing in the low minors. Either that or he'd be pumping gas in Yuma.

The bidding for Mo started at $70 million for six years by the Anaheim Angels, which is owned by Disney, which would miss 70 mill about as much as it would miss an extra tourist bus at Disney World.

The Red Sox countered by offering Mo $60 million for five years, which seems to be chump change in the rarefied financial atmosphere where athletes live.

In fact, Mo was making some $6 million a year from the Sox already and once told a radio talk show host that he wasn't looking for more money because he had enough salted away to last him a lifetime.

Is it possible to have too much money? I never thought so when I was picking beans on Old Man Arnold's farm for 10 cents an hour between seven o'clock in the morning and noon. Now I'm not so sure.

Of course, the money and the many wonderful things it can buy may not matter to the youthful millionaires. It may be just their way of keeping score in the race to be the highest paid athlete of them all.

Like some 30 years ago when the Celtics' Bill Russell insisted on a contract for $100,001 because Wilt Chamberlain, his great rival in the pivot, had just signed one for $100,000.

The current target for the break the bank set is Mike Piazza, a catcher (and not a very good one, I'm told), who signed with the New York Mets for seven years for $91 million. Better get cracking, Mo.

Ironically, Mo's rejection of the Red Sox offer came only a few days before the owners of an adult bookstore in Boston's Combat Zone announced plans to open a strip joint right here in the Hub.

Does that mean there is still a chance that Mo, a devotee of breakfast at the Foxy Lady in Providence, will change his mind and stay?

Defining a genuine Royal Barry Wills

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

In his 40-year career, architect and writer Royal Barry Wills created more than 2500 traditional-style homes stamped with his unique philosophy of simplicity and beauty. Many of them are enjoyed today by many Cohasset home-owners who benefit by the blending of old and new features on Deep Run, Fern Way and Jerusalem Road, to name a few.

"Wills' homes are small- or medium-sized cottages that hark back in design to older colonial types that are tastefully done, both inside and out," said Historical Society Curator David Wadsworth about the homes' characteristic style. "If you look along the homes on Deep Run, there are little, compact-looking, very neat little 'New Englandey' houses, which are his. He had a style that was pretty identifiable. Nobody else was designing like that. They were building more standard Colonial revival, whereas Wills' homes had a little flair of their own."

It was just after World War II when Wills purchased Deep Run, according to his son, Richard Wills, who continues the family's work in Boston.

"He'd been driving around all weekend when he saw it," said Wills. "During the war, he didn't have much business. He'd dabbled in a little real estate and subdivision work. He put a bid in on it, got it and thought, 'Now what am I going to do with it?'"

While Wills pondered subdividing the area, he was approached by Tony Laugelle, former caretaker for the Bolles Estate, on which Deep Run now sits. Laugelle pointed out that the grounds still needed looking after. The decades-long friendship that began that day enabled Wills to work easily in the town, since the Cohasset native Laugelle knew the ins and outs of the town and knew who was best to hire.

"Tony worked for my father from that day on," said Wills. "After Dad died, Tony was still very helpful to my mother and later to my brother, Charles. He worked on Windy Hill and a few other places with him. Tony graduated from being a gardener-caretaker to running the projects for the firm when they bid. They struck up a great relationship from the first."

The homes that sprung up around Cohasset enjoyed quick sales. Broker's sheets today list Wills' name as one of the assets of these homes, yet few buyers know what that means.

"He tried to make rooms not too large; human-size so that you felt comfortable if you were alone in the parlor, but that could fit 10 visitors," said Thomas Hamilton of Dean & Hamilton Real Estate.

"His houses are small by today's standards," he continued. "The first thing buyers do today when they buy a Wills home is make his kitchens bigger. But the draw is that they look like the classic New England type of home."

Malcolm Onwood owns two of Wills' books and is a fan of the architect's trademark style.

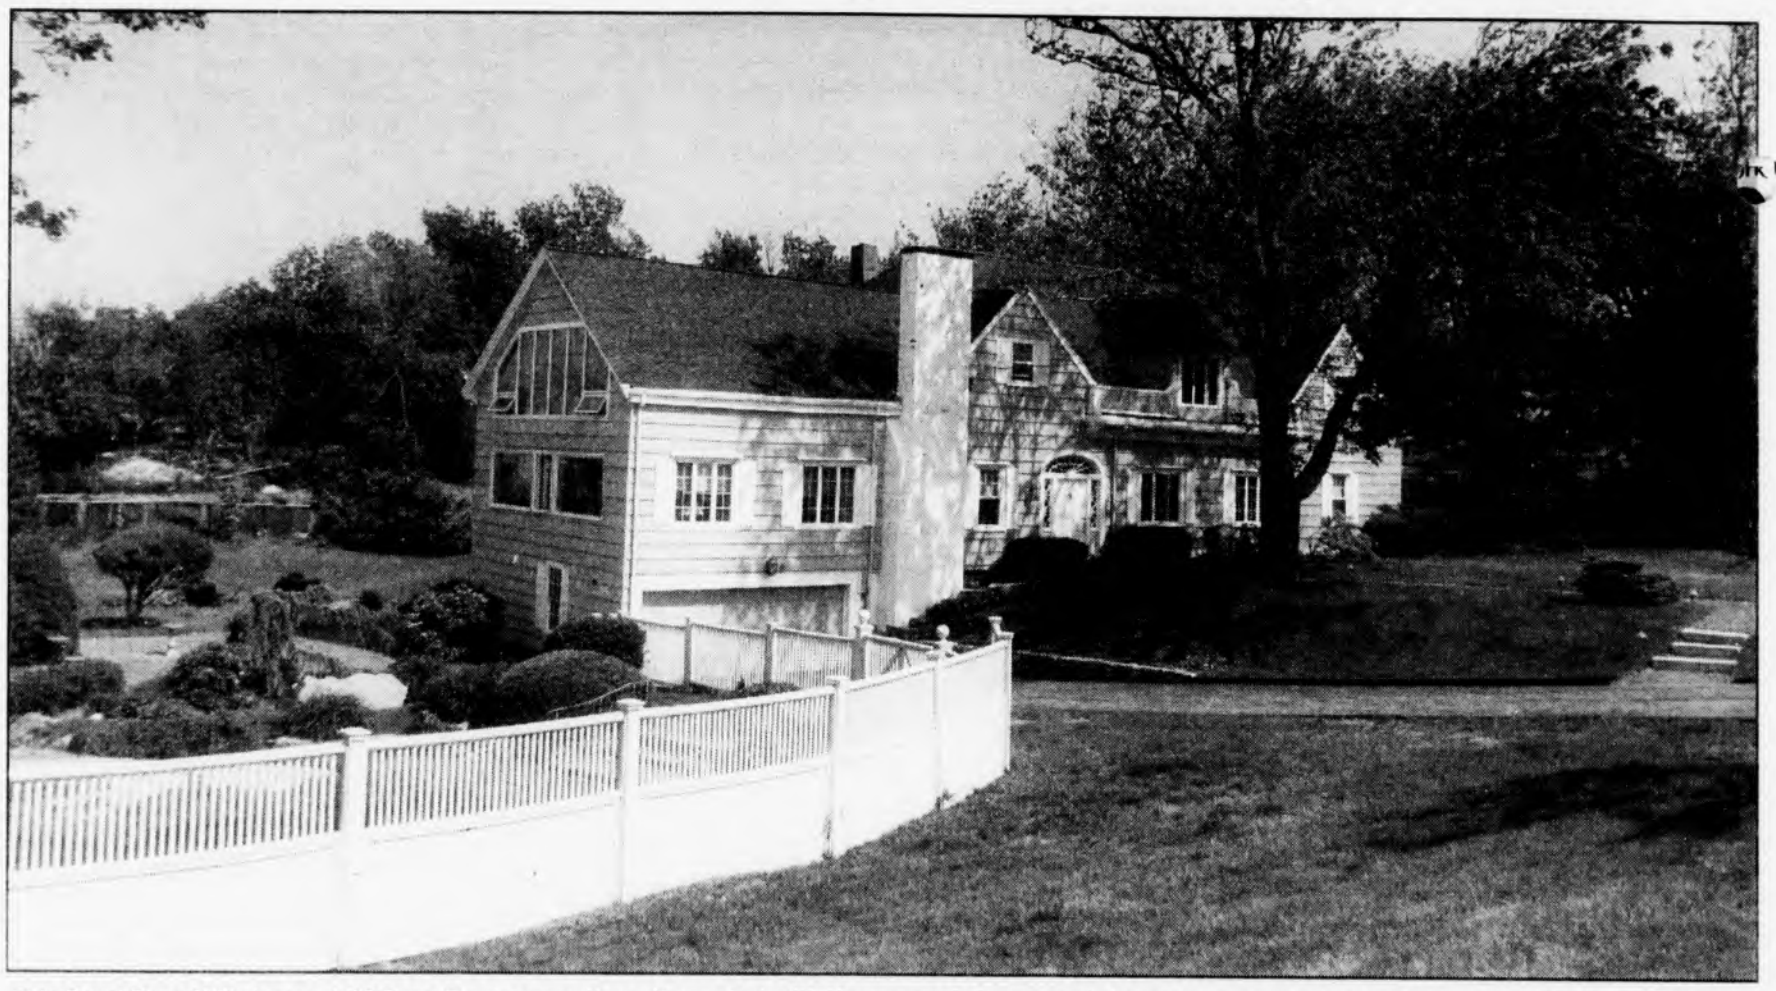
"I think he is well-known for small homes, Cape-type houses, and he was able to put in personal touches, like lamps, doors and materials from old homes. He built himself a house here from materials that were torn down but were still quality."

But there are many, including the real estate agents who list the architect's names on their broker's sheets, who can't readily sum up what constitutes a Royal Barry Wills home.

"Most of the people that really did know what a Wills home is are getting a bit older now," said Wills. "People still know of the firm and know the reputation, but they don't know the full story, the history. I've had people say, 'Who is Mr. Royal and who is Mr. Barry?'" I say, "It was all one and the same, and he was my father."

"He would have liked that," said Wills. "He had a great sense of humor."

Indeed, the architect seriously considered a cartooning career, after taking a correspondence course in the 1920s.



Instead, Wills went on to earn a gold medal from President Herbert Hoover in 1932 for designing the "best small house of the year." Several years later, he designed a home for Life magazine which was exhibited at the Golden Gate Exposition in San Francisco.

The MIT graduate's work was also recognized by the Massachusetts State Association of Architects, who awarded him a certificate of honor in 1949. The award was only given to a select few.

But what defines a Royal Barry Wills home?

"The chimney is wide, the proportion is either a two-story colonial or a story-and-a-half cape," said son

This Royal Barry Wills home at 18 Deep Run is currently on the market with Hunneman & Company Coldwell Banker and features many of the details that made Wills' architecture unique.

"If you look along the homes on Deep Run, there are little, compact-looking, very neat little 'New Englandey' houses, which are his. He had a style that was pretty identifiable. Nobody else was designing like that."

Volunteers to light trees sought

Town Manager Mark Haddad is seeking for volunteers to help light the trees around the common for the Jingle Bell Walk Nov. 27. The community center said it couldn't afford to pay to have the lights installed. Haddad said the DPW is too busy to hang the lights. Call Haddad at 383-4105, if you can help.

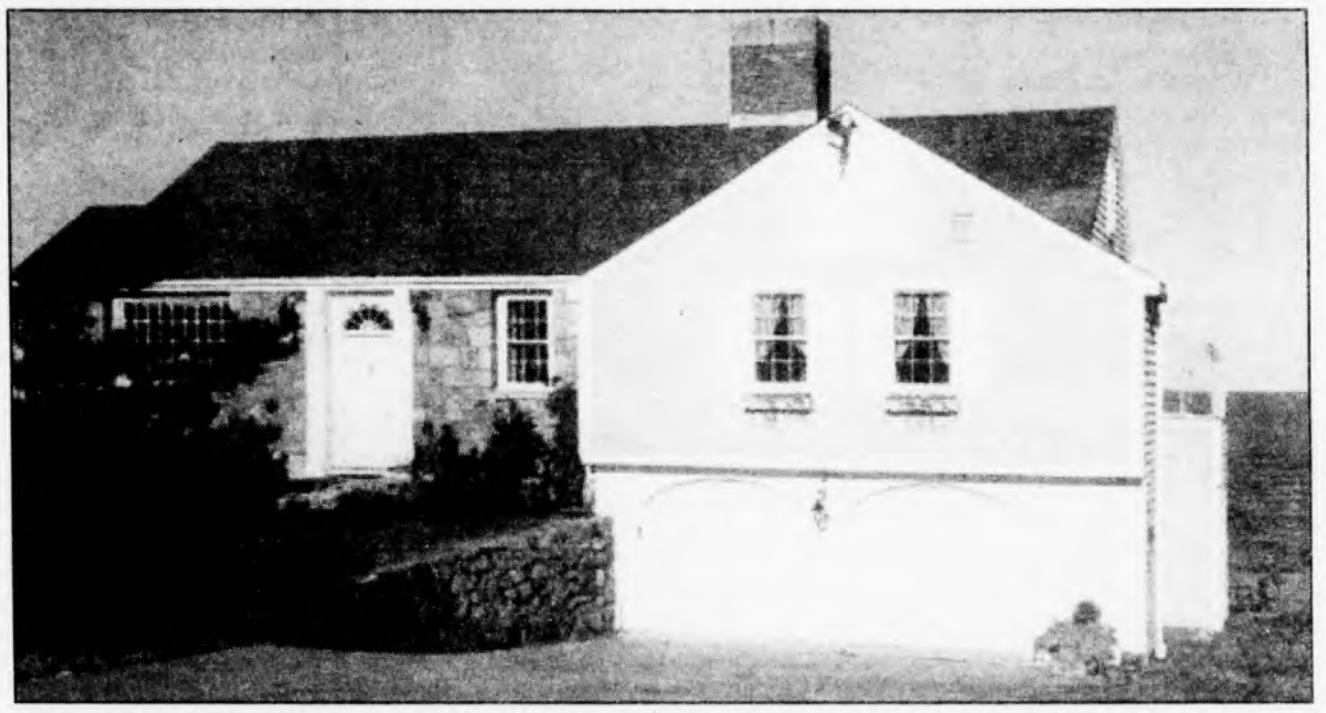
Wills. "They were very much in the scale of the traditional building, very appealing from that point of view."

The Winchester gambrel cape that Royal Barry Wills built for himself contained old colonial doors because it gave off a patina that new wood can't. But when building for his clients, Wills opted for newer materials.



"I think when he did something for himself, he sort of experimented and incorporated something that was interesting. I think he got half of the items out of one of his Deep Run homes from Duane's Wrecking Yard—old doors and that sort of thing. He used old hand-hewn beams when he got a chance. But you can't do that with a client because they don't quite understand and can't visualize the finished product."

Though Wills' popularity and quality workmanship has driven his homes prices up, the architect's son notes that his father always tried to make his homes affordable. That's not surprising, considering that he built his practice during the Depression.

"You had to be pretty careful with the people's dollar during that period," he said. "Of course, things were a lot smaller than they are now and their requests weren't as extensive. The homes were very livable and still are. But nobody today really wants a 12-foot wide living room. In the 30s, that was a standard size room."

Though Wills lived mostly in his Winchester home, he also summered and spent weekends in two different Deep Run homes before finally settling in the barn at the end of Fern Way, which was the last home he lived in.

One friend recalls playing tennis with the architect. "I'd say he was dapper," she said, "but that would take away from how genuine he was.

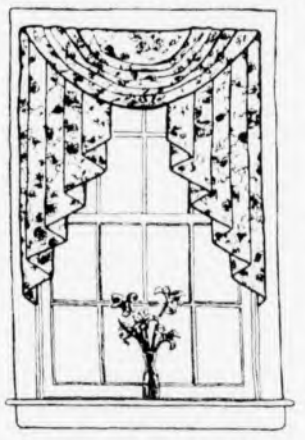
Columns and a window grace the doorway to this Royal Barry Wills home on Deep Run.

He wasn't dapper as much as a very appropriate dresser. What you most sensed about him was that he was genuine."

"My father was very patient and, yes, very genuine," agreed Wills. "He was a modest man, a private person and in some ways, you could say he was shy. He promoted his work, but he wasn't pushy and did not try to expand on his success in a boastful manner. He was quite informal about things in his own way and it wasn't hard working for him at all. Yes, he was very, very genuine."



The proof?

"My father really enjoyed being in Cohasset," said Wills, adding, "He seemed to live very comfortably there with the people he'd built for, so they must have been happy with him."

Join Newcomer's Club

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club extends a membership invitation to residents of Cohasset and Scituate. The club is open to all residents, especially those new to the community or those wanting to meet new people and connect to the community. The Newcomers Club mission is multifaceted, inviting members to participate in the social activities, contribute to charitable causes and support community projects.

Club sponsored social events include a Fall Wine and Cheese Party, and Annual Chili Cook-Off, a Holiday Party, and the Lightkeeper's Ball. Special interest groups are available including Galloping Gourmet, Book Group, Men's Poker, Moms and Tots Play Groups, Freewheelers Outings for the family, Sip and Stitch and Ladies Night Out. Other groups are formed as interest groups emerge.

In the past year, the Newcomers Club offered both money and labor to the Purple Dinosaur Playground in Scituate and made a contribution to the new Osgood School Playground equipment. Contributions were also made to the Cranbury Hospice and the Scituate Recreation. Moms and Tots groups plan to entertain senior citizens with Christmas carols.

Membership in the Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club is $25 per year with and additional $5 for those participating in the Moms and Tots program. Membership includes Newcomers Newsletter which alternates with a Reminder Postcard to keep members informed of upcoming and ongoing activities. Applications are available from the membership chairpersons by calling Susan in Cohasset at 383-0688 or Carolyn in Scituate at 545-0221.

Krista Nicynski and Nell Brewer take a spin on a couple of the exercycles in the fitness center at Cohasset High. Pending approval from the school committee, the center may soon be open for use after school and on the weekend to all residents of the town.

Doors may open to local fitness center

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Most high schools in the area are glad to let youth soccer and football teams use their fields after school and on the weekends.

And on most weeknights in the winter you are bound to find a youth basketball game going on at the local school gymnasium.

So in this time when people more than ever are trying to exercise and stay healthy but avoid paying an arm and a leg to do it, why not open up the weight room at the high school for members of the community to use during the evening hours and on the weekends for a small membership fee?

Why not, indeed.

Recreation director Jack Worley said he plans to bring such a proposal before the school committee when they meet tonight (Thursday).

"I think it's an idea whose time has come," said Worley. "The initial response has been that there has been support for this idea within the community."

The hours of operation of the fitness center as well as the schedule of fees would have to be first approved by the school committee.

According to Worley, there would be a nominal membership fee to use the equipment but the money would be much less than what you would pay to use the same equipment at your local fitness facility. The money raised would go to pay for a trained supervisor who would watch over the weight room during community hours and help people with any questions they might have about the machines.

Some of the money would also be dedicated to routine maintenance and upkeep of the machines

Over the past month the recreation department has sought input from residents about whether they would be inclined to use the weight room if it would be available to the community during selected after-school and weekend hours.

Worley said more than 120 people had responded as of Friday, many of whom were excited about the low-cost alternative to joining a health club.

"I think it will be a good way for someone who wasn't able to join a health club because of the membership costs to start an exercise program," said Worley. "We have a very nice facility there at the high school and it would be a shame to have it just sit there not being used by the community."

When CHS physical education department head Mike Gill was raising money in the community for new equipment over the past two years, he told the donators that they were not only making an investment in the high school students but in the community as well.

With this new idea, said Gill, he's just keeping a promise he made to those kind enough to donate to the project.

"I don't know if a lot of schools are doing something like this, but to me it's a great way to open up the school to the community," he said. "We've definitely received some strong interest in the community about the idea."

Gills estimated that about $30,000 has been raised around the community for the fitness center in the past two years. As well, additions have been made to the physical education budget for the purchase of equipment.

Presently there is about $75,000

Gridders fall just short

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

No growth occurs without some growing pains. The Celtics of the early 1970s felt them before their banner year in '74. The Green Bay Packers experienced them while Brett Favre learned the West Coast offense. And the Patriots suffered through them until. . .well, sometimes you never get rid of growing pains.

The Cohasset Skippers felt them Friday night when they battled Hanover in a 7-6 loss. It was the best defensive game yet for Coach Rolfe's boys and visiting Cohasset showed that it could hang with the South Shore's elite.

However, none of this is consolation for the players. Any sense of satisfaction was overshadowed by the agony of defeat as they walked off the field. But Cohasset's veteran team played well enough to win and, if not for some ill-timed turnovers and a few bounces of the ball this way or that, they might have pulled out a victory.

Nearly all of the visitors' highlights came on defense, as that unit hit its stride Friday night. Adam Sasso played his best game of the year, including a monster hit in punt coverage. Greg Parkinson played a textbook second half from the other linebacker position, as Cohasset held Hanover scoreless after their second possession of the game.

Ben Roine and Raheem Shepard helped the front line defend the home team's double barreled running attack led by Andy Breda and Joe Murphy. Roine and Shepard hustled up from their safety positions to stuff Indian ball carriers and prevent big gains. And from his spot at cornerback, Greg Taylor played his best game of the year, also helping to stuff the run.

Even Hanover's score can't rest solely on the defense's shoulders, as a Skipper fumble gave the Indians good field position at the CHS 34-yard line and it didn't take long for Breda to rush in from the five-yard line.

But the visitors were resilient and came out swinging on their next position. With the offensive line buying him good time, quarterback Jamie DeMichele utilized his speed to roll right and either hand off, pass, or take it himself. In this manner, the Skippers marched 69 yards for six. Justin Golden and Daniel Trowers each carried the ball and DeMichele connected with Golden for a 15-yard pass play. End Sean Parkinson also snagged a pass and he bulled forward for additional yardage.

Golden capped the drive with a two-yard TD run, and Cohasset only trailed by one point. With the decision made to go for two points instead of the extra point, Cohasset failed to punch it in. The decision and subsequent failure would loom large later.

Sophomore Ronan Buick's quarterback sack and a tackle by Shepard stuffed the Hanover drive and gave Cohasset the ball back with very little time remaining in the first half. All they could manage was a nifty, Barry Sanders-esque 25-yard carry by Trowers before time expired in the first half.

Shepard stopped the second half kick-off return, thus setting the tone for a half completely epitomized by defense. Tackles by Sasso, Taylor and senior Alex Russell denied Hanover a first down, and they were forced to kick.

Golden carried for a first and Trowers rushed for 24 yards to give Cohasset field position at the HHS 37. Nice downfield blocking by Luke Caldwell and John Considine almost sprung Trowers after a seven-yard gain, but he was one block short of pay-dirt.

DeMichele took over from there, hanging onto the option for one pay, then firing to end Kevin Andrews for a first and goal at the nine-yard line. But, apart from one last gasp, that would be all she wrote for the Cohasset offense, as a fumble was recovered by Hanover inside their own 10-yard line.

Once again, the CHS defense rose to the occasion, or "stepped up," as many coaches like to put it. Buick came up with another backfield stop and Shepard's hit on third and 13 not only dealt Hanover a fourth and long, but also fired up the Cohasset sideline.

Roine returned the Indian punt for 27 yards to the Hanover 20 and Cohasset made it to the 14, but there the drive stalled as Hanover flashed some defensive skills of its own.

On the ensuing Hanover possession, Buick and Greg Parkinson combined for a stick on the right side and Caldwell's tackle from his defensive end spot forced fourth and six and another Hanover punt. The two teams exchanged failed drives and punts until DeMichele rallied the troops and they put together a no-time-outs, last minute drive.

DeMichele connected with Andrews again, this time at the Indian 43-yard line, and short carries and penalties gave CHS a third and four at the 25 with exactly a minute remaining. The Skipper faithful rose to their feet for the final two downs, but on fourth and four, an incomplete pass fell to the ground and ended Cohasset's hopes for victory.

STAFF PHOTO/BOB BURNS

Daniel Trowers looks for a hole in the Nauset defensive line.

Despite dry, empty clichés like "moral victory" and "learning experience," the players who left their all on Hanover's field Friday will smart from this loss for a while. But that may be just the motivation they need to jump start them for the game which every senior has dreamed about since the first day he put on pads, the annual Thanksgiving Day game against Hull.

Rec offers ski lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct Blue Hill Ski and Snow Board Lesson registrations Thursday, Dec. 3, at the recreation office, Cohasset Town Hall, between the hours of 2:30 and 3:30 p.m. and again in the evening, from 5:30 to 6:30.

Registration forms must be signed by a parent or guardian for participation in this five-week program. Beginner through advanced level instruction is available for children and youth, age 7 and older.

Lessons are scheduled to begin Thursday, Jan. 7, and continue for five consecutive weeks, through Thursday, Feb. 4. The bus will leave each week from town hall parking lot at 3:20 p.m. and return from Blue Hills at about 6:45 p.m.

The fee for the ski lessons and transportation for five weeks is $115 and checks should be made payable to: Town of Cohasset. Those participants who require equipment rentals may rent at Blue Hills and the cost for the five weeks with rental package is $155 per person for skiing and $175 for snow board lesson rental, transportation package, or $115 without snow board rentals.

This is the 22nd year that ski lessons at Blue Hills have been offered through the Cohasset Recreation Department and through the years, hundreds of youngsters have had the opportunity to learn how to ski, or improve their technique.

Giving thanks for sporting treats this holiday season

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE HARDMAN

Before the carved turkey makes a U-turn around the table at Thanksgiving, it's a Hardman family tradition to go around and say what they are thankful for.

For years, my late mother was thankful that I finally got married and out of the house so that her food budget didn't resemble the gross national product of a Third World country.

Most of the time when it came time for me to say what I was thankful for, I used say the drive through at the local burger joint or for the person who invented Buffalo wings.

These days, I'm thankful for my family, my wife, my daughter, my son, my friends and, of course, my job.

If I wasn't 100 percent positive that the boss will read this column, I'd tell you that I would do this job for nothing on most days. But of course, the boss is looking at this, so we'll pass on that comment.

Driving to a tournament game the other day, I got to think what I'm most thankful about when it comes to covering local sports.

Here it goes:

I'm thankful that high school athletes don't have agents. If they did, I know I'd be writing about a $10 million multi-year deal for Hanover's Katie Halloran or Marshfield's Peter Kite after receiving a FAX or call the Moe, Larry and Curley sports agency.

I'm thankful for the warm September Friday night football games under the lights.

I'm not so thankful for the cold November Friday night football games under the lights.

I'm thankful for being able to cover soccer games like Marshfield's 1-0 win over Weymouth in the Division 1 South semifinals the other night at Cohasset High..

I'm thankful for being able to watch shy, quiet freshmen grow into thoughtful seniors, like Oliver Ames running sensation Andy Powell, who is headed to Stanford next year and could be a future Olympian.

I'm thankful for the relatively short high school seasons. Once you get soccer and football-out, basketball and hockey season comes along. Once you get basketball-hockey out, you get baseball and softball season and the cycle continues.

I'm thankful I'm not Pete Carroll or even Mrs. Pete Carroll.

I'm thankful that at least one radio station realizes that people still enjoy listening to high school sports.. Thanks WATD.

As someone who remembers when girls were limited to one sport per season and only got practice time when the boys teams weren't using the gym, I'm thankful for the emerge of girls sports at the high school level. Are the two sports anywhere that has improved as much as girls soccer and girls basketball has in the last 20 years?

I'm thankful I passed on buying Red Sox season tickets.

I'm thankful that high school snack bars went to the outdoor grilles. Is there a better smell at game that hamburgers cooking outside?

I'm thankful that high school, insert sport, coaches don't have press conferences after the game.

I'm thankful for a fall afternoon at Hingham High where you can watch a soccer game, a field hockey match and football practice without binoculars.

I'm thankful to the youth sports parents who give up their own time to coach teams. I'm really thankful for all the people who send us the youth sports report so that we can run them in the paper.

I'm thankful for every so often you get to cover a team like the 21-0 Marshfield High boys soccer team that doesn't come around that often and that people will be talking about for years.

Even though it means getting up before 9 and wearing long johns, I'm thankful for the Thanksgiving Day football games. I've been covering games on Thanksgiving Day for 16 years at various sites and I'm hoping to be doing it for another 16 years.

Hopefully, Thanksgiving Day games won't be sacrificed for another round of playoff games.

I'm thankful for the best days in high school sports, the South girls basketball finals at Massasoit on Saturday and the boys basketball finals at UMass-Boston.

I'm thankful for coaches, like Rockland High boys basketball coach Bob Fisher, have stayed involved in the game over the years. Ditto for Hanover's Jim Sylvia, Abington's Mike Mayhew and Rockland's Ken Owen. Those folks were among the people who were kind to a clueless sports writer some 16 years ago.

I'm thankful for all the husbands, wives, and other family members who take the messages for their coaching relatives to make sure they return our calls.

I'm thankful for all the athletic directors and coaches who are cooperative with us. Those are the ones. I'm hope the boss hasn't read this far, make the job worth doing for free.

In advance, have a happy Thanksgiving and remember to be thankful for something.

And remember to always say thanks to the person who invented Buffalo wings, which make even the Patriots enjoyable to watch on a Sunday afternoon.

PSO/Learning Express Night

Do your holiday shopping at the Learning Express in Hingham Dec. 1 from 6 to 8 p.m. and the show will donate 20 percent of all Cohasset sales to the Cohasset PSO. Please indicate that you are from Cohasset in order for the PSO to qualify for appropriate credit.

So, please, make it a fun night out, get some things on your list accomplished, and raise funds for Cohasset schools.

For any questions, call Andrea Flynn at 383-6754.

Health education council

On Tuesday, Nov. 24, there will be a meeting of all community resident interested in serving on the Community Health Education Advisory. Community participation is an essential component of effective health education programs. The Cohasset Health Education Advisory Council has been active since 1974 and acts in advisory capacity to the schools and as an advocate for comprehensive and sequential health instruction for all students. Meetings are usually held quarterly and/or as needed.

The meeting will begin at 7 p.m. and will be held in room 103 at the high school (enter the main entrance, take a right, second door on the left.)

Funds needed for leadership program

Three students from Cohasset High School have been chosen by the school administration to attend the Presidential Classroom leadership program in Washington, D.C.

Mike Baird, Megan Connolly and Steve Reynolds need to raise $2,700 to fund this very worthwhile educational experience. They will be selling the Entertainment '99 Book as one of their fund raising activities. The gold card and coupons provide the buyer with opportunities to enjoy two-for-one dinners at many outstanding South Shore and Boston restaurants. Kimball's By the Sea, La Dalat, Bert's Cove, The Red Parrot, Oceana at Marriott Longwharf, and Michael's Waterfront are just a few of the excellent choices. There are discounts for fast food restaurants, movie theaters, dry cleaning, sport events, hotels, and airline tickets.

If you would be interested in purchasing an Entertainment '99 Book for $30 or making a donation to the Presidential Classroom, please call Megan Connolly at 383-1248. Thank you for your time and support.

Ripley Media Center upgrades

Recent improvements at the Ripley Media Center at Cohasset Middle High School have upgraded the look of the facility. A new rug, clean painted walls and a new library media specialist have contributed to the changes. Joan Gallagher, a veteran of both public and school libraries, has set her goal for this year. She wants to expand the materials collection and work with staff and students to use both traditional and newer research tools to their fullest.

Parents or other Cohasset residents who would like to volunteer to assist with ongoing, as well as, special projects are invited to call the Ripley at 383-2447 for details.

Students knit gifts for the season of giving

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The fourth- and fifth-graders of the Deer Hill School have taken handily to knitting hats for the homeless residents of Pilgrims Hope Shelter in Kingston for Christmas.

Art instructor and knitting mentor Ann Berman has passed on the altruistic knitting bug to 250 of her students at this point, and nearly half of those are boys.

"It's not so much a gender thing for them, because they're focused on the helping aspect," said Berman. "In other words, it's not a 'girlie' thing."

Berman started teaching her students the basics of knitting last year-enough to get them on the way to producing their first hat and for many, a desire to do more.

"It's amazing," she said. "We started this year's kids on knitting in September when I introduced the children to the homeless shelter. The kids got excited about the idea of helping and keeping people warm.

"It only takes them about five minutes to learn the stitch and the hats are so good that we have them on display here. No two are alike. The kids choose what they want to make and they do it on their own time—while being chauffeured to ballet in Norwell, after school, before school, at recess or lunch time, and I know that some of them are even sneaking some knitting in during class time."

On nice days, some of the boys can be found around a picnic table, working their needles like dedicated artisans.

"They don't even realize how cool they are," said Berman, about the boys' commitment to the shelter.

The first boy brave enough to come forward last year, Peter Bernstein, made seven hats for Rosie's Place, the Boston shelter which the school supplied their knitted goods to last Christmas.

"The boys didn't hesitate this year," she said. "Mostly fifth graders jumped on the bandwagon, which set a good example for the fourth-graders. Almost every fourth-grader is involved in this. Some of the boys are very confident and can produce a hat in three days."

Even the littlest Osgood hands are busy with the winter caps, producing pompoms under the tutelage of their kindergarten teacher, Christine Darmetko.

"These little five-year-olds are so excited about being involved in making the hats because many of them have older siblings that are doing the knitting," said Berman. "My daughter, Alice, is in that class and she acted as my assistant. Most of the kids can't wait to get older so that they can do the actual knitting."

Maura McCue works on a knit cap with classmates Brian Buckley, Davis Brown, Roxanne Tehranian and Robin Earle at the Deer Hill School.

The yarn the children are working with was donated by people who read a newspaper advertisement placed by Berman, explaining the purpose of the project.

One woman had skeins of lavender and white, which will no doubt produce many colorful hats.

Besides knitting, the children were also introduced to Plymouth Area Coalition for the Homeless volunteer coordinator Jennifer Garvey, who discussed homelessness and the Pilgrims Hope Shelter with the inquisitive students.

"Ms. Turtle and Ms. Keating were reading 'The Family Under the Bridge' with their students when they met with Ms. Garvey," said Berman.

The book describes one family's encounter with homelessness, so the children had some background on the subject when the met with Garvey.

"It was wonderful, and they had so many questions about homelessness," said Garvey, about the curious group she met with.

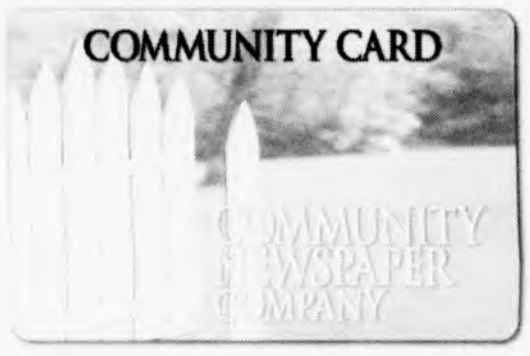
"Some of the questions were unusual, like, 'Who does the family's taxes?' and 'What do they do with their negative money?', but mostly, they were showing a lot of interest in where the children went to school, where the children played, what they wore and ate, and who provided their clothing."

The hat-making students are in a league of their own, according to Garvey, since other schools in the spirit of giving opt for more traditional methods like coat and food drives.

"This is the first group of students I've met with that actually made anything for us," said Garvey. "It's really a wonderful thing."

The shelter's families, who currently benefit from a GED program that allows them to graduate high school, a Family Life Advocates parenting class and affordable housing placement, will be cheered by the stylish hats come Christmas.

Last year's batch went out to Rosie's Place in Boston via a "caravan" of mini-vans, making the trek from Cohasset into the city to delivery their handmade gifts.



"It's going to be a yearly tradition," anticipated Berman. "But this year, we'll be heading south to Kingston instead of into Boston."

Spurred by the students' enthusiasm to contribute to a worthy cause, many adults have joined in, too.

School secretary Joni Meade has spun out a batch of woolen hats—"I don't know where she finds the time!" said Berman—and recess aide Betty Longo has produced eight already. In addition, sixth-grade teacher Larry Shultz and his son, Brian, have also contributed.

"At Deer Hill, we talk a lot about character education, meaning morals and ethics," said Berman. "This combines that lesson in the best way. You can't ask for this; it has to come from them. I don't think these kids realize how wonderful they are. They just want to make a difference."

ART NOTES

On exhibit at Brewed Awakenings

Locale Color presents watercolorist and oil painter J. Marshall Dyke, at Brewed Awakenings, Main Street in Hingham Square. Dyke's interest in art began in the seventh grade when he attended after school classes with Carmen Unger of Quincy. Through a life working in the art field, Dyke worked as an illustrator in the Air Force, and upon returning to civilian life he picked up his art training at the Art Institute of Boston. He is very active in art associations throughout the South Shore Area and the Cape, serving on the Board of Directors at the Cape Cod Art Association. His work has been on display in numerous galleries and, as a result of his effort and talent, garnered many awards.

Dyke is represented locally by Locale Color of Hull, an art business which provides art paintings for corporate or private collectors.

Pastel artist featured at art center

The paintings of pastel artist Anne Heywood are on display at the South Shore Art Center through Dec. 23. Winner of the International Association of Pastel Society's 1997 Convention Image Award, the Pastel Society of America's 1995 Holbein Award, and the 1997 Northern Colorado Art Association's Pastel Society of America Award, Heywood has had her pastels included in one-woman, juried and invitational shows throughout New England and the United States. Heywood's paintings are reflections of her life spent in New England and Italy. She was recently inducted into the National Association of Women Artists, a 100-year-old organization including among its past members American impressionist Mary Cassatt.

A faculty member of the South Shore Art Center, Heywood will be conducting a workshop on Pastel Painting Materials. The workshop, to be given Tuesday evening, Dec. 8, from 7 to 8:30, will introduce pastel artists to new pastels, materials and will conclude with a gallery talk on Heywood's Faculty Feature exhibition. For more information, call (781) 383-ARTS.

Holiday sale at Art Center

The South Shore Art Center's Gift Gallery will hold a holiday sale beginning at the South Shore Community Center Nov. 27 as part of the annual Jingle Bell Walk and continuing at the Art Center through Dec. 7. Items for sale include jewelry, ceramics, wooden crafts and other delightful and unique gifts by local artists. For more information, call (781) 383-ARTS.

Holiday workshops for children and families

The South Shore Art Center is hosting holiday workshops for children and their families. Start a tradition by making ornaments as a family in Family Ornament Workshop with Nancy Connolly Saturday Nov. 21, Dec. 5 and 12 from 1 to 3 p.m. Students in grades 1 and up with an adult will create beautiful clay keepsake ornaments both stamped and free form. A variety of clay, paints and glazes will be explored with a chance to make gift cards for the finished ornaments. Materials and firing fees are included in the price of $60 for members and $70 for nonmembers (for one child plus one adult). Additional children are welcome for a $25 member or $30 nonmember fee.

Children grades pre-K to 3rd can rejoice in the holiday season and create festive decorations, gifts and yummies in Holiday Happenings with Julie Hawkins. There will be plenty of drawing, painting, clay sculpture, edible delights and colorful creations to take home. The PreK-K workshop will meet Monday, Dec. 7 and 14 from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Grades 1 to 3 will meet Thursday, Dec. 10 and 17, from 4 to 5:30 p.m. The cost for the workshop is $35 for members and $45 for nonmembers.

Call the Art Center at (781) 383-ARTS to register or for more information.

The James Library and Center for the Arts, 24 West St. in Norwell is currently exhibiting the works of watercolorist Joanne Donnelly of Cohasset. Donnelly is a graduate of Mass. College of art and has been teaching art since 1956. Call the James Library at 659-7100 for more information.

Affordable fine art for sale

The Hull Artists Studio Connection members will exhibit and sell affordable fine art at their location at 217 Nantasket Ave. called the Studio at the Beach (across from the MJM Bathhouse), Saturday, Nov. 28 and Sunday, Nov. 29, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

There will be exhibits and sales of handmade jewelry, woodcraft and decoys, greeting cards, watercolors, oils, pen/ink, photography, drawings.

This event is part of the Hull Holiday Showcase, which is sponsored by the Hull-Nantasket Chamber of Commerce.

There are three locations (short walking distance), The Studio at the Beach, artists; The Carousel Station, crafters; and The MJM Bathhouse, merchants.

All locations are open to the public and wheelchair accessible.

OBITUARIES

Paul A. Murphy

Paul Albert Murphy, Esq., 74, of Cohasset died suddenly Nov. 14 in his residence.

Mr. Murphy was born in Brighton, graduated from Boston Latin School, Tufts University and Boston University Law School. He was a member of both the Massachusetts and Illinois Bar Associations.

A veteran of World War II, he served in the Navy and retired as a Lieutenant Commander in the area of intelligence.

For 46 years, Mr. Murphy was Chief Trial Counsel for the Kemper Insurance Group nationwide.

He was active in the Boston Latin School Alumni Association and a former trustee of the Wheelwright Farm Association. An avid bridge player, he belonged to numerous organizations throughout the South Shore area.

Prior to living in Illinois, Mr. Murphy was a former 20 year resident of Hingham and most recently a 12-year resident of Cohasset.

He leaves his wife, Irene (Carr); a son, Paul A. Murphy Jr. of Northboro; a daughter, Wendy M. Anderson of Wollaston; granddaughters, Elizabeth and Carolyn Murphy both of Northboro; a brother, Robert J. Murphy of Falmouth; and a sister, Janet E. Murphy of Chatham. He was also brother of the late William J. and Francis X. Murphy.

A Funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment was private at Massachusetts National Cemetery, Bourne.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset managed the arrangements.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to St. Anthony's Parish, 129 South Main St., Cohasset 02025. Proceeds will be directed to the building of the new youth center.

OBITUARIES

Lois O. Blazek

Lois O. Blazek, 79, of Jensen Beach, Fla. died Sunday, Nov. 1, in Martin Memorial Medical Center, Stuart, Fla.

A native of Brooklyn, N.Y., Mrs. Blazek lived in Jensen Beach for 13 years. She moved there from Harpers Ferry, W.Va.

She was a member of All Saints Episcopal Church, Jensen Beach.

Wife of the late John Blazek, she leaves two sons, John William Blazek and his wife Donna of Woodbine, Md. and Thomas Allen Blazek of Stuart; two daughters, Barbara Ann Lombardy and her husband Michael F. of Cohasset and Dorothy Carol Rossetos and her husband Thomas of Sterling, Va.; a sister, Joan Jobson of Stamford, Conn.; and four grandchildren.

A Memorial Service was held at All Saints Episcopal Church in Jensen Beach. The Rev. Thomas F. Ryan officiated.

Arrangements were under the direction of Aycock Funeral Home, Jensen Beach.

Contributions in Mrs. Blazek's memory may be made to the American Heart Association, 1111 S. Federal Highway, Suite 110, Stuart, Fla 34994.

POLICE BRIEFS

Police arrest 12 in October

Police Chief Brian Noonan said Cohasset police made 12 arrests last month including, two for operating under the influence of alcohol; four for shoplifting; four for outstanding warrants; one for domestic assault; and one for motor vehicle violations.

During October, police received a total of 666 calls of service of those, 122 were emergency 9-1-1 calls, Noonan said.

There were two house breaks reported last month, he said.

The department also issued 168 traffic citations for fines totaling $9,350 and 38 parking tickets for a total of $640.

Tobacco compliance checks

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative, a regional health agency which includes Cohasset, conducted a tobacco sting in Cohasset last month in conjunction with the police department.

"I am pleased to report that out of the nine Cohasset stores checked, none sold tobacco to underage youths," he said. Under state law, an individual must be at least 18 years of age to purchase tobacco products.

By the way... As it usually is with legends, these two are a bit cloudy. As for pointing: It was the third game of the 1932 World Series; the Yankees playing at Chicago's Wrigley Field. There was no love lost between the teams - and the Cubs were taunting Ruth as he came to bat in the fifth inning. The Babe took two strikes and then held up two fingers - as if to say: "That's two!" And then he gestured out toward the mound - or maybe the center field bleachers. He hit the next pitch 500 feet into those bleachers - the longest home run ever hit at Wrigley Field. Ruth both denied and affirmed that he had indeed pointed. The acclaimed sportswriter Grantland Rice said that Ruth did point - did, indeed, "call the shot." [Source: New York Yankees home page: http://www.yankees.com/ruth.trib/br.story.p4.html] As for the candy bar: The Curtiss Candy Co. in Chicago claimed that the Baby Ruth bar was named for Ruth Cleveland, the daughter of President Grover Cleveland: she was the first baby ever born in the White House. (Ruth Cleveland tragically died of diphtheria at age 13.) However, many people (including the Babe himself) thought the candy bar was named after George Herman Ruth, the Yankee slugger. Police take aim to track Cohasset guns

New gun law subjects applicants to more scrutiny

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

How many guns are there in Cohasset? Are there 200? Or are there 500? Tracking the number of guns in Cohasset is a nearly impossible task. There is no central system for tracking data on gun owners. Such a system is in the works, but it has not been implemented. Gun owners are allowed to purchase an unlimited number of guns with legal permits. A gun owner with an FID card can own one rifle or 40. Some people collect guns and may have dozens of working guns as part of a collection. Also, gun permits place no limits on how much ammunition a person can own.

And lots of people in Cohasset own guns. Doctors, lawyers, local law enforcement officers, state police, federal judges, businessmen, town officials, residents — these are just some of the people who have handguns, rifles, shotguns, even pepper spray. Detective Rick Grassie is the gun control officer for Cohasset. He said there are around 330 legal licenses to carry that have been issued in Cohasset, allowing people to own a variety of handguns and

Recalling past Thanksgivings

Two Turkey Hill residents share their memories

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

This Thanksgiving New England Friends Home residents Elinor Kennedy and Ruth Nowack have much to be grateful for — a peaceful home, their families and warm childhood memories.

Kennedy, a former longtime Cohasset resident and schoolteacher, is particularly thankful for her new life at New England Friends Home on Turkey Hill.

"I left my home to come here, and I never looked back," she said.

Nowack, who lived on Little Harbor Road overlooking the ocean in Cohasset for many years, eventually moved to Florida, but returned to New England for a number of summers to house-sit for a friend living on Main Street in

Who is the town's top citizen?

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's Citizen of the Year Award. This is the continuation of a tradition begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement.

Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored Anna Abbruzzese, through her many volunteer efforts which she conducts with kindness, caring and love for the town and all its residents.

Once again, here at the Cohasset Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: the Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call home.

Thanksgiving breakfast will be offered

The Sons of the American Legion will host a Thanksgiving Breakfast at the Legion Hall from 7 to 10 a.m. on Thanksgiving. The cost is $4 for all you can eat. Proceeds will benefit the scholarship fund and other programs of the Sons.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Dec. 1

Override election is Dec. 5

The town override election for the North Cohasset sewer project is slated for Dec. 5. The polls will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. at town hall.

The ballot vote will determine how the $2.7 million needed to complete the project will be paid back. If the override passes, the cost will be divided between the users and all taxpayers. If it fails, the users will pay back 100 percent of the cost through betterments.

Liquor stores open Sundays

As permitted under state law, selectmen have allowed openings of package stores on from noon to 9 p.m. on Sundays through Dec. 27.

Nature's fury unleashed

Remembering the great gale of 1898

By Alice C. Coyle
STAFF WRITER

A century ago this week, a 100-year storm packing hurricane force winds, heavy snows and unmerciful seas sped up the Atlantic seaboard wreaking havoc on coastal communities from Virginia to Nova Scotia. The storm was especially devastating in New England. Up and down the Massachusetts coast, waterfront cottages were reduced to rubble or swept away, and beaches were left littered with the debris left from shipwrecks and destroyed homes. On the South Shore, vessels came aground in Quincy, Scituate, Marshfield, Plymouth, Hull and Cohasset keeping the lifesaving service that lined area beaches busy for days and even weeks following the storm. As far inland as Bridgewater, high winds toppled church steeples and uprooted countless trees.

But far greater than the damage done on land, was the devastation at sea. Monstrous waves, blinding snow and rain, and 100 mph winds tossed ships the size of football fields around like toy boats, smashing them on rocky ledges, grounding them on beaches or swallowing them up entirely.

The great gale of 1898 takes its name from the steamship Portland which was sunk at the height of the storm with all 191 souls on board during its 100-mile voyage from Boston to Portland, Me.

By the time the storm's fury had ended, more than 400 vessels were wrecked or sunk and an estimated 600 lives lost, making the Portland Gale the worst maritime disaster ever along the eastern seaboard.

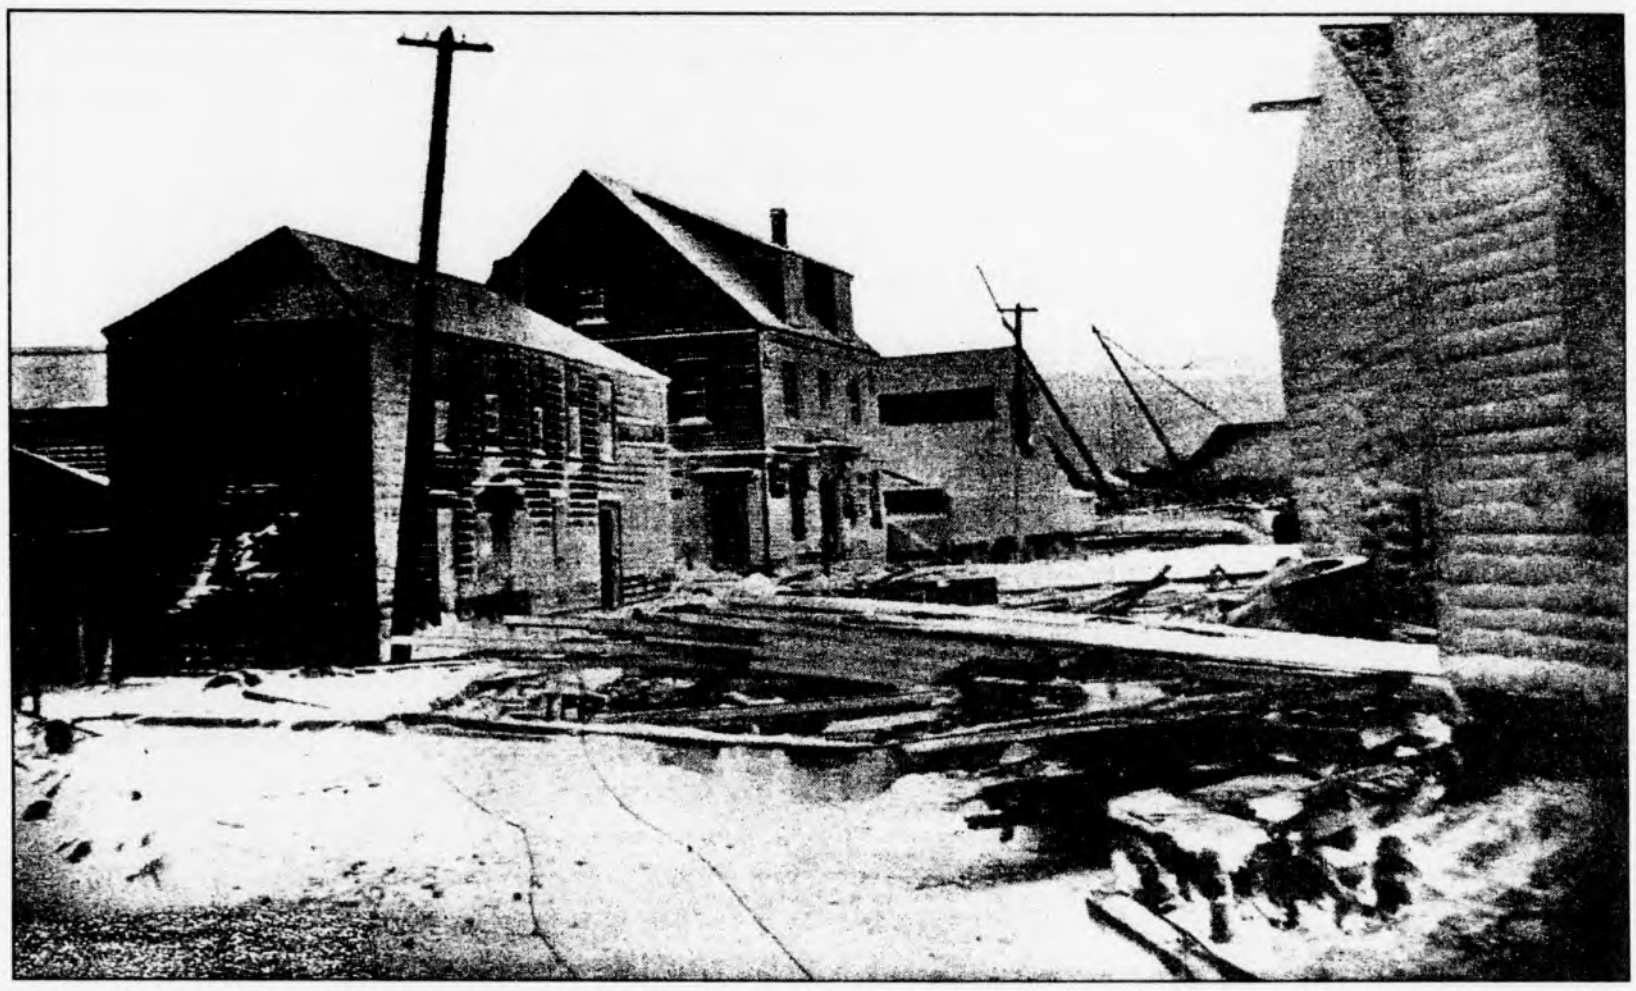

PHOTO COURTESY OF THE COHASSET HISTORICIAL SOCIETY

Border Street in Cohasset after the storm. All of Border Street west of Gulf Bridge was under water and made impassable for horses by being thickly strewn with lumber, fence posts, and other debris, which was in places piled three-feet high.

At sea

With the Thanksgiving holiday over, Captain Hollis Blanchard like most of his passengers aboard the Steamship Portland was eager to be on his way home to Maine on Saturday, Nov. 26, 1898.

But why a seasoned sailor like Blanchard, who was in close touch with Boston weather forecasters predicting rough weather, would venture out of India Wharf into an approaching storm remains as much a mystery today as it was a century ago.

"There are many theories," said Scituate Historical Society President David Ball "I sincerely believe Hollis Blanchard thought he could outrun the storm." Ball, and fellow historical society member Fred Freitas, who co-authored "Warnings Ignored: The Story of the Portland Gale of 1898" suggest in their book that a last minute weather report indicating that winds would continue to blow the storm farther out to sea, may have encouraged Blanchard to make a run for it.

After all, the eight-hour Boston to Portland, ME. run was a trip the paddle wheel steamer had made for more than eight years without any major incident or injuries. Despite having a shallow 10 foot draught that made it more suitable for river or harbor crossings than open ocean voyages, the 290-foot Portland was luxuriously appointed for its time and capable of accommodating up to 800 passengers. On that Saturday after Thanksgiving the ship was about 1/4 full. An exact passenger count cannot be ascertained, said Freitas, because the only passenger list was on board the ship.

At 7 p.m. the Portland cast off its lines and headed north, just as numerous other vessels, including the steamship Kennebec — also built in Maine —were breaking for safe harbors to ride out the approaching Gale.

Bound for Gardiner, ME the Kennebec's Captain decided not to risk the trip and after heading out to sea, turned the ship around and returned to Boston Harbor. Also heeding the weather warnings he Portland's sister ship, The Bay State, remained tied up at the wharf in Maine.

A light swirling snow began to fall about a half-hour into the trip but rapidly picked up speed along with the winds, Ball noted. Still, according to lighthouse keepers and others on vessels that passed the familiar Portland during the early evening hours, said the great steamship was on track and on schedule up until at least 10 p.m. Other accounts of Portland sightings from Gloucester to Cape Cod throughout the night and early morning hours of Nov. 27 could not be confirmed adding to the mystery of the Portland's final fate. Watches found on the bodies of passengers discovered in the days following the gale had stopped at 9:30, leading most historians to conclude that the Portland lost its battle to the waves on Sunday morning, Nov. 27.

Because the first recognizable debris and bodies (in the end only 40 bodies were recovered) from the Portland came ashore along Provincetown beaches — including two stateroom doors on display at Scituate's Maritime and Irish Mossing Museum — many believed the ship succumbed to the sea near Truro on Cape Cod. But more recent evidence uncovered by the Historical Maritime Group of New England shows that the Portland may have foundered far north of Cape Cod in deep water north, northeast of Scituate, said Ball. Work to recover anything remaining of the ship continues, but because it was primarily constructed of wood, there may be little left to claim from the sea.

While the greatest number of lives were lost on the Portland, it was by no means the only vessel to founder in the powerful gale. Several other vessels came aground or were sunk along the South Shore. Ball and Freitas chronicle the wrecks, the stories of bravery and loss in "Warnings Ignored."

In Scituate the pilot boat Columbia was driven up onto the beach at Sand Hills landing on top of Otis Barker's cottage. The entire five-man crew aboard the Columbia was lost. Barker built his own sort of monument to the Columbia's crew by converting the wrecked hull into a tea house and museum for visitors. Barker's entrepreneurial effort remained in place until the late 1920s when the rotting structure was removed by the town, said Ball. A fireplace mantle from the Columbia inscribed with the phrase "Glad to see you. You'll find us rough, but you'll find us ready" now sits on the fireplace in the Maritime and Irish Mossing Museum's shipwreck room.

The coal barges Delaware and the Daniel Tenney had made the trip north from Norfolk, VA. and were being towed into Boston by the tug boat Mars during the storm. But when the tug got up off Minot's Light in North Scituate it was forced to cut its tows loose due to the severity of the storm, Freitas said. The Delaware was sunk off North Scituate at Collamore Ledge claiming the lives of all six on board The wreck of the Daniel Tenney was discovered by the staff of the Fourth Cliff Lifesaving Station and no trace of any of her six crew members was found.

In Marshfield, five of the 14-member crew of the fishing schooner Mertis H. Perry, laden with a catch of 15,000 pounds, perished in the storm — two from exposure and three from drowning,— when their boat came ashore two miles north of the Brant Rock Lifesaving Station.

Another fishing schooner — the Edgar Foster— suffered a similar fate at Brant Rock. Anchored off Portsmouth N.H. on Saturday, the Edgar Foster broke free of her mooring in the gusting northeast winds and was driven southeast across Massachusetts Bay where she struck the shore at Brant Rock broadside on Sunday morning. All hands were saved from the Edgar Foster including Admiral Dewey — the ship's cat.

In Hull, Lifesaving Station Keeper Joshua James, and his staff would make several daring rescues and rescue attempts during the storm — a feat even more remarkable because James was 72 years of age when the Portland Gale blew ashore.

Bound for Boston and carrying lumber from Norfolk, VA., The Henry Tilton anchored 1/4 mile off the coast near James' station was dragged ashore near Toddy Rocks by 4 a.m. on Nov. 27. The force of the gale made it impossible to launch rescue boats. Instead, James crew launched lines across to the vessel in horrendous conditions and transported the Henry Tilton's captain and six man crew to safety via the breeches buoy apparatus.

James' crew joined forces with the Massachusetts Humane Society's volunteer crew to help rescue the five-man crew of Coal Barge #1 from Baltimore, which had gone aground 3/4-mile north of Toddy Rocks. When the crews failed to reach the barge with breeches buoy lines, the surfmen resorted to tying ropes around themselves and wading in the ocean after the barge's crew. Coal Barge #4 was not as fortunate. Only two of the five-man crew aboard the barge survived when it too was wrecked off of Hull.

James and his crew also save five of the eight-man crew aboard the schooner Calvin E. Baker, also carrying coal to Boston from Baltimore.

James' later reported that all lives were lost aboard the Baltimore schooner Abel E. Babcock which was carrying coal to Boston when it broke up on the outer ledges of Toddy Rocks. Debris from the wreck was discovered at daybreak on Nov. 27.

Even after the storm had subsided, James and his staff continued to make daring rescues. James crew lent a hand to the Cohasset Humane Society who had launched a failed attempt to rescue five men stranded at Black Rock at the Hull/Cohasset border on Monday, Nov. 28. Heavy surf still pounded the shore, but James waited for a break and launched his boats bringing all five men ashore to safety.

In Cohasset, the fishing schooner Juniata was the only large vessel to go aground and miraculously all 18 aboard survived the storm when an enormous wave lifted the boat over the rocks that threatened to dash it to pieces, and onto the breakwater on Beach Island.

On Land

On land as at sea, the Portland Gale took a terrible toll on the South Shore. Up and down the shoreline beaches were washed out, or strewn with debris from ship wrecks and cottages and shanties torn apart in the storm. \

Palatial ocean-front hotels in Hull, Scituate and Marshfied, crowded just months before with summertime tourists, sustained heavy structural damage — losing porches, piazzas and decks. Paragon Park's roller coaster ride lay in ruins.

Lengthy sections of track along local rail spurs including the Nantasket and the Greenbush lines operated by the New York, New Haven and Hartford were twisted like cork screws in the gale's fury, cutting transportation along with communication to many areas of the South Shore.

The unprecedented force of the storm and the incredible energy of the surging tide changed forever the local geography. In Scituate, Humarock once connected to Third Cliff by a sprawling barrier beach became an island when the North River broke through creating a new mouth to the Atlantic.

Ironically, for years during the height of the North River Shipbuilding industry, boat builders longed for a wider mouth to launch their boats and even tried in vain to create one, according to Ball and Freitas. The old mouth near Rexhame Beach in Marshfield was particularly narrow making it impossible for large ships to navigate at low tide. What men could not do, nature did with ease.

While it was believed for many years that the force of the waves crashing onto the beach cut the new river mouth, Ball said it was more likely the receding tide on Sunday, Nov. 27 that caused the break.

"When the tide went out, there was so much water forced into the North River and it had to go somewhere," Ball said. "The area of least resistance was the barrier beach, which was blown out by the receding tide." The change forever left the village of Humarock a nearer neighbor to Marshfield than to Scituate.

While the loss of life on land was no where near the number who perished at sea, the grief felt by families of those killed on shore was immense.

With forecasts calling for a serious storm, Surfman Richard Wherity of the Fourth Cliff Lifesaving station made it a priority to warn local hunters in gunning shanties in the marshes along the North River. The Clapp family of Scituate owned one of the shanties on the edge of the South River near Snake Hill in Marshfield.

Another, located just up the river behind Fourth Cliff was owned by the Henderson's of Norwell. Following the Thanskgiving holiday the Clapp brothers, Everett, William and Richard were enjoying a Saturday of hunting. So too, were the Henderson brothers, Fred and Bert, and their companions Albert Tilden, George Ford and George Webster. Despite Wherity's warning to those at the Henderson's shanty, only Webster decided to return with him to the Fourth Cliff Lifesaving station.

As the gale began to intensify, the Clapp brothers decided to make for land on their small boat, but the raging waters imperiled them immediately. As their boat was about to capsize, a large gundalow, used for salt haying floated by, and the Clapp's were able to climb aboard. (It was later learned that the gundalow belonged to the Hendersons and had broken away from their shanty during the storm)

With no way to steer the boat they were helplessly carried toward Marshfield. As they raced down river, the Clapps spotted the Henderson brothers and their companions being swept away but were unable to help them. All four it was later found, perished.

Once on land the Clapp's headed for the Marshfield Hills Railroad Station where they were able to get warm before making the long trek home in the storm. As they headed for Scituate, the Clapps found they were unable to cross Little's Bridge (Route 3A bridge) and were forced to make their way to Norwell to cross at the Union Street Bridge.

On Nov. 29, George Ford's body was found. Albert Tilden's body was discovered on Dec. 1 and the Henderson's were found Dec. 2. A triple funeral was held for the Hendersons and Albert Tilden at the Sparrell-McNamara Funeral Home in Norwell on Saturday, Dec. 3. George Ford was buried in a private ceremony in Marshfield on Nov. 30.

The Wilbur family, staying at their Sand Hills cottage when the storm struck was also touched by tragedy. Fearing their home would be swept out to sea, Joseph Wilbur and his wife Melinda evacuated the cottage in the hopes of reaching nearby Jonathan Hatch's home. Joseph sought the help of a friend to carry his wife but all three were soon overcome by the tidal surge and carried out into Scituate Harbor where Melinda drowned. Their cottage was completely destroyed.

Freitas and Ball said they have invited the descendants of those killed in the storm to this weekend's events commemorating the Portland Gale's 100th anniversary.

A special 100th anniversary edition of Freitas and Ball's book "Warnings Ignored: The Story of the Portland Gale of 1898" is now available for $19.95 through the Scituate Historical Society or at several local book stores including Front Street Book Shop in Scituate Harbor, Humming Rock Gifts in Humarock, Day Lily in Norwell Center and Buttonwood Books in Cohasset.

Remembering the gale

To commemorate the storm that forever changed Scituate and to honor those who lost their lives in the great Portland Gale of 1898, the Scituate Historical Society is planning an entire weekend of events.

Beginning Friday, Nov. 27, the society in conjunction with the Scituate post office will hold a centennial Postal Cancellation from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Scituate Maritime and Irish Mossing Museum on the Driftway. The cancellation will also be offered from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Post offices on First Parish Road and in Humarock. Seventh grade Gates student Jake Donohue's bold design for the rubber stamp cancellation was chosen from a field of 42 works submitted last summer. All of the students' designs will be on display throughout the weekend at the Museum. Scituate postal workers are expecting philatelists throughout New England to turn out for the cancellation. Out of state stamp collectors can send in stamped material to the Scituate post offices for up to 30 days following the Nov. 27 ceremony to get the commemorative centennial cancellation. According to postal clerk Joanne McGinnis this will be the first cancellation undertaken by the Scituate office in her 15 year tenure. Scituate Historical Society Trustee [redacted] Freitas said he's expecting a big crowd at the cancellation. Opening ceremonies with local dignitaries will get underway at 9:30 with a U.S. Coast Guard Color Guard arriving at 10 a.m., he said.

The Museum will feature special Portland Gale displays including an exhibit on the pilot boat Columbia which was grounded on Sand Hills and converted into a tea house and museum until the late 1920s. And on Saturday, the society has planned a special plaque dedication in remembrance Columbia on Rebecca Road beginning at 11 a.m.

Also on display at the museum are a set of state room doors and a life preserver from the ill-fated steamship Portland sunk at the height of the storm with all 191 hands on board. The museum will be open from 1 to 4 p.m. on both Saturday, Nov. 28 and Sunday, Nov. 29.

Humarock, which was forever separated from the rest of Scituate during the gale when the North River formed a new mouth to the Atlantic Ocean will also play host to a series of gale events. A Historical Humarock exhibit will be on display at All Things Considered Antiques throughout the weekend from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Friday night, a bonfire and memorial ceremony will be held at the public beach opening beginning at 6 p.m. and on Saturday Humarock will host a hayride by the sea from 1 to 3 p.m.

The Sea Street bridge will be dedicated to Fourth Cliff Lifesaving Station Keeper Frederick Stanley in a special ceremony in Humarock on Sunday beginning at 2 p.m. Freitas said a U.S. Coast Guard Cutter will sail down for the dedication.

Old Osgood School to be 'mothballed'

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The old Joseph Osgood Elementary is undergoing a "mothballing," so to speak, with back windows boarded and the installation of a new alarm system with indoor and outdoor sensors to be installed.

A department head staff meeting was held Nov. 18 to discuss potential future uses of the Osgood, namely the 1954 and 1929 wings.

"For now, the building is being mothballed," said town manager Mark Haddad. "We are in the process of investigating future uses of the building with library trustees. We're going to go through with the process of relocating the library to the old school, but we still have that back section of the building (the 1929 wing) and we haven't decided what to do with the 7,000 square foot use of space that the trustees don't have any designated use for."

At this point, there are no ideas that seem to be firmly linked with the 1929 wing, which sits at the back of the old school.

"We just met and appointed a little sub-committee of myself and some other department heads," said Haddad, about the group that will decide on the future use of the school, both in terms of its current "mothballing," as well what will be done with the back wing.

According to Paul Pratt Memorial Library trustee chairman Patience Towle, the plan presented at the special town meeting in October remains the same.

Last month's town meeting overwhelmingly supported the library concept in a 351-99 vote and appropriated $152,000 for the design phase. Voters did not support selling the building to a private, for-profit developer who proposed turning the building into condominiums for seniors.

Library trustees believe that an estimated $2.3 million will be needed down the road to convert the school to a handicapped-accessible and roomy library.

The current library at 106 South Main St., according to its trustees, runs the gamut in problems, ranging from violation of the handicap-access law to limited parking to inefficient architectural design. The 75-year-old school was seen as a good choice to remedy those problems, while still offering a setting that many Cohasseters felt as much of a connection to as the South Main Street library.

But Selectman Diane Sullivan strongly objects to the demolition of the 1954 wing of the old Osgood School to make way for parking and handicap access to the proposed new library – which is an integral part of the library trustees' plan.

"I don't support lobbing off the 5,000 square-foot wing; the taxpayers paid for that," Sullivan said at a recent selectmen's meeting.

Towle said the area is needed for better handicap access and parking.

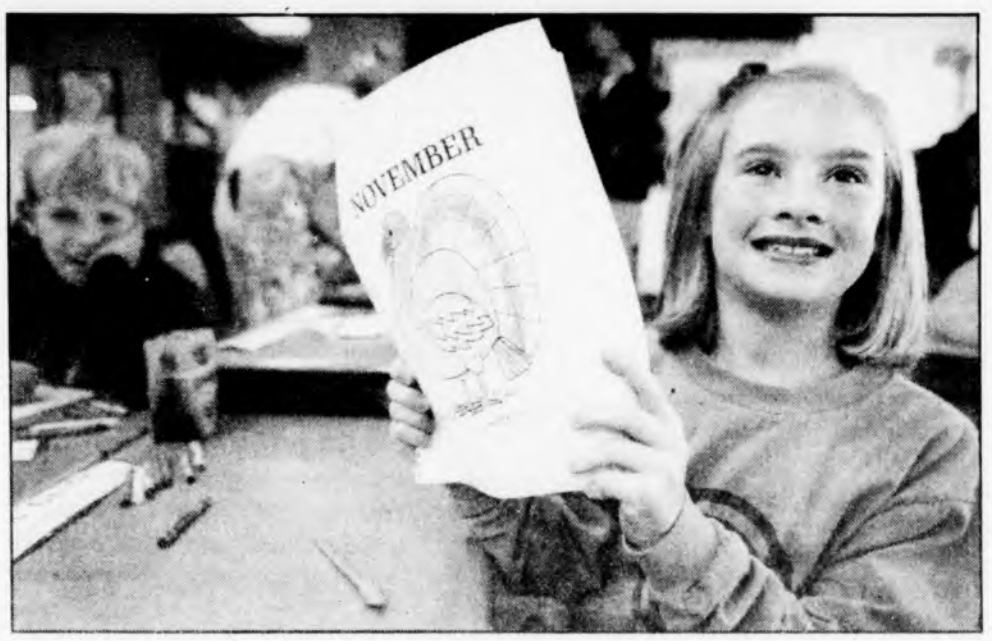
"We plan to take down the 1950s wing and replace it with a front door and parking," said Towle. "Everyone has a right to their opinion, but we're going to go ahead with our plans. This should come as no surprise, since it was our stated intention all along. We thought that it would be better to have 40 to 50 parking spaces, rather than just three or four handicapped parking spaces in front and the rest of the parking in the back of the building."

Towle said that the plans for the library's move are still ongoing.

"We have a lot of homework to do still and we will be busy for some time," she said. "Luckily, our current director Janet Husband, was the director of the Rockland trustees and shepherded them and the town of Rockland through their new library-building process. She has done a great job of keeping us calm through all this."

"We plan to take down the 1950s wing and replace it with a front door and parking. Everyone has a right to their opinion, but we're going to go ahead with our plans."

— Patience Towle, chairman of the library trustees



Haddad said that the mothballing of the old Osgood will require a draining of its boilers to prevent heat expense over the winter. Electricity, however, will stay on in order to keep the alarm system up and running.

The boarded up windows in the rear of the window will be painted so that the plywood matches the brick an won't be such an eyesore, Haddad said.

Towle said the library trustees haven't lost an ounce of enthusiasm for the project.

"We're going to be very busy for some time with this," she said. "We're all still very excited. For the first few minutes of our last meeting, we just sat and smiled at each other. We are all truly thankful."

shotguns. And that doesn't include federal firearm identification (FID) cards, which allow U.S. citizens to purchase rifles and shotguns. FID cards are issued locally but controlled by the federal government.

The second amendment guarantees Americans the right to own guns, with a lot of help from the ongoing efforts of the National Rifle Association (NRA). The only difference is in the gun control laws unique to each state. A few years ago, a small Texas town passed an ordinance requiring all residents to own guns and display them openly at all times. The situation is quite different in Massachusetts, where gun ownership is closely regulated.

The most recent revision of state and federal firearms laws has changed the situation in Massachusetts once again for gun owners. Those changes will affect gun owners in Cohasset. The federal government used to issue FID cards for life. The new federal laws requires gun owners to renew FID cards every four years. A second class of FID card allows residents to carry pepper spray.

Massachusetts residents need a state permit to own a handgun. The new state laws creates a category for high capacity guns, defined as any gun capable of holding 10 or more rounds. Any handgun that normally holds less than 10 rounds but can accommodate a larger clip is a high-capacity gun. Shotguns that can hold five or more rounds are considered high capacity. Residents need a class A license to carry a concealed handgun and a class B for target shooting or sporting activities.

Gun applicants need to pass background checks; they have to submit to fingerprinting; they must have no police record; they must take a gun safety course; applicants must pay higher fees. Anyone who commits an act of domestic violence cannot own guns. Under the new rules, gun permits will look like drivers licenses with photographs, signatures, and the addition of a thumbprint. Despite ever tougher regulations, guns remain popular in Cohasset. Grassie said people own guns in Cohasset for a variety of reasons.

"A lot of people who own guns in town work in law enforcement, from local police to federal officials," Grassie said. "Some people use guns for target shooting, skeet shooting, sporting clay, ranges, paper targets. Then there are some people who use guns for hunting. The state allows hunters to shoot migratory birds at certain times. In the past, the country club has hired private hunters to shoot birds on the property."

"When you apply for a gun, you have to give a reason wanting one. You can't get a gun for protection."

— Det. Rick Grassie

Owning a gun for the protection of life and property is frowned upon by the state, Grassie said. Law enforcement officials believe it is inappropriate for a citizen to shoot a thief for invading a private home.

"When you apply for a gun, you have to give a reason wanting one," Grassie said. "You can't get a gun for protection."

Grassie said getting a permit for pepper spray is relatively easy. Applicants do not need to give a reason for requesting a pepper spray permit. Although Grassie does not know exactly how many people in Cohasset have pepper spray permits, he said he has a filing cabinet drawer filled with legal permits.

"We have women residents who take the train to town, and when they come home at night on the subway they feel safer carrying pepper spray," Grassie said.

Pepper spray is an aerosol can filled with a solution containing cayenne pepper. The solution causes excruciating pain when sprayed into the eyes without any permanent damage. Grassie said the solution quickly evaporates in the open air. Pepper spray replaced mace, which was oil-based and difficult to remove. Also, pepper spray works just as effectively as mace.

Grassie said the laws relating to handgun ownership get more complicated every year, and he is frequently in school learning the new regulations. The intent of the new laws is to prevent the use of guns for crime and violence. Residents applying for new licenses or renewals should expect increasing levels of scrutiny when they apply for a gun permit of any kind.

One of the problems is that there is no effective system for tracking the number of guns a person owns. If someone commits an act of domestic violence, they must surrender all gun permits and weapons. But police have no way of knowing exactly how many guns a person owns. Eventually, gun permits will have a magnetic strip like a credit card so police and store owners can get instant information about the applicant.

Beginning in November, police will be able to call a hot-line and know within 10 seconds whether an applicant has a police record. That same system will be extended to gun shop owners to prevent the illegal purchase of guns.

"In reality, you could get convicted of a felony and go out two hours later and buy a handgun if you haven't surrendered your permit," Grassie said. "The gun owner wouldn't know about your conviction that fast."

The gun control laws will probably continue to change. Residents with questions can call Grassie at the police station. And he'll call back too—when he's not in class learning the new laws.

Absentee ballots for Special Election

Absentee ballots for the Special Town Election Saturday, Dec. 5, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Friday, Dec. 4. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand-delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand-deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Dec. 5 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instruction to voters are printed on the ballot. To vote, completely fill in the OVAL to the right of your choice.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Couple homeless after explosion levels house

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Richard and Anne Crowley found themselves without a home just days before Thanksgiving following a gas explosion yesterday that leveled their 52 Canterbury St. house.

Richard Crowley, barefoot and wearing only shorts and a sweatshirt, looked on in disbelief as firefighters dealt with the smoldering and flattened remains of his home that was decimated when a contractor hit a gas line at 7:13 a.m. yesterday.

Neighbors approached Crowley with comforting words, hugs and one brought sneakers for his bare feet.

Hull firefighters were first on the scene, according to Hull Fire Chief Nick Russo. The first engine found the building fully involved and partially collapsed as a result of the explosion.

"The outcome was successful in terms of injuries," said Russo. "The residents were obviously very fortunate. If another minute or so had gone by, it's quite possible there could have been multiple fatalities. In terms of the (upcoming) holidays, it's a sad event, but homes can be rebuilt."

Several neighbors gathered at Gail Hall's home, located diagonally across from the fire scene, and eventually convinced the Crowleys to warm up inside.

"We heard explosions all summer long because of blasting for the sewer," said Hall. "At first, I thought that's what it was. Then I looked out my window and saw their chimney go."

Insa Rooney, 46 Canterbury St., also heard the explosion. "I saw the entire front of the house fall forward," she said.

"They are such a wonderful couple," she added, teary-eyed. "They put so much time and effort into their home and then to have this happen. It's not the house, but the mementos—it's their lives."

The street's modest homes and sloping front lawns were transformed into a war zone, fire engines and utility vehicles and investigators covering the area. A window screen hung from a tree, bits of glass rested on lawns and driveways from windows shattered by the blast.

A window frame, bent slightly at its corners, rested on the front lawn of Mary Lou Hanlon's home directly across from the Crowleys'

"My tape tower fell and I could hear my windows breaking," said Hanlon. "Before that, I had heard the contractor yell, 'Get out! Gas leak!' and luckily they were able to grab their cat and dog and make it to safety."

"They did an awful lot of work on the home," she said. "They had been waiting for a home on this street to come up and really, they redid the whole house. What a shame."

The reverberation of the blast was so strong that it traveled along Canterbury Street to Joe Phillips' Weir Street home. "My whole ceiling is cracked," he said.

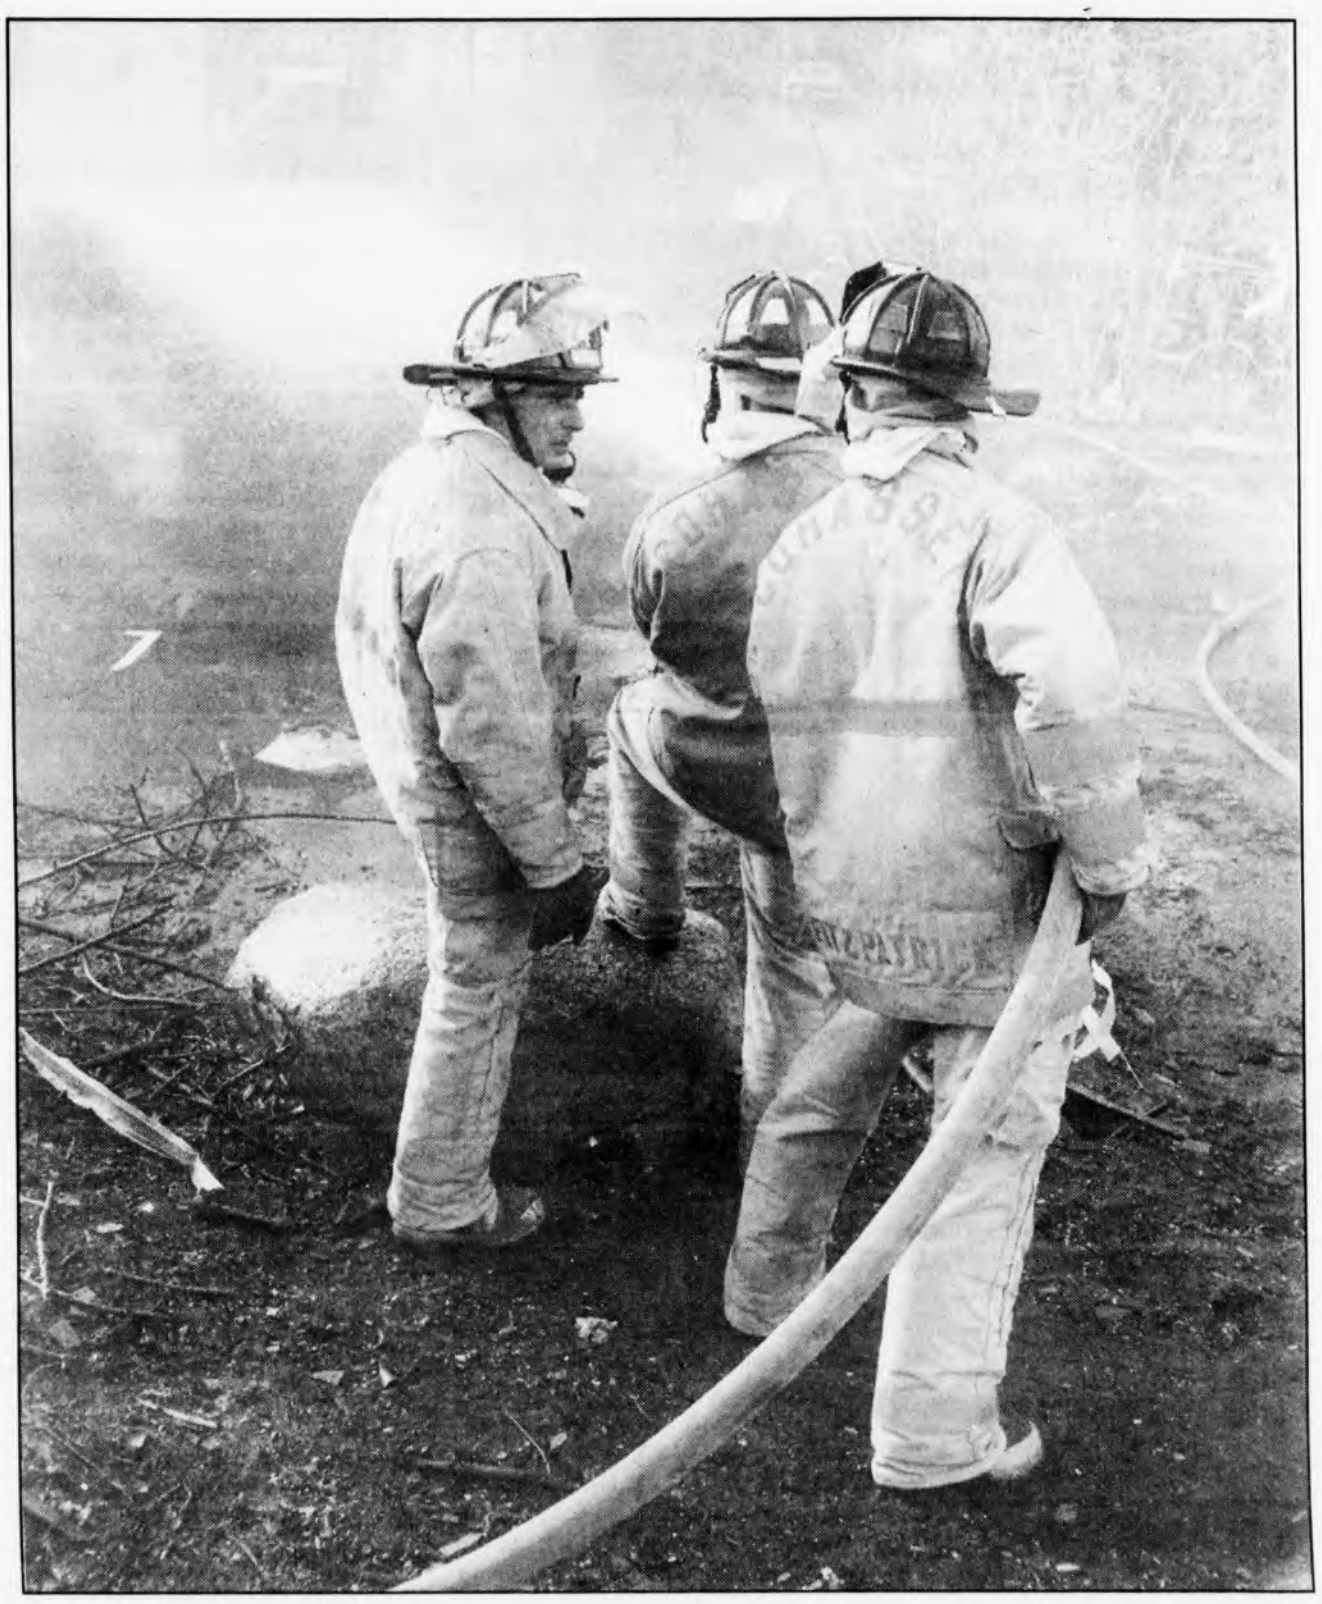
Fire fighters from Hingham, Hull and Cohasset were on the scene, as were investigators from the State Fire Marshall's office, OSHA (Occupational Safety and Health Administration) and the Department of Telecommunications and Energy.

Michael Connors, Boston Gas director of public information, explained that the contractor was apparently digging and pulled the line that goes into the house. "You can see the result," he said, gesturing toward the still-smoldering pile.

Connors was not able to discuss if the area was marked for gas because the investigation is ongoing. However, he went on to say that the gas company did a "mark-out," and were asked to come back to do a re-mark by Dig Safe.

"What apparently happened is there was a call for a re-mark," he said. "We have 72 hours to turn up and that time had not elapsed yet. We were scheduled to turn up today but the contractor started digging this morning. He got out ahead of Dig Safe Schedule. That's what it looks like to us. It is under investigation."

It did not appear that there were visible markings along the site, or on its drive, which is where gas company workers were seen looking for a line. They eventually spotted it and dug a marker in.



That is also the spot where a busload of children stop for their 8 a.m. pick-up each day.

All that remained of the home was its newly built side deck and a hammock in the yard, both visible from behind the orange-yellow excavator that hit the gas line.

"It's fortunate everyone, including the family pets, was out of the house," said Hingham Fire Chief William Johnson. "But it's tragic to lose everything. To have all your memories gone. It's very traumatic to lose a lifetime of keepsakes."

The Crowleys were unable to be interviewed and it is not known what their next move will be.

AROUND TOWN

THREE ANNIVERSARIES

There are three anniversaries that are going to be celebrated this week, these three couples will not only be celebrating Thanksgiving, but weddings too! The first couple (drum role please) — Barbara and Herman Maynard, who will be happily wed for 50 years Nov. 21. They are planning to surround themselves with their children and grandchildren for a happy time, one we will hopefully hear about.

The second spectacular couple, also celebrating a half century together, are Cliff and Peg Dickson! Their big day is the day after Thanksgiving, Nov. 27. They too, will be surrounded by loved ones (they have so much love to give) — we want to hear all about that big day, too!

The third couple is none other than Clark and myself! Our 35th anniversary date is Nov. 28 and you can bet that we will celebrate with our family as we count every blessing and share our love with all!

PROUD GRANDFATHER

Bob Davenport of Black Horse Lane is a proud grandfather again this year! His son, Bill, and wife Shelagh, now of Sudbury, just had a baby girl! Her name is Julia Rae Davenport and she joins their 2-year-old son, William Smith Davenport. And, Bob's daughter, Heather, and husband Kevin (now of Scituate) just had their first bundle of joy; a boy, Thomas Davenport Jarnot. They will surely have a full house over the holidays this year, congratulations!

'MUSIC MAN' ON STAGE

On behalf of the Cohasset Middle-High School, here is an announcement for you to place in a prime spot on your calendar — there will be a production of the musical "Music Man" at CHS Friday at 7:30 p.m. (that's Dec. 4), Saturday, Dec. 5, at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday, Dec. 6, at 2:30 p.m. Tickets are on sale at CHS, Osgood and Deer Hill Schools, or call 383-1329. As the Stars say, "It is always a great feeling to perform to a 'full house'!"

HOLIDAY CONCERT

On the subject of productions again, here is another that you must remember to attend! The Broad Cove Chorale is presenting its 24th annual holiday concert Dec. 5 (8 p.m.) and Dec. 6 (7:30 p.m.) at Broad Cove House, 66 Lincoln St., Hingham. A third performance has also been added Wednesday, Dec. 9, 10:30 a.m. at the First Parish Church in Norwell Center. Why am I telling you about performances that are not being held in our town? Well, the Broad Cove Chorale is a small, selective group of women's voices from South Shore communities, and there are 10 members who live in Cohasset! They are, Barbara Baumgarten, Susan Cameron, Paula Cuneo, Jane Forrer, Patricia Morse, Betts Murray, Anny Newman, Lisa Pratt, Sarah Roche and Diana Rosseau. Tickets for the evening are $12, including reception, and are available in Hingham Square at Nobles or by calling 749-6561. What a great way to get your holiday season underway!

TV STAR!

Did you see it? Wasn't she great? What and whom am I talking about? None other than Cohasset's own Alyssa Mullin, who is 7-years-old, and a star! Alyssa appeared on Bill Cosby's show "Kids Say the Darndest Things" Oct. 30. Alyssa auditioned last spring, along with 4,500 other children from the Boston area. She was one of 50 chosen to appear on the show. Filming took place in September at Barrett's Restaurant in Charlestown. She met and even had lunch with Mr. Cosby! Alyssa is a second grader at Osgood School, where everyone there is ever-so proud of her! We are too, Alyssa!

STUDIED IN LONDON

Jemilah Afshar of Cohasset studied in London during the fall semester as part of the Boston University Study Abroad Program. The London Internship Program combines an internship with coursework which examines a particular academic area in the context of Great Britain's history, culture and society. Students take courses in one of nine academic areas, ranging from the arts, psychology and social policy to management, finance and advertising. Jemilah is a senior majoring in communications and public relations at Boston University's College of Communication. A 1995 graduate of CHS, she is the daughter of Nader and Constance Afshar of South Main Street.

JINGLE BELL WALK

A reminder — don't forget the Jolly Ol' St. Nick, due to arrive by boat this week — the jingle bell festivities to be held afterwards will be tons of fun for all.

Hope that you all have a wonderful Thanksgiving, full of love and a great turkey feast! Also hope, that you will remember to call me with any special event that may take place over this family filled weekend, "your news is our news!"

IT'S HAPPENING

Metco holiday wreath sale

The Cohasset Metco Committee is selling balsam holiday wreaths as a fund-raiser again this year. The wreaths are double-faced and are standard, door size (22"). The wreaths will be supplied by growers who furnish fashionable nurseries, yet will cost only $10 each.

The holiday wreaths will be pre-ordered. All order forms and checks should be returned to the secretaries of Osgood and Deer Hill Schools or to Metco coordinator Yvonne Jones at Cohasset High School before Friday, Dec. 4. The wreaths will be available for pick-up at the Cohasset High School gym Saturday, Dec. 5, (the first day of recreation basketball tryouts) from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Decorative, handmade bows will be available for the customers' convenience on that day as well.

Last year's second annual wreath sale made more than $1,600, which funded the Metco scholarship for graduating seniors. The Cohasset Metco Committee and the participating Boston families thank you for your support of the Metco program which provides such positive results for all of us in the community.

Please call Metco PSO representative Connie Afshar at 383-6006 or Jean Hajjar at 383-9917 for more information.

Jingle Bell Walk is Nov. 27

The Fifth Jingle Bell Walk will take place on Friday, Nov. 27 (rain date Nov. 28). Join the festivities beginning at 2 p.m. as Mr. and Mrs. Claus arrive at Cohasset Harbor by lobster boat and join in the parade to the Community Center for songs, cookies and punch. The Bells of St. Stephen's Carillon will ring and the bell tower will be open to the public. Later, there will be a gathering on the common for lighting the Luminaria and tree, music and hayrides.

Metco sponsors 'Black Nativity' trip

The Cohasset Metco Committee is sponsoring a matinee trip to "Black Nativity" Saturday, Dec. 12. This joyful Christmas musical is a gospel rendition of the birth of the Christ Child and a cultural gem not to be missed.

The National Center of Afro-American Artists is presenting its 29th season of Langston Hughes' gospel song play "Black Nativity" at Tremont Temple's Converse Hall, 88 Tremont St., Boston.

Bus transportation will be provided to and from this joyful Christmas musical free of charge. The bus will leave Cohasset Town Hall at 2 p.m. for the 3:30 p.m. matinee performance and return to Cohasset before 7 p.m. Tickets are $28.

Call Connie Afshar at 383-6006 for more information.

MAKING SMOKING HISTORY

Amanda Cowins of Cohasset pushes the right button during the fourth annual Smokefree All-Nighter on Friday at Healthrax in Hanover. Two hundred youths from the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative towns, which include Cohasset, took part in the event.

Appalachia Service Project — 'Secret Room'

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project is once again hosting the "Secret Room" as part of the Cohasset Village Fair Saturday, Dec. 5. This is a super opportunity for children to do their holiday family shopping assisted by caring and helpful ASP teenage volunteers. This 'full-service' shopping experience includes helping the child with the appropriate gift selection, payment (gifts are priced at either 50 cents or $1) and gift wrapping.

The "Secret Room" is located inside the first floor of St. Stephen's Church and will be open from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Plan to arrive early for a great selection.

Appalachia Service Project — Santa Visit

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project has once again invited Santa to come visit the children on Cohasset Common during the Village Fair Dec. 5. Santa sitting in his sled will be on the Common from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Photographs of this special time will be available upon request.

Also, don't forget to check out the Second Congregational Church's Bates Hall for beautiful, handmade Appalachian crafts.

What to do with turkey leftovers

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

I think that everyone has the same thing the day after Thanksgiving, tons of left-over turkey! I always look for a way to use it, other than just heating up all of the left-overs. Last year I stumbled across this dish while reading one of the magazines that was lying around the house — we tried it, loved it and hope that you do, too! It is called "Uptown Turkey Potpie."

UPTOWN TURKEY POT-PIE

1 rutabaga (1-1/2 lbs.), peeled and cut into 3/4-inch cubes
2 large carrots, peeled and sliced
1 cup frozen baby lima beans
2 tablespoons margarine or butter
8 ounces mushrooms, halved
1 medium onion, diced
2-1/2 cups milk
1/4 cup all-purpose flour
1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese
3/4 tsp. salt
1/2 teaspoon coarsely ground pepper
4 cups cut-up cooked turkey
8 ounces frozen puff-pastry sheets, thawed (about half 17-oz. package)
1 egg white, beaten

1) In 3-qt. covered saucepan, cook rutabaga and carrots in boiling water until tender, 10-15 minutes. Stir in frozen lima beans until separated. Drain.

2) Meanwhile, in nonstick 12-inch skillet, melt 1 tablespoon margarine or butter over high heat. Add mushrooms and brown; transfer to large bowl.

3) In same skillet, melt remaining 1 tbsp. margarine over medium heat. Add onion and 2 tablespoons water and cook until tender. In medium bowl, mix milk and flour until smooth; stir into onion mixture along with Parmesan, salt and pepper. Cook, stirring, until sauce boils and thickens. Boil 1 minute.

4) Reserve 1 cup turkey. Stir sauce, rutabaga mixture, and remaining turkey into mushrooms; spoon into a deep 3-quart casserole. Top with reserved turkey.

5) Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Roll pastry to 1 inch larger all around than top of casserole; trim as needed. Brush rim of casserole with some egg white. Place pastry over filling; pinch edge for tight seal. Cut 3 slits in pastry top; brush with remaining egg white.

6) Bake potpie on small cookie sheet 40 to 45 mins. or until filling is hot and pastry is browned; cover with foil if browning too quickly. Makes 8 servings.

Hope you like it! Happy Turkey Day!

ART NOTES

Artwork by Gallery Artists

The South Shore Art Center is hosting a special exhibition of small works by Gallery Artists entitled Within Reach: Inspirations for the Holidays. All pieces on view are for sale at prices under $200 and will be exhibited through Dec. 23.

Sundays at the Center presents Jennifer Armstrong

On Sunday afternoon, Dec. 6, at 2 p.m., the South Shore Art Center will host a concert with Jennifer Armstrong as part of the ongoing series, Sundays at the Center. Jennifer Armstrong will present WomanSong, one woman's creative path told in traditional and original songs and stories enlivened by Scottish pipes, fiddle, banjo and guitar. According to Dillon Bustin, the executive director of the Art Center, "Jennifer Armstrong's autobiographical reverie of songs and stories about growing up in an artistic family would appeal to just about anyone. Much of the creative reminiscing in the piece pertains to the men in her life — father, mentor, husband, friend — who influenced her growth as a woman and as an artist. Witty, wry and wise, Jennifer Armstrong leaves a lasting impression." Admission to the concert is $10. Call 781-383-ARTS to reserve a seat.

Sundays at the Center is an ongoing series produced by the Art Center featuring musical events one Sunday each month. The South Shore Art Center is located at 119 Ripley Rd. in Cohasset. Call (781) 383-2787 for more information.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Life is good on Thanksgiving

What would you like for a perfect Thanksgiving Day this year? How about a brilliant autumn sun shining down on Cohasset High's Alumni Field in the morning. Let's hope the Skippers get the wishbone against the Pirates of Hull.

You have a perfect turkey dinner with a loving family in the afternoon and the feeling that "life is good" in the evening.

We wish you that this year.

When you're getting your dinner ready, you might take a minute to thank God you weren't a cook at the first Thanksgiving 378 years ago.

About 140 people sat at the three-day harvest—90 Indian braves and 50 Pilgrims .Four women did all the cooking.

They roasted wildfowl, turkeys and deer in English fashion. They boiled cod and sea bass in Indian tradition.

They cooked breads and fruit tarts in a skillet over an open fire.

For dessert they made furmety by beating wet wheat in a sack with a washbeetle, boiling it overnight, soaking it on a fire, steaming it in cream in a pipkin, then topping it with sugar.

The guests were not worried about their cholesterol level or the fat content in the food.

They ate to their hearts' content, then washed it all down with beer called aqua vita.

They scooped food from wooden bowls with their hands. There were knives, a few spoons, but no forks.

Huge napkins were very important.

It was a whole year after the Pilgrims first put their tattered boots on Plymouth Rock before the first Thanksgiving.

Their tiny overcrowded Mayflower had tossed like a toy boat upon the fierce Atlantic waves for two months.

Their trip had been stormy and long. Their arrival was dismal and discouraging. The first winter saw more than half their number starve or freeze to death. Their first harvest was a disaster.

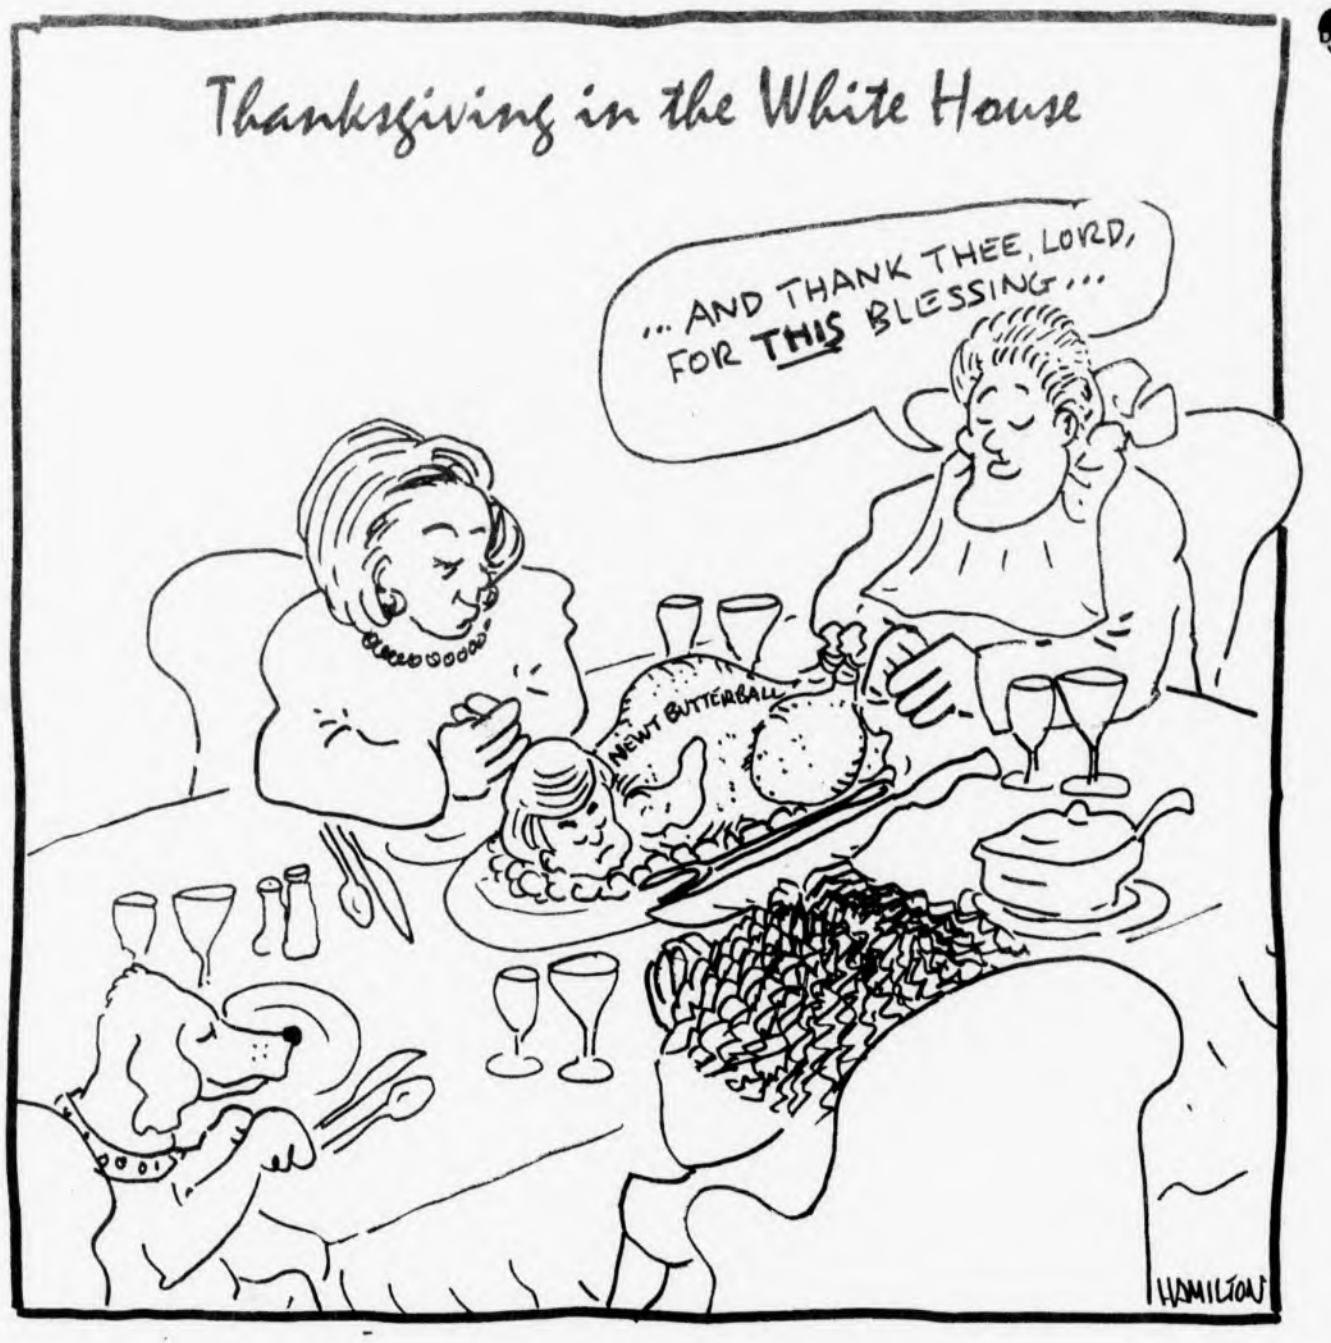
But the second year, with the help of the Indians, their fields bore fruit.

Instead of saying, "It's about time, God," they thanked Him for His blessing.

It is now three and a half centuries later.

We'll go a-hunting in a well-stocked supermarket and spear our frozen turkey with icy fingers.

Instead of checking our meat for arrowheads, we'll read the label for the fat and MSG content.



Instead of cooking herbs and roots for days, we might pop a pouch of peas in boiling water.

Instead of beating wet wheat for furmety, we might heat up a prebaked pie and squirt some whipped cream from an aerosol can.

But the warmth of Thanksgiving is still the same.

It is a day to be surrounded by our family and thankful for our blessings.

Happy Thanksgiving.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Government Island is special

TO THE EDITOR:

Government Island, including the Hagerty Property, is a prime piece of waterfront property that can benefit all residents if moderation and compromise guide usage decisions. It's not exclusively a boat launching area, historical site, or recreation area. It's all of the aforementioned and more.

Unfortunately, advocates for worthy causes are too often so narrowly focused that they lose sight of the need for compromise in order that a multitude of uses can co-exist.

For example, advocates of the Antoine-Wilson Memorial are 100-percent right to want a separate and meaningful memorial to the heroic light-keepers who lost their lives. However, the Historic Commission, Government Island Study Committee and Design Review Board are correct that the proposed site location is inappropriate. With a modicum of compromise, a redesigned memorial would fit beautifully into the "memory gardens" being planned for the hillside looking out toward Minot's Light.

Likewise, the current controversy over the Sailing Club floats is a "tempest in a teapot." The Sailing Club has trained, at very affordable rates, more than 10,000 Cohasset residents in boating safety and recreational sailing during the past 40 years. They provide a huge community service at no cost to the taxpayer and to impose additional costs to relocate their floats is unreasonable.

Thanks for Turkey Dinner support

TO THE EDITOR:

We at the Cohasset Elder Affairs wish to thank all or our volunteers, members of the Board of Cohasset Elder Affairs and the local merchants who through their generosity made possible our annual Thanksgiving dinner. Over 70 elders from the community enjoyed the festivities held on Nov. 19 at our center. It was a very special afternoon.

We especially want to acknowledge the merchants who assisted us in this affair.

DiNero's Restaurant, Exotic Flowers, French Memories Bakery, Kimball's by the Sea, Meredith's Floral Gallery, Shaw's Supermarket, Stop & Shop Inc., and Strawberry Fair, all of Cohasset; and Z-Chef Restaurant of Hull.

We also wish to acknowledge the following people for their efforts in making the dinner very special. Virginia Anderson and Carol Dieffenbach, table settings and decorations; Stephanie Church, South Shore Community Center; Sara Marmo, turkey stuffing and turkey carving; Peter Tolman, turkey carving; CEA staff, dinner servers; and Anna and Board members for their caring and dedication that helped make this a day to remember.

New clothing salvage program

The American Red Cross of Massachusetts Bay has a new service available for residents of Cohasset to support the American Red Cross. The Clothing Salvage Program, a collaborative program with Windward Trading based in Brockton, allows people the opportunity to donate used clothing in specially marked bins which are near the town's refuse center.

The maintenance of the clothing bins is being handled by Windward Trading. After the clothing is collected, it is sold and a percentage of the proceeds will provide financial support to the American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund. This program is a new and innovative way for individuals in Eastern Massachusetts to support the Red Cross.

A specially marked American Red Cross bin is located at the Transfer Station on Cedar Street in Cohasset, where used clothing can be donated. For additional bin locations in other communities or for tax-deductible information, call (508) 586-4445.

Cohasset Village fair is Dec. 5

Village Fair preparations are underway in Cohasset for the town's traditional holiday celebration to be held Saturday, Dec. 5, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. All the churches on the town common, in addition to the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church, have begun plans adding greater variety with more booths to this annual event.

First Parish is offering fresh cut Christmas trees that may be picked up the morning of the Village Fair at the Parish House, 23 N. Main St. Trees are from 5 to 9 feet tall and will be sold for $35. Orders placed by Nov. 22 will be entered in a drawing for a free tree. To order your tree, call 383-9845. On the day of the fair, First Parish will sell hand-painted tree ornaments. The church will donate a tree to Wellspring in Hull as well as to the Cohasset Food Pantry. In addition there will be a Swedish coffee shop with Scandinavian coffee, pastry and breads. An old-style "Jumble Sale" with a little bit of everything from attic treasures to closet clear-outs and bargain basement furniture will complete their holiday offering.

Saint Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave., will offer its holiday book sale. There will be novels, poetry, non-fiction, children's books, cooking, craft and gardening books, even CDs, videos and computer programs. A number of prize books will be offered by "silent auction." If you would like to donate books in good condition for this sale, you may leave them at St. Stephen's Parish House Wednesdays and Thursdays from 8 to 11 a.m. and 2 to 4 p.m. St. Stephen's will also offer its "General Store" of baked goods and home-made candy. Coffee, doughnuts, soups and crusty breads will also be offered on fair day in the parish hall. Proceeds from the Saint Stephen's portion of the fair will go to the many social services provided by Wellspring in the town of Hull.

The Appalachia Service Organization will sponsor the "Secret Room" at Saint Stephen's Church. This room is for children only who enter to purchase small holiday gifts for their families and friends. The gifts will be wrapped by volunteers before the children leave, keeping the gifts a "secret" until Christmas. The Appalachia Service Organization will send 99 teenagers to West Virginia to meet the people of Appalachia, learn about their culture, and help renovate homes there for people in need. The organization will hold a craft sale at the Congregational Church, and sponsor Santa Claus, who will meet with children on the Town Common.

Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., will offer a boutique offering handcrafts including pine cone wreaths, Christmas tree skirts, wooden snowmen and Santas. There will be an old-fashioned New England clam chowder bar, and a booth selling baked goods and cheese. Proceeds from the Congregational Church's booths will go to their Outreach program.

For the first time, the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church will hold their Village Fair booths, highlighted by Greek pastry, at the Community Center, 3 N. Main St. Other offerings will include crafts, boxwood trees and wreaths, a White Elephant table and boutique.

Kidnapping the first Thanksgiving

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Will somebody please leave the Pilgrims to rest in peace?

Just as we sit down to eat — and slide belching under the table — to commemorate the first Thanksgiving in 1621, word comes from Virginia that settlers there enjoyed the first turkey and cranberry sauce a full two years before our Pilgrims.

"There's no doubt about it, Berkeley Plantation had the first Thanksgiving," says John Hanna, president of the Berkeley Thanksgiving Festival Committee, which has been observing the occasion since 1952.

Every year about this time somebody comes up with the half-baked idea that the first Thanksgiving occurred in New York or Pennsylvania or Georgia when a settler and an Indian shared a tuna fish sandwich and one of them said, "Thank God!"

Last year, if I recall right, it was El Paso, Texas, and the menu was tacos and refritas. In other years, it was either Jamestown, Va., or St. Augustine, Fla., where they dined on grits and hush puppies.

Residents of Berkeley, Va., firmly believe that the first Thanksgiving was held in their town Dec. 4, 1619, a day of fasting and prayer after months aboard the good ship Margaret on the voyage from England.

"The Margaret Compact" or "they came over on the Margaret?" It doesn't have the same ring to it.

The Plymouth people, as I understand it, can't pin down for a certainty the exact date of the first Thanksgiving but it was sometime in November or December 1621, when they gave thanks for a bountiful harvest.

The best account of it is in a letter that Edward Winslow wrote to a friend in England, dated Dec. 11, 1621.

"Our harvest being gotten in," he wrote, "our Governor sent four men out fowling, so that we might after a more special manner rejoice together, after we had gathered the fruits of our labors. They four in one day killed as much fowl as, with a little help beside, served the company almost a week.

"At which time, amongst other recommendations, we exercised our arms, many of the Indians amongst us, and amongst their greatest king, Massasoit with some 90 men, whom for three days we entertained and feasted.

"And they went out and killed five deer which they brought to the plantation and bestowed on our Governor and upon the Captain and others."

A more detailed account of a Thanksgiving (perhaps the second or third) was written Emanuel Eltham, one of the "adventurers" who accompanied the Pilgrims, describing the harvest festival of 1623.

"We had about 12 pasty venisons, besides others, pieces of roasted venison, and other such good cheer that I could wish you some of our share," he wrote to his friend in the Old Country.

"For here we have the best grapes that you ever saw, and the biggest, and divers sort of plums and nuts."

Chief Massasoit, apparently a party animal, again was invited and "he brought three or four bucks (deer) and a turkey," as well as his principal wife (he had five), four other chiefs and 120 of his warriors.

"And we had very good pastime in seeing them dance with such a noise that you would wonder," wrote Eltham.

Hingham.

Both residents have lived in a number of places, but it's Hingham they call home now, and they cherish the spectacular view from atop Turkey Hill, where New England Friends Home is located.

At this time of year, their thoughts return to Thanksgivings past, when their childhood days were filled with excitement as they waited for the special holiday.

"I used to hear the words of the song, 'Over the river and through the woods to grandmother's house we go.' And I used to wonder why I couldn't go to my grandmother's house by sleigh. We actually got there by streetcar," recalls Nowack with a laugh. Her family lived in a suburb of Chicago.

Kennedy thinks the Thanksgiving "climate" has changed from when she was a little girl.

"It's not as rigid today as it used to be in the 1920s," she said. "You really began preparing for the holiday when fall set in, putting on the storm doors and washing the windows. Now people do all that the week before Thanksgiving."

Her fondest and most eventful Thanksgiving occurred when she was about eight-years-old.

Her grandmother had five sisters, which were her great-aunts. They were: "wonderful ladies" and one of them was married to a Baptist minister with a parish in Harvard, Mass.

The rectory — a big old farmhouse — was located across the street, and it's there Kennedy, now 96, joined her cousins and other family members for one of her earliest Thanksgiving celebrations.

Kennedy and her family, who lived in Hyde Park at the time, had to take a long train journey to get there the day before the holiday, but the trip was well worthwhile.

"It was wonderful for me as a little girl being in that big house, with everyone bustling around wearing big white aprons," she said. She also remembers that water was retrieved from a pump in the kitchen sink, which was new to her.

"Everyone was either making pies spread out on the table or assisting with the preparation in other ways," she remembers. "The kids were told to go outside to play."

Thanksgiving Day dawned, and Kennedy remembers having breakfast at a huge table, with Uncle Herbert, the reverend minister, seated at the head of the table, with aunts and cousins gathered around.

"Everyone had to bow their heads — it was the first time I was introduced to saying grace," she said.

The dinner was superb, with Uncle Herbert carving the giant bird.

"The kid were supposed to keep still, but I remember the big boys (playfully) hitting us in the side as they sat at the table," Kennedy said with a chuckle. "But it was a wonderful Thanksgiving in a lovely setting — so Thanksgiving-ish."

The next day, however, the family woke up to a snowstorm. The children worried about how they would get home, but they finally arrived.

Nowack, 89, recalls a completely different type of Thanksgiving as a child, but one equally as meaningful.

As an only child, she looked forward to getting together on Thanksgiving and Christmas with her cousins. Family members shared hostess duties on that "day of rever-

Nominations open for Citizen of the Year award

Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Thursday Dec. 31. Please see the nomination form on page 11.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1998 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1999.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer, or other municipal worker, a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has given freely of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

This year's recipient will be the sixth person honored as Citizen of the year, joining past year recipients:

1993: Gerard T. Keating, "Mr. Cohasset," for his more than half-century of contributions to his community, including chairman of the Council on Aging, chairman of the school committee, president of the hockey boosters club, vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, director of veterans services, and lector, eucharistic minister and usher at St. Anthony's Church and much more.

1994: Joseph D. Buckley, for his work behind the scenes helping seniors understand the complexities of the healthcare system and to access health benefits through SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders), his service on the Council of Aging, and volunteer work over the years with the Boy Scouts, Little League, Sunday School and more.

1995: Dr. Robert T. Sceery, for his more than 40 years of dedicated services as a pediatrician in town and school doctor. He also served on the board of health and led the fight back in the 1970s to get the town sewered. He is also a familiar figure at town meetings where he speaks his mine on important issues.

1996: The Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, for being a positive force for good through his work with the Appalachia Service Project (ASP), an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset teenagers. ASP is a home repair and home building ministry in central Appalachia.

1997: Anna Abbruzzese, for all her volunteer work including preparing and delivering meals for the Pine Street Inn; driving the senior shuttle and coordinating the Gourmet Cooking Club at the Council on Elder Affairs; and her many efforts to help revitalize Cohasset Village through the Farmers' Market and much more.

ence."

In those days, turkeys were purchased at a butcher shop, and she remembers her grandmother plucking out the turkey's pinfeathers with tweezers.

But what impressed Nowack the most was the huge bowl of nuts that the children were allowed to crack themselves.

Her cousin, Bob, was more eager to enjoy the sweet meats and ate each nut as he cracked it. But Nowack relished the idea of accumulating a whole pile and salting them before savoring the tasty morsels.

As a child, Kennedy said children were brought up to respect their ancestors, the Pilgrims, and they were also taught to be grateful to the Indians who shared their bounty with the newcomers to America.

"We were taught to respect and like the Indians for what they did for the Pilgrims and what they learned from the Indians," she said. "They taught the Pilgrims to plant herring in the ground along with corn seeds because the fish acted as a fertilizer."

Nowack also has a special feeling for her ancestors, because she worked at Plimoth Plantation at one time when she lived close by.

She did some research, acted out parts and led school groups in singing Thanksgiving songs at a Pilgrim worship outpost in Plymouth.

"I loved that part of my life," Nowack said. "It was interesting and educational."

She particularly enjoyed cooking over a fire in iron pots and making bread like the Pilgrims did and praises them for using rose hips (red berries growing on wild roses) to make tea as well as to combat scurvy on long ocean voyages.

One of Kennedy's fondest Thanksgiving memories occurred when she was a teenager. At that time, her favorite job was stuffing dates with peanut butter and rolling them in sugar. Her mother would get out lovely glass dishes, which Kennedy "adored," and she would place the stuffed dates on the sideboard.

While she said her family had very little (materially) when she was a child, Kennedy had a good life.

"Today I'm thankful for the harvest God has given us," she said. Kennedy has one son, Donald Kennedy of Cohasset, and two grandchildren. Now she's enriching the lives of younger family members with tales of her childhood memories.

"My grandson would always say, 'Let Grammy make the gravy, because it doesn't have any lumps,'" she said. "And he's still saying it!"

But now she enjoys just being at the table and the special attention she receives and saying grace for her family around the Thanksgiving table, which has become a tradition.

Nowack enjoys a large family, with 14 grandchildren and 17 great-grandchildren.

"It's great when we all come together," she said.

Nowack is looking forward to spending the holiday at the home of her youngest daughter, Susan Cook Thanas, of Duxbury, where she will have dinner with her daughter and her twin sons and their wives.

She is also the mother of Nancy Noble of Hingham.

Both women share a zest for life and spirit of gratitude, which gives them an ageless appearance.

STAFF PHOTO/ALAN CHAPMAN

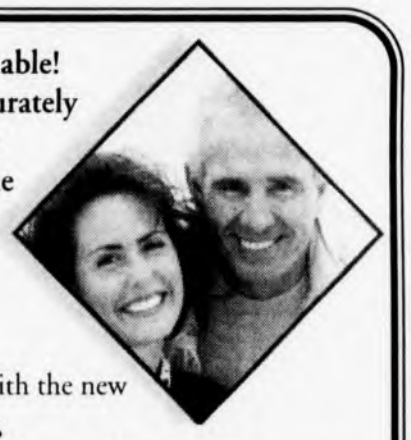
Elinor Kennedy and Ruth Nowack, both former long-time Cohasset residents, reminisce about old-fashioned Thanksgivings in their home at the New England Friends Home in Hingham.

Nowack is looking forward to peace and continued good health and hopes the world "straightens out a little more. I pray for that."

Kennedy is especially thankful at this time of year for the opportunity to live at New England Friends Home after residing in Cohasset on James Lane for 65 years.

"There's a magnificent view, and we're enjoying our new annex," she said. "My window looks out over Hull and Strawberry Hill, and the Boston Lighthouse flashes every night to bring on the new day."

Kennedy, who enjoys writing, kept a daily journal of the recent renovations at New England Friends Home because what the assisted living facility offers means so much to her.



Nowack shares Kennedy's gratitude.

"We like to study and read. It keeps our minds alive," she said.

Among the blessings both are grateful for are their families, which they hold dear.

"I thank God every night for that," Nowack said. "We have much to appreciate living here, too. There's a wonderful staff, and it's a beautiful home. What more could we ask?"

A present and future history book project

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Who could have imagined that preparing a third volume of the history of Cohasset would lay the groundwork for future books? Ernest Grassey is imagining that scenario right now. Grassey is vice-chairman of the town history committee, a former president of the Cohasset Historical Society, and a serious local historian.

"We would like to take the responsibility to continue gathering and storing information for the next book," Grassey said. "Instead of waiting 50 years for the next committee to begin gathering information, we would like to leave them with too much data. Let's save too much stuff for the next volume."

Videotaping Cohasset residents and saving the interviews for future generations is just one idea Grassey mentioned. He recognized that videotaped interviews can preserve important information long after someone has passed on. New electronic storage devices such as DVD and minidiscs allow for secure, long-term storage of video and audio data. Grassey would like to utilize some of those devices to store interviews, and important events like a full session of town meeting.

"Storing video could be like preparing a loose-leaf binder," Grassey said. "In the future, people would be able to look at it and see the way people thought in 1998. They would be able to see the tone of the discussions in 1998. I would love to see a video of a town meeting session from the 1940s."

Grassey said the committee is still focused on its main function: creating volume three which will relate the history of the past 50 years. He added that the committee is merely trying to take advantage of some downtime by looking toward the future.

"In the future, people would be able to look at it and see the way people thought in 1998. They would be able to see the tone of the discussions in 1998. I would love to see a video of a town meeting session from the 1940s."
— Ernest Grassey, town history committee

Last month, the committee mailed a letter to every resident seeking advance orders and donations. Currently, the committee has more than 140 advance orders at a reduced price of $20 per volume, said the chairman of the town history committee, Wigmore Pierson. The regular price is expected to be $30 per book. The mailing generated nearly $10,000 in advance order and donations. Pierson said the donations alone have exceeded $4,000, something for which he is extremely grateful. Town meeting has contributed $35,000 to the project. The total cost of preparing 2,000 volumes of the book is estimated at about $80,000.

"We have received enthusiastic support from the town and residents," Pierson said. "The project is on target for a scheduled release date of Jan. 1, 2001. Jacqueline Dormitzer is preparing a first draft and we hope to see some chapters by mid-to-late 1999. We have a very enthusiastic committee of 11 working hard on the project."

A pleasant side effect of the project has been renewed interest in the first two volumes of the history of Cohasset: E. Victor Bigelow's "Narrative History of Cohasset" and Burtram Pratt's volume two. Grassey said the historical society has sold more copies of the two books in the past month than in the previous decade. Pierson said there have been 66 orders for volume one and 67 orders for volume two. He added that the orders for volumes one and two will be delivered by Thanksgiving.

Grassey said the committee is also exploring the possibility of preparing a CD-ROM edition that could utilize video, audio and additional information not in the book. He said committee members have received an initial estimate of $15,000 for a CD version.

"There's a distinct possibility that we could do a CD edition," Grassey said.

Pierson said the CD would require additional funding from the town, as it is not part of the main book project.

The advantage of a CD is including material that will have to be excluded from the book because of space limitations. Grassey pointed out that the entire school curriculum and a three-hour town meeting could be included on a CD.

The third volume of the history of Cohasset will have a different flavor than the previous two books, said Grassey. He said the first two volumes focused much attention on the "townie" nature of Cohasset. During those decades, there was an attitude that only Cohasset natives could run the town. In volume two, Pratt referred to newcomers who wanted to get involved in local politics as the "Johnny-come-lately's", Grassey said.

"The isolationism of volumes one and two are out because it's not an isolationist situation anymore," Grassey said. "When the train stopped in 1954, people thought the world would end because they couldn't reach Boston, and Cohasset would die without the train. They didn't think cars and buses would be adequate. Now, the train is coming back, and people think the world is going to end and Cohasset is going to die."

Cohasset has become a different town in the past 50 years. Now, the majority of residents are not "townies." The popularity of the automobile over the past five decades has eliminated much of the insular thinking that dominated in Cohasset and many other places. Grassey said the history of Cohasset over the past 50 years is the history of how the town has changed from the 1950s until the present.

"A lot of the things that happened during the last 50 years have shaped the town into the Cohasset we live in now," Grassey said. "Most of the people who live here now didn't grow up here. Now, people get involved in politics because they are interested in contributing to their community. We just had a woman elected to the school committee who has lived in town for only about a year."

International events also play a more important role in volume three. A stock market dip affects a majority of residents and businesses in town, Grassey said. When Digital lays off 2,000 employees, ten live in Cohasset.

"We have to give more attention to the Saddam's of the world because international events have an immediate effect on Cohasset," Grassey said.

It all makes for a richer, more interesting look at local history from Grassey's perspective.

"I love this stuff," Grassey said. "I love local, state, national and international history. We're kind of playing God here by choosing what goes in the book and what doesn't. In a way, we're deciding what is history and what isn't. And we have to be careful, because some of the people who are important for history still have families living in town. It's a responsibility we're taking very seriously."

The committee always welcomes input, donations and historical material. Anyone with any questions or comments can call Pierson at 383-6940.

Police crackdown on drivers flouting rules of the road

Speeders beware

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Speed demons had some of the spin taken out of their wheels last week when the Cohasset police department in conjunction with state police increased radar patrols along the 3A and issued dozens of citations and warnings to the offending motorists.

According to Sergeant Robert Jackson, the Cohasset police department received a $2,500 grant from the Executive Office of Public Safety to help combat the problem.

That money is only a portion of the $16,000 police received in a community policing grant last month.

"At least $2,500 of the funds will go to traffic enforcement," said safety officer Richard Yocum, who has been on patrol at the Beechwood & King Street intersection; the access and egress at the new Joseph Osgood Elementary and Deer Hill schools on Sohier Street; and the Shaws Plaza area on 3A. The rest of the funds will go toward marine and bike training and patrols, as well as developing a web site, according to Yocum.

"We'll also have state police working with us," he said.

During a three-day period, 84 violators were cited, according to Jackson.

"We've asked the state police to come down for some time," said Jackson. "Ever since the Shaws shopping center was redesigned, it's the worst intersection in town and it needs some more selective enforcement there. People are still speeding through there. We stopped a husband who was speeding and a while later, we ticketed his wife."

"We stopped a husband who was speeding and a while later, we ticketed his wife."
— Sgt. Robert Jackson

Traffic has been on the agenda at many a selectmen's meeting. Last month, Chairman Ronnie McMorris said more residents ask her about traffic conditions than any other problem in town. Much of the traffic and many of the problems come from out of town.

Jackson agrees. "It's mostly commuters from the south going on 3A and they keep going at 50 or more when it drops down to 35 mph. But there are two or so signs there to indicate that shift. People aren't paying attention to the signs, unfortunately."

While it would be nice to think that all the speeders in Cohasset are from outside the town, that is not the case.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said that his department issues more traffic tickets to out-of-town commuters, but Cohasset residents still account for many of the tickets issued within town borders.

Some of the areas in town most plagued by speeding include King Street, Beechwood Street, Forest Avenue, North and South Main Streets and Route 3A. The Beechwood intersection at 3A has been the biggest problem of all this year, according to Noonan.

The two state police officers sent to Cohasset to help combat the problem are armed with a new laser instrument that makes it easier for officers to discern which car is being picked up on the radar.

"It helps," said Yocum. "But we get one area under control and then we have to go elsewhere. We can't baby-sit the entire town."

What's the difference between a citation and a warning?

"A citation costs you money," said Jackson. "If you get three written in a year, the Registry will suspend your license for seven days."

What constitutes speeds worth citing is partly up to the officer's discretion, he said.

"It's mostly based on how much you're going over the speed limit that determines whether you get a written warning or a citation," said Jackson. "We intend to continue it. I'm not going to tell you when or where, that will be a surprise."

Hit and run driver claims Cohasset native's life

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

A hit and run driver left Cohasset native James Allen Hagler Jr. at the side of a Bradenton, Fla. road in the early morning hours of Nov. 16. His body was not found until two hours had passed.

"It was early in the morning-a deserted road type of thing," said his brother-in-law, Joseph Colpitts of Portland, Maine. "It was about two hours before somebody found him."

A police investigation is underway, but the investigating officer has told Colpitts that it is unlikely the driver will be found.

"There were no witnesses," explained Colpitts. "He was riding his bicycle to work Monday morning on a country road when he got hit. The police found a bit of a rear view mirror and a chip of paint that they think belongs to a pick-up truck. There was also a fingerprint on the mirror, but that could be anybody's. It's possible alcohol was involved on the driver's part."

One-third of cyclist fatalities in motor vehicle accidents in 1997 were alcohol-related, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Corporal Darren Slater of Bradenton's Florida Highway Patrol, said that Hagler probably died on impact.

"The mirror that was on the right side of the truck left an imprint towards the back of his skull which shows blunt force, so it would have been an instantaneous death," said Slater. "We believe he was hit around 5 a.m., which was the last time he was seen on his bicycle. He was due at work at 5:30 a.m. He was found at 7 a.m.

"We're just getting up to full speed trying to get leads. These situations have been a little more frequent lately. We don't know if the driver was drinking. We do know that people seem to panic when they hit someone and then they keep going. It goes immediately from an infraction to a felony. We have a portion of the vehicle and we're investigating leads based on that."

The son of the late James Allen and Katherine Mahan Hagler of Cohasset, Hagler Jr. grew up North Main Street and attended Cohasset schools, Derby Academy in Hingham, The Lawrenceville School in Lawrenceville, NJ and was graduated from Ithaca College in NY. He also served as an officer in the United States Navy.

"He was a very intelligent individual, made friends easily and kept in touch with friends form school, college and the navy," said Colpitts, adding, "He was a real 'people person.'"

Hagler was living in the same town with his ex-wife and eight-year-old daughter, Kelsey Anne. He enjoyed spending time with his daughter and his ex-wife's nine-year-old grandson.

"Jimmy was sort of a father to the boy, too," said Colpitts. "He was a very, very devoted father. The two kids are now both missing the only father they ever knew."

At the time of his death, Hagler was working as a John Deere supervisor. He was in the habit of getting his exercise by bicycling to and from work, which is what he was doing when on the morning Nov. 16.

"My wife is having some bad moments over this," said Colpitts. "She's better off at work at LL Bean. She's busy and has lots of people around there."

Hagler is survived by his daughter Kelsey Anne Hagler; two sisters, Katherine "Lynne" Hagler Colpitts of Portland, Maine and Dorothy Hagler Penno of Pensacola, Fla., as well as four nieces and nephews. Services will be private.

"It's a shame," said Colpitts. "You know, he was 42 and in good health. His life was going well. And my wife never had a chance to say 'goodbye' or 'I love you.' None of us did. It's certainly a finality kind of thing."

OBITUARIES

Mary K. Donovan

Mary K. (Cusick) Donovan, 90, of Cohasset died Friday, Nov. 20 at the Atrium Nursing Center in Middleboro after a brief illness.

Born and raised in Brookline, Mrs. Donovan was a 60-year resident of Cohasset.

Skippers match up evenly with Pirates

By Lou Molinari

Would you like to know the winner of the Thanksgiving Day football game between Cohasset High and Hull High?

Of course you would.

Here's what you do, get a coin flip it in the air, heads Cohasset wins, tails Hull wins.

Here it comes! Lookie here, the coin landed on its edge! What does that mean?

It means, it's anybody's game. The two teams are matched so closely, that the outcome of the game that will be played in Cohasset at 10 a.m. will be a surprise.

Actually, the two teams will be fighting for fifth place in the South Shore League standings. Going into the game, the two teams are tied for the spot at 1-4-0 in league play.

Overall, Cohasset is 4-5-0 and Hull is 3-6-0. That should qualify as close.

Cohasset has scored 142 points this season while giving up 140 points.

Now, here's something the coin did not take into consideration. Hull has scored 123 points, but the Pirates have given up 205 points.

Could defense be the Achilles heel of Hull? Can they be scored upon pretty

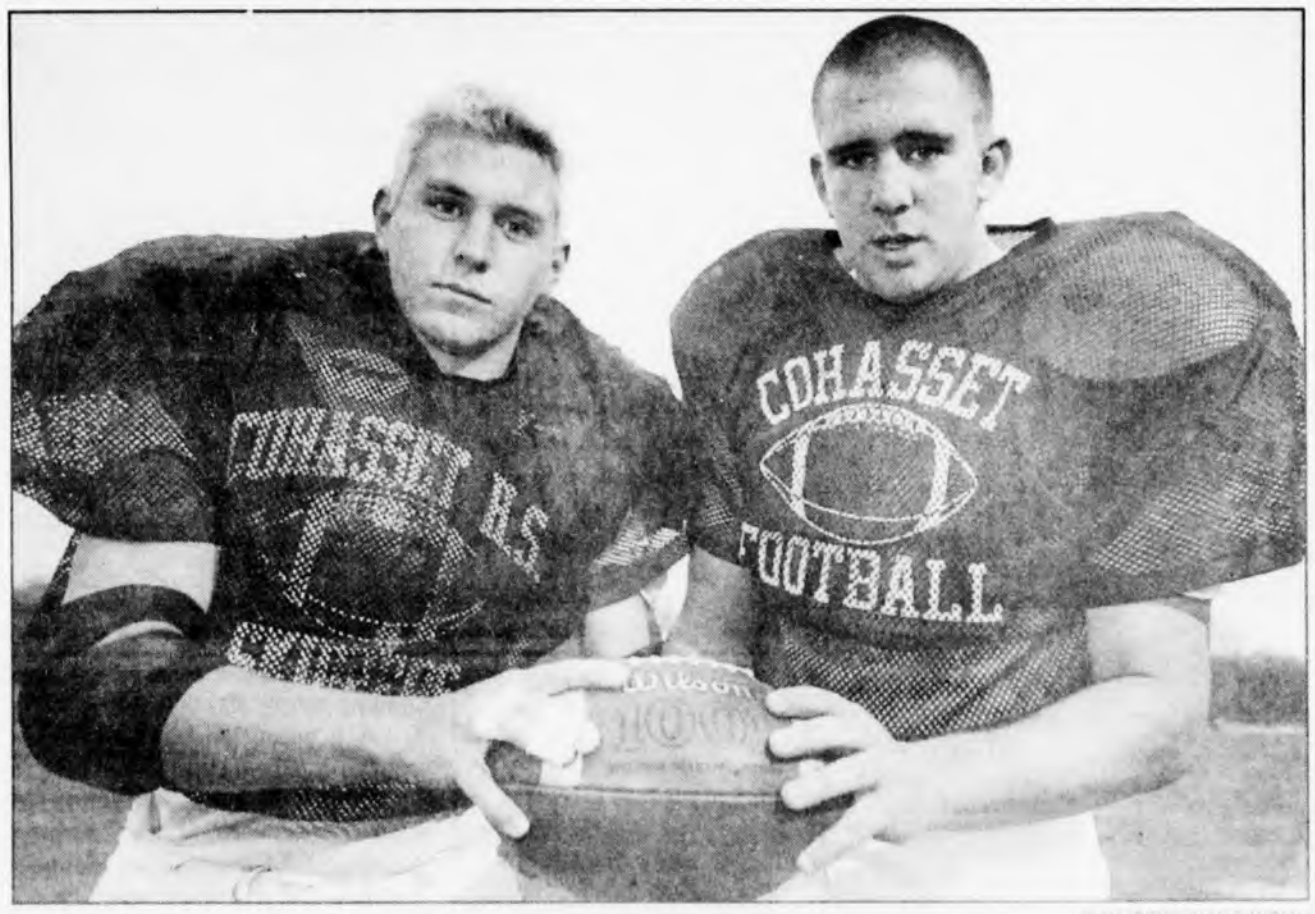
Seniors look back on four great years

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

In a sports world which is populated by public relations directors, talking heads and agents of agents, athletes have become politicians. The NBA lockout is a fine example of the legalese which has now become a staple of the bizarre subculture that is big-time sports. Players have become masters of doublespeak, being careful not to offend anyone, any group, or any organization. Sports is PC.



After conducting a series of short interviews Monday night, however, I seemed to notice an exception to the trend. Cohasset High School football players, seniors who will don the blue and white for the final time Thanksgiving, spoke with passion about their last high school game.

The bitter rivalry between Cohasset and Hull heightens the tension, which is already thick with the tradition which Thanksgiving Day games are steeped and the finality of the final whistle.

CHS center John-Paul Laugelle, a top-notch heavyweight wrestler and one of the team's co-captains: "It's tough because it's the last game. It would be great to win; it means a lot to me to win. We have a chance to stop the finger-pointing and put an end to the idea that Cohasset's a bunch of little rich kids who will just lie down. It would mean a lot to the seniors to win and show the South Shore League what we're made of."

Co-captain, sectionally-ranked wrestler and fullback Justin Golden: "I know it would mean a lot to me and the rest of the team because of Thanksgiving football.

Let me explain.

First, the coffee part. I think I went to my first Thanksgiving Day game when I was about five. I remember because I was two feet, 5 inches and after my father put two warm coats, a pair of long johns and boots on me, I must have weighed a buck 50.

The kitchen smelt like bacon and eggs and of course, coffee.

There wasn't much time to eat. We were in a hurry. My dad liked to get to the game early so that we could see the team's bus pull into the parking lot.

Although the field was 10 minutes away, we always left with a hour to spare.

My dad would be finishing his coffee going out the door, while I made like a weeble going down the stairs.

"Come on. You don't want to miss the Wildcats coming off the bus."

The Wildcats were the West Bridgewater Wildcats. My guys were the East Bridgewater Vikings. We were Route 106 rivals.

About an hour before the game, the Wildcats would pull in and one by one, the helmeted warriors would get off the bus on their way to certain doom and destruction at the hands of the mighty Vikings.

"I don't think their team is as big as it was last year," my dad would say.

I never knew. To a little kid, they always looked big. Who could tell when you're two feet tall and everyone else is a giant?

"Dad, can we get a hot dog?"

A statement of fact:

If you're going to a sporting event, no matter, if it is 10 in the morning, you ought to be able to get a decent hot dog, preferably grilled, but boiled will do in a pinch.

With his weeble looking son in tow, my dad made his way to the concession stand.

"One hot dog please." I piped up.

"Sorry, little fella. We have donuts and coffee, only."

Sorry little fella? This is America, ain't it. Give me my hot dog and I want it now.

Of course being five and within spanking distance of my dad, I didn't say that.

"OK."

Fast forward.

When it came my turn to play in the annual Thanksgiving Day game, the East-West match up had been replaced by an East Bridgewater-Middleboro rivalry. It wasn't the same, but heck, it was Thanksgiving.

Sophomore year, I got to wear a cool East Bridgewater Viking raincoat for the whole game. Not once did the coach ask me to take it off and go to the muddy field to play football in the rain. What a great guy my coach was.

After four quarters, I took my jacket off and my uniform was just as clean as it was at the start. Just a little damp, maybe.

I missed my junior year with a knee injury. It was sunny that year and the cool jackets stayed in the closet. I was just in pain and I was very cold.

Finally, my senior year came I was going to play in the Thanksgiving Day game. I was going to try my hardest to do something so that my name would be remembered for all time when folks in town got to talking about the Thanksgiving Day games.

The fourth quarter came around and I was running out of chances. We scored and I was on the kickoff team. I ran down the field and there he was. The opposing team's returner.

I got him in my sights. This was going to be the hit to end all hits. I was going to send him into Sunday.

Here he comes. There I go.

Splash.

As soon as I hit the ground, the mud came up through my facemask. I was a mess.

Out of the corner of my eye that wasn't covered with mud, I saw the returner going for a big gain. My chance at fame was over.

"Sorry little fella."

the way the games have gone in the past, with them running it up and embarrassing us. It's a huge rivalry and they've gotten the better of us since 1987 and it would be really nice to change that. There's nothing that I want more in the whole world than to beat Hull Thanksgiving."

Luke Caldwell, guard and defensive end, as well as captain of the wrestling team: "We've been humiliated the three years that I've played. I think our team is in a position where we could set the tone for the next couple of years. It would be really nice to go out with a bang."

Alex Russell, tackle and defensive lineman and captain of the basketball team: "This is the last time you play with all your friends. It just means so much more than any other game. They (Hull) will be tough as always, but we'll give 'em a run for their money."

All the players I talked to approach the game with increasingly guarded optimism, and some even expressed a sense of awe at the gravity of the situation. For years, football has consumed the summers and falls of these players, and often their minds for all four seasons. A victory in the Hull game of senior year is the Grail which every one of these players has eyed since the first day he put on pads at Cohasset.

For the seniors, it will be a day of finalities. The final time to wear the Skipper navy and white. The final chance to hear Coach Silvia's booming voice from the sidelines. The final opportunity to look around a locker room at guys whom they've known their whole lives. The last high school game and, for most, last organized football game they will every play.

A victory Thanksgiving would coronate the six years of coaching and system changes which this senior class has played through. Best of luck to them.

THANKSGIVING STUFFING

One year ago....

Skippers fall to the Pirates

There are warmer places to spend your Thanksgiving morning.

The North Pole immediately comes to mind.

But every other year Cohasset football and their followers have to make their treck to Hull Gut (AKA the Coldest Place on Earth) for the CHS-HHS Thanksgiving Day football game.

Unfortunately, it was not only very cold last year but it was also not a very good football game as the Pirates stomped Cohasset into submission, 49-6.

Pat Hurley fired a strike to Jamie Buick for Cohasset's only score in the game on a day that coincided with a reunion of the CHS Class of 1957, who compiled a perfect football record during their senior season.

One last dance

THE GAME: Hull at Cohasset

THE TIME AND PLACE: Kickoff is at 10 a.m. at Alumni Field, Cohasset High School

THE RECORD: Cohasset and Hull are sharing space near the bottom of the South Shore League, the Skippers with a 4-5 overall record and the Pirates a step below at 3-6

THE HISTORY: The Pirates laid a whipping on Cohasset last season, piling on the points in a 49-6 win. Hull has been in control of the series since the rivalry was re-started in 1985. After winning the first three years, Cohasset has been held winless in the holiday game since 1987.

THE CAPTAINS: FB/LB Justin Golden and C/DT J.P. Laugelle

THE REST OF THE SENIORS: QB/DB Jamie DeMichele, RB/DB Raheem Shepherd, WR/DB Ben Roine, FB/DB Greg Taylor, G/LB Greg Parkinson, G/LB Adam Sasso, G/DT Alex Russell, T/DT John Considine, G/DE Luke Caldwell and TE/DE Sean Parkinson.

THE SKINNY: For every senior the Thanksgiving Day football game is a special one. It's almost always the biggest crowd that they will play before all season and it marks the end of their high school football career. For the dozen seniors on the Cohasset roster it also marks the chance to go out with a bang. The Skippers haven't won the Thanksgiving game since 1987 and this squad would dearly love to be the one who puts an end to the losing streak. Things seem to be going Cohasset's way for the first time in a while. Hull is not the same team that won the Division 6 Super Bowl two seasons ago while CHS coach Tony Rolfe seems to have his team sailing in a winning direction. The chances of Hull getting another 43 point victory this year on CHS turf are pretty slim.

The road to Thanksgiving

Mashpee 18 Cohasset 12- Despite gaining nearly 300 yards in total offense, it wasn't enough as the Falcons overcame the Skippers.

Cohasset 32 Latin Academy 14- Dan Trowers was "da man", rushing for almost 200 yards as the Skippers got their first win of the year.

Carver 6 Cohasset 0- The defense stepped forward with a huge effort but a third quarter touchdown would be all the scoring the Crusadres would need on this day.

Abington 20 Cohasset 6- CHS led early in the game but were eventually washed away by the Green Wave.

Cohasset 24 Norton 6- The boys in blue put it all together against the Lancers. Luke Caldwell led the defense with 3.5 sacks.

Cohasset 22 Nauset 14- Homecoming was a sweet victor for the Skippers as Daniel Trowers and Justin Golden led the running attack.

Cohasset 26 Charlestown 14- Make it three in a row for the Skippers.

Norwell 41 Cohasset 14- Trowers had two late touchdowns but it was not enough to knock off the defending Division 4 Super Bowl champions.

Hanover 7 Cohasset 6- They fought hard but once again fell short in the end to the Indians.

Junior lacrosse registration is December 12

Registration for the 12 and Under and 14 and Under Cohasset Youth Lacrosse programs will be held Saturday, Dec. 12, from 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School.

The 12 and Under program, starting its fourth year, is open to boys and girls currently in the fifth and sixth grade. Registration is $75, which includes a uniform, practice jersey and a youth membership in US Lacrosse, the national governing body for lacrosse. US Lacrosse membership includes a subscription to a new magazine especially designed for kids.

The 14 & Under program is for middle school students. The program is limited to Cohasset residents, but players do not have to be enrolled in the Cohasset school system to be eligible.

Cohasset's junior lacrosse program is a member of the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League, the nation's largest youth program. In general, games are played Sunday afternoons. Practices currently are scheduled for late afternoon Mondays and Fridays. The teams will begin practicing in early March, games start in April and the season concludes with the MBYLL Jamboree in mid-June.

While the schedule should minimize conflicts, problems do sometimes arise. "Every coach prefers that players be there for games and practices," says 12 and Under coach Chuck Jaffe, "but we know there will be times when a child has a different game to go to. So long as they can attend practice often enough to learn the basics — and so long as they tell us when they can not make a practice or game — we don't think lacrosse should be a problem with other events."

Bob Inman assists Jaffe on the 12 and Under level.

Terry Kahn runs the 14 and Under program.

Lacrosse is a contact sport; both practices and games include hitting. In accordance with Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League rules, all players must be equipped with sticks, gloves, shoulder and elbow pads, and helmets with mouthpieces.

Hockey equipment is allowed, although Jaffe warns that hockey gloves are not flexible enough to allow a child to manipulate and control a lacrosse stick. In addition, the MBYLL is considering changing the rule that allows hockey helmets, a decision which is not expected until winter.

Jaffe also notes that while the 12 and Under team welcomes girls, it does not play girls' lacrosse, which avoids full contact and is played under different rules and with slightly different equipment. "Many girls play in the MBYLL," he said, "but there is an adjustment to make when they get older and start playing girls' lacrosse."

At the 12 and Under level, Cohasset will once again try to field two teams in the spring. Last year, the program took on 40 children — including a limited number of fourth-graders — and split into two squads for the first time. "The kids got more repetitions in practice and a lot more playing time in games, which made the players better and the season more fun," Jaffe says. "So long as we have 36 kids sign up, we'll go with two teams again this year." Cohasset must make the decision on how many teams to field by January, so early registration is critical for the program.

There will be more information on the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program available at the Dec. 12 sign-up. If you have an age-eligible child and can not attend the registration session, call Jaffe at 383-9858 or Terry Kahn at 383-0032.

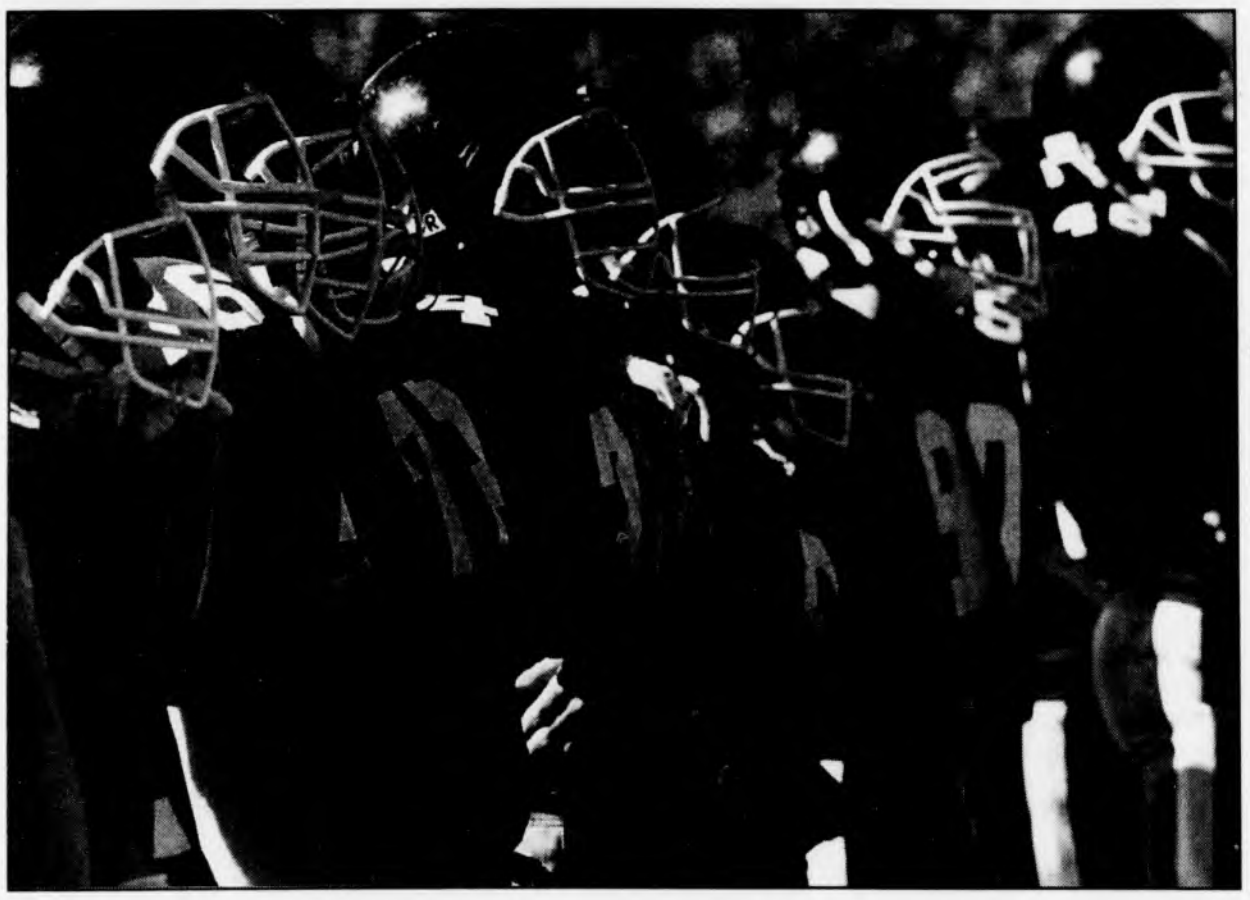
Fitness center available at CHS

Through the auspices of Cohasset High School and Dr. Mike Gill of the Health Education Department; CHS has a commercial quality fitness center.



CHS is interested in making this facility available to all residents at a nominal fee charge which cannot be determined until we have an idea of how many residents might have interest utilizing the facility. If you feel that you or members of your family might be interested in using the CHS gym, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-4109 right away.

The Rec. Dept. would like to know approximately how many residents would utilize the facility if they were able to keep it open during evening and weekend hours.

The facility includes about $75,000 worth of equipment consisting of a variety strength building equipment, two treadmills, two stairmasters, five stationary bikes and a stairmaster free-runner all of commercial quality.

The nominal fee charge would be employed to provide supervision during hours of operation, as well as revenue dedicated towards maintenance and upkeep of the equipment

The fitness center, located in the old study hall room, is currently utilized by students and staff and by CHS gym classes. Ideally, this unique opportunity could be made available to all residents outside of school hours. You may call 383-4109, 24 hours a day and if you receive voice-mail, please leave the number of people in your family who might utilize this facility if a nominal fee were charged and the facility open evenings/weekends.

Cohasset will be looking to even their record at 5-5 on Thanksgiving while also breaking their decade long losing streak against Hull.

Skippers match up evenly with Pirates

much at will? The only team that has more points scored against them in the South Shore League is last place Norton, with 210. Norton has failed to win a league game this season, but it has won one outside of the league.

Now here's another little something the coin failed to take into account. At home this season, the Skippers are 3-1-0. On the road, the Pirates are 1-4-0.

So now what do you think about that coin toss? Maybe the coin should have fallen over with the head side up? Don't get excited, it's just a thought.

However, with teams this closely matched, you try to hang your hat on any edge at all.

Now, there's still another edge for Cohasset. His name is Daniel Trowers, and he's one of the leading scorers in Division Four. In fact, he's tied for fifth place with 88 points.

Going into the game, the sophomore has scored 14 touchdowns and rushed two conversions.

First-year coach Tony Rolfe said this may be Cohasset's year to win the big game. The last three years have been runaways in favor of Hull.

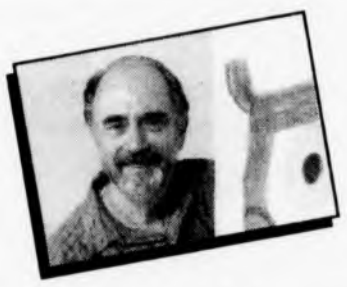
"This is going to be one of the best games of the season," stated Coach Rolfe. "It's going to be the last chance for the seniors to get even for those last three years.

"We're hoping for good weather and a big turnout. If we get the good weather, then we can bring out our bag of tricks."

As for the seniors who will be playing their final game for Cohasset, the list includes co-captains J.P. Laguelle, and Justin Golden.

Seniors on the offensive line include John Considine, Adam Sasso, Luke Caldwell, Alex Russell and Sean Parkinson.

Seniors on the defensive line include Greg Parkinson, Ben Roine, Greg Taylor and Raheen Shephard.



And, there's the senior who will be directing the team, quarterback Jamie Demichele.

Said Rolfe," If the weather is good, you can rest assured we'll be throwing the ball. Jamie is a good passer and we like to throw the ball a lot."

Then of course, there's the 14 touchdowns scored by Trowers, which must mean the team also likes to run the ball a lot.

"The seniors want this one pretty badly," said the coach. "It's not going to be hard to get them up for this game. They have been waiting a long time for this shot."

So there you have it sports fans. Take that coin out of your pocket and toss it up one more time. Maybe the above information may help sway that on-the-fence coin one way or the other.

Building character, piece by piece at Deer Hill

By Diana N. Kinch
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Character Education Program at Deer Hill School is in its second year. Five character words are chosen each year to be defined and depicted through short stories, articles, poems, fables etc. These are sent home to Deer Hill families, monthly. Discussion questions and activities are provided to encourage and generate a dialogue within the family. Last year's words were Respect, Responsibility, Kindness, Courage and Honesty. This year, the words to date are Cooperation and Empathy.

The program was initiated and is presently chaired by Adjustment Counselor Ed Leonard. The Character Education Committee, comprised of parents and staff, is assessing the effect the program is having within the school, on their own children and for themselves. They are interested in the school community's input regarding the reaction to the stories used; suggestions of more effective ones that they could share and any specific examples of their benefit. A place for comments is indicated on the sheet that is sent home. These comments are welcomed at the school.

Leonard circulates to each classroom at least once during the time each character word is highlighted. Within these sessions he seeks to broaden and clarify the students' understanding of the word through exercises and discussion. Their questions and their own stories can bring alive how such words as cooperation and empathy have meaning in their own lives. The character education program is expanding to encompass the playground, where so many of these concepts are tested, due to its unstructured nature. Playground aides will be guided in how to use these words and concepts as resources and strategies for constructive overseeing. The fact that home and school are espousing the same sentiments makes for a healthy continuity.

A member of the committee shared that her own son asked her one evening how he could help her.

"It's not that I'm suspicious of nice things like that happening, but I was taken by surprise. Being aware that discussions would be occurring in the school, I asked Mr. Leonard if by chance he had been in my son's class that day talking about cooperation, and he had," she said.

There is a unanimous agreement among the committee members that this is a positive opportunity to work together with peers, sharing ideas and different perspectives. They agree that disagreeing as well as coming to a consensus can be a satisfying and learning experience.

Committee member Sarah Markert said, "I find that this is one of the most pro-active school, volunteer efforts. Within a reasonable time frame, we can see the results of our work together, the work of reinforcing information that is valuable for our children."

The Middle/High School is currently formulating a character education program and the Osgood is contemplating one. Parents might consider the option of working on this committee in the future. "...Good character...is not given to us. We have to build it piece by piece — by thought, choice, courage and determination." (from "The Ten Greatest Gifts I Can Give My Children," Vannoy, Steven W.)

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Guest speaker at PAC meeting

The next P.A.C. meeting will be held Tuesday, Dec. 1, at 7:30 p.m. in the Deer Hill Library. Guest speaker will be Lynn Silva, director of student services. All parents/guardians of children receiving services under Chapter 766 are welcome. For further details, call P.A.C. chairperson Kim Maynard at 383-2707 or Maureen Jerz at 383-6592.

PSO/Learning Express Night

Do your holiday shopping at the Learning Express in Hingham Dec. 1 from 6 to 8 p.m. and the show will donate 20 percent of all Cohasset sales to the Cohasset PSO. Please indicate that you are from Cohasset in order for the PSO to qualify for appropriate credit.

So, please, make it a fun night out, get some things on your list accomplished, and raise funds for Cohasset schools.

For any questions, call Andrea Flynn at 383-6754.

Apply for college scholarships

State Sen. Robert Hedlund calls on outstanding high school students to apply to him for a college scholarship.

Hedlund can nominate several students for a state-proposed scholarship, the Teen Anti-Drug Lifetime Leadership (TALL) Award. High school seniors who have demonstrated interest in anti-drug causes are invited to apply.

The Governor's Alliance Against Drugs will award the scholarships to 11 students from across Massachusetts, one student from each district attorney's region. Ten students will receive $1,000, and the most outstanding student will receive a $2,000 award.

All finalist must be nominated by community leaders such as Sen. Hedlund, school officials, D.A.R.E., officers or religious leaders. Hedlund will only be able to nominate students to be finalists; he will not choose the actual winners.

"This is a great reward for students working hard to fight drug abuse," Hedlund said. "It won't be easy to choose qualified nominees from all the deserving kids in our district, but I encourage any outstanding student to give it a shot."

Any high school senior who plans to attend public or private college next fall can apply. Students should write a brief (1 to 2 pages) letter outlining their anti-drug activities and leadership qualities, and mail it to: State Sen. Robert Hedlund, 66 Sea St., Weymouth 02191.

Letters must be received by Dec. 15. The senator and his staff will review applications and inform nominees of their success in the following weeks. Nominations will be submitted to the governor's anti-drug office by the end of January, and winners will be announced by Gov. Paul Cellucci's office in the first week of March.

Donations give dusty school texts new life

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Outdated teaching materials at the old Osgood school will open new educational doors for students in Siberia and Lithuania. The donation idea was first suggested to principal Marilee Cantelmo during the school's move to the new building.

"While Cassandra Rioux was organizing the move from the old to new Osgood, she happened to mention Lithuanian Children's Relief to me," said Cantelmo. "She had heard about the group from Nancy St. John, who runs the Children's Exchange in town."

What Rioux, an Osgood parent, heard from St. John is that the organization was happy to receive goods that other organizations passed on. The South Boston-based and non-profit Lithuanian Children's Relief, Inc., (LCR) was established in 1990 by a group of grandparents of Lithuanian adoptees.

"Their children had gone to Lithuania to adopt," said Rioux. "While there, they saw the children and the tremendous need there. So the grandparents formed a group that sends supplies to Lithuania. We have really outdated textbooks that can be used for English-teaching purposes and they can probably also benefit from the old math books. The books are about 20-years-old and no longer appropriate for today's school curriculum."

LCR volunteers will come to the school to pack and remove whatever materials the school offers.

"We have really outdated textbooks that can be used for English-teaching purposes and they can probably also benefit from the old math books. The books are about 20-years-old and no longer appropriate for today's school curriculum."
— Cassandra Rioux

The other donated materials will go to an English school located in Irkutsk, an eastern Siberian city.

Cantelmo had learned about Irkutsk's English school, an after-school program that Siberian parents clamored for, through her friend, Kenneth Johnston. His daughter is friends with Oksana Yaverbaum, director of the English school in Irkutsk.

Yaverbaum opened her school in January of this year with 80 children attending, aged four-and-a-half to nine years. Russian parents have created a demand for English instruction in schools and are willing to pay for the separate instruction after regular classes.

The popularity of the program shows in its growing population. There are now 150 pupils there, with six teachers assigned to them. Easy-readers, workbooks, worksheets and flash cards are some of the English-language items that Yaverbaum is hoping to receive.

Johnston will take on the packing and shipping of the materials, unless a corporate sponsor or organization steps forward to help.

"The materials have outlived their use here," said Cantelmo. "We will send them out as soon as we can find a reasonable means of shipping them."

Rioux is pleased. "The Osgood students learn by modules now and not from textbooks," she said. "The materials are no longer suited to what the children are expected to learn today, but they will really be of use where they are going."

'Music Man' brings local talent to the stage

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

At 6:30 p.m., the eighth through 12th graders of Cohasset Middle-High School are still trickling in for "Music Man" rehearsals. On stage, four boys sit in chairs and mimic the jostling movements of an early-century train while going through a flawless musical number that requires continuum.

Outside the auditorium doors, a growing group of teens congregates in the foyer, catching up on whatever has happened since their last class that afternoon.

By 6:45, most of the teens are gathered on stage for rehearsal.

"You're angry!", the director reminds her loud singers, "You're not a rodeo!"

Time goes by, the troop is restless. The chatter increases until the director fixes "the look" on one group of students. Silence reigns, if only for a moment.

Such is the rehearsal for Meredith Willson's play, first performed on Broadway in 1957, and now brought to Cohasset by local talent.

Musical director and producer Brian Marks is pleased so far with the strides his cast of 50-plus has made.

"We're getting there," he says, while watching the spirited group on stage. "We're trying to tie together a lot of loose ends with less than two weeks to go. We're trying to get some of our technology people on board and up to speed with things, but that happens with any show."

The students involved in the production are drawn from the Cohasset Music Department at the middle-high school. "They don't have to be a member of any particular club," publicist DeeDee Nicynski.

What goes into putting on a "Broadway" production?

"Costumes, props and arranging for publicity," said Nicynski.. "Some kids are seeking out their own props and then there are stage people and parents helping out on the other end."

Two art teachers are working on the canvas back drop and have enlisted the aid of parents and students.

Costume-maker Maureen Duffy threw work parties to garner help with costume making and pattern cutting.

"It's all-school involvement," said Nicynski. "Everyone is involved in all different aspects of it. The band students are involved, too."

"Music Man" takes place in 1912 Iowa, based on Willson's recollections of his childhood there.

Ron Nicynski plays the "Music Man," a con man who travels from town to town and convinces people that there is a problem in their town and that their children need to take up band as a remedy. His friendship with town librarian Marion, played by Mereth Collins-Wooley, backfires when she sees some good in him.

"Watch for a happy ending," winked Marks. "Certainly, it's entertaining for all."

The show will have a full pit orchestra and some strong performances, he says.

Ron Nicynski has performed before and is, explains Marks, "one of some very, very solid performers. He's been in other productions and is very experienced."

David Inger, an eight-grader, also distinguished himself. "He's very strong," said Marks, of the teen's acting ability. "Outstanding."

"Sometimes I'm asked why we do these productions," said Marks. "But after you have alumnae come back and tell you that some of their fondest memories of high school are from their participation in the play, you want to continue."

"Our first dress rehearsal will be this Sunday afternoon," said Nicynski. "We only do this once every two years, so the kids are really excited about it. The final product will arrive on stage Dec. 4, 5 and 6. And everybody in it is a budding star."

"Music Man" begins 7:30 p.m., Dec. 4 and 5 and 2:30 p.m., Dec. 6 in the Cohasset High School auditorium. Call 383-1329 for more information

Harborfest band at tree-lighting on Common

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset's Harborfest Marching Band will add extra light to the tree-lighting ceremony on Cohasset Common this Friday afternoon beginning at 3:45, and ending with the tree-lighting at 4:10 p.m.

The Marching Band was the creation of the late Rev. Edward T. Atkinson, who served as minister of Cohasset's First Parish Unitarian Universalist Church.

Since its formation, the community band has played each year as part of the Harborfest Parade. This year will be their first performance apart from the parade.

The group has already met for one rehearsal to pull together traditional Christmas carols, such as "Hark the Herald," "Deck the Halls," "We Wish You a Merry Christmas.

"We'll be playing fairly simple arrangements," said band member Betts Murray. "It will be fun."

Some of the bands notables include drum major Roger Whitley and the Rev. Gary Ritts on Glockenspiel.

"Everybody's enthusiastic," said Murray.

Steve Biagini, director of instrumental music at Deer Hill School, has lent his expertise to the 25-member band.

"We are so grateful to Steve," said Murray. "I just can't express that enough. He has access to the music and he makes it easy for us to do this."

The group runs the age gamut from 14 to retirees.

"We had no idea that this would become so big," said Murray. "This is our first time doing Christmas, and we've been invited to do Memorial Day, which is really great. For now, there is a lot of concern about frozen fingers. One of the trombonists remembers playing in his college band and his trombone slide froze because of the weather. Just plain couldn't slide it. So we hope it will be not too cold.

"It's really 'Norman Rockwell,' right there," she added. "That's what we hear people say."

Any person at least 14 years old, may join the band for this event by calling Steve Biagini at Deer Hill School or Betts Murray at First Parish in Cohasset (383-1100 or Bbetts22@aol.com)

LIBRARY CORNER

Art at the library

The latest artist on display at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is Weymouth resident Norma McKenzie, calligrapher and a teacher of calligraphy on the South Shore and in Boston.

McKenzie began her career as an elementary school teacher, but her college training in calligraphy began to emerge after the birth of her son. By the mid-1970s, McKenzie's commitment to this writing art began to grow. She attended her first International Calligraphy Conference in Minnesota in 1981 and has frequented several others over the years.

McKenzie now teaches calligraphy at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset, the Fuller Museum in Brockton and the Boston Center for Adult Education in Boston. She has also continued to take courses with many traveling calligraphy instructors and is currently involved in a year-long course with traveling teacher, Reggie Ezell.

Norma McKenzie's display at the library reflects her devotion to calligraphy through the combination of the writing art itself and the beautiful passages she uses from various writers to express and enhance her art. It is a show that everyone will enjoy and continues at the Paul Pratt until the end of November.

The children's room

Registration for the winter preschool story hour at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library will be accepted Thursday, Dec. 3. Story hours will be held Thursday afternoons at 1 p.m., Jan. 7, 14, 21 and 28 and Feb. 4 and 11. Another session will be held Friday mornings at 10 a.m., Jan. 8, 15, 22 and 29 and Feb. 5 and 12.

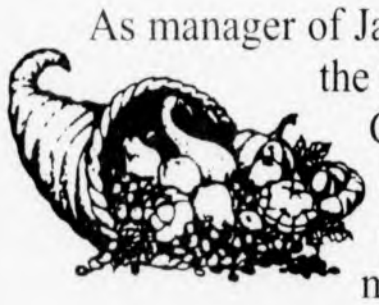
Each 45-minute program consists of several picture book stories, songs and crafts. Children must be at least 3-1/2 years of age to participate. To register, call the children's room at 383-1348.

Best books

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library staff selection of "Best Books of Other Years" is currently available in the bookcase to the left of the main desk. Modeled after the Modern Library's top 100 list of books to read, the staff has complied a diverse assortment of books ranging from Dashiell Hammett's classic, "The Thin Man" to more current selections such as John Fowles, "The Magus" and Ursula Hegi's, "Stones from the River." Also available is the 40th Anniversary Edition of "On the Road," by Jack Kerouac. Come in and browse and make a winter reading selection.

Book Angel program

In the spirit of holiday sharing, become a Book Angel! From now through Dec. 15, Buttonwood Books & Toys and Buttonwood for Kids will give a 15 percent discount on books purchased through their Book Angel program. Books selected at Buttonwood in Cohasset will go to children served by Wellspring in Hull and the Friends of the Homeless in Weymouth.



Books purchased at Buttonwood in Hingham will be gifts for children served by the Hingham Interfaith Food Pantry, the Mary-Martha Learning Center and the South Shore Educational Collaborative Teen Parent Program. Book Angels can be a wonderful way for children to understand the deeper meaning of the holidays.

Call Buttonwood at (781) 383-2665 or (781) 749-2665 for more information.

The Memory Tree at the South Shore Community Center

This holiday season will be enriched by remembering, in a tangible way, the joy our loved ones have shared with us in seasons past.

Commemorative lights will shine on the Memory Tree on the lawn of South Shore Community Center, as well as a star placed on the tree in the lobby with the name(s) of your loved one(s). As contributions are received, bulbs will be illuminated throughout the season, and the names of the donors and those remembered will be published in the Cohasset Mariner. Your tax deductible contribution will help continue quality programs at South Shore Community Center.

The star atop the 1998 Memory Tree will shine in honor of departed loved ones whom you wish to honor. Participation options are: Individual: Forget-me-not white lights for a gift of $5; Angel: Individuals, businesses or professionals giving $15 or more, forget-me-not white lights; Archangel: Individuals, businesses or professionals giving $50 or more, forget-me-not white lights.

Generosity will be acknowledged by white lights on the Memory Tree, and on the scroll published weekly.

Please make checks payable to South Shore Community Center, P.O. Box 631, 3 North Main St., Cohasset, 02025.

The following is a list of contributors to the 1998 Memory Tree for the week of Nov. 16:

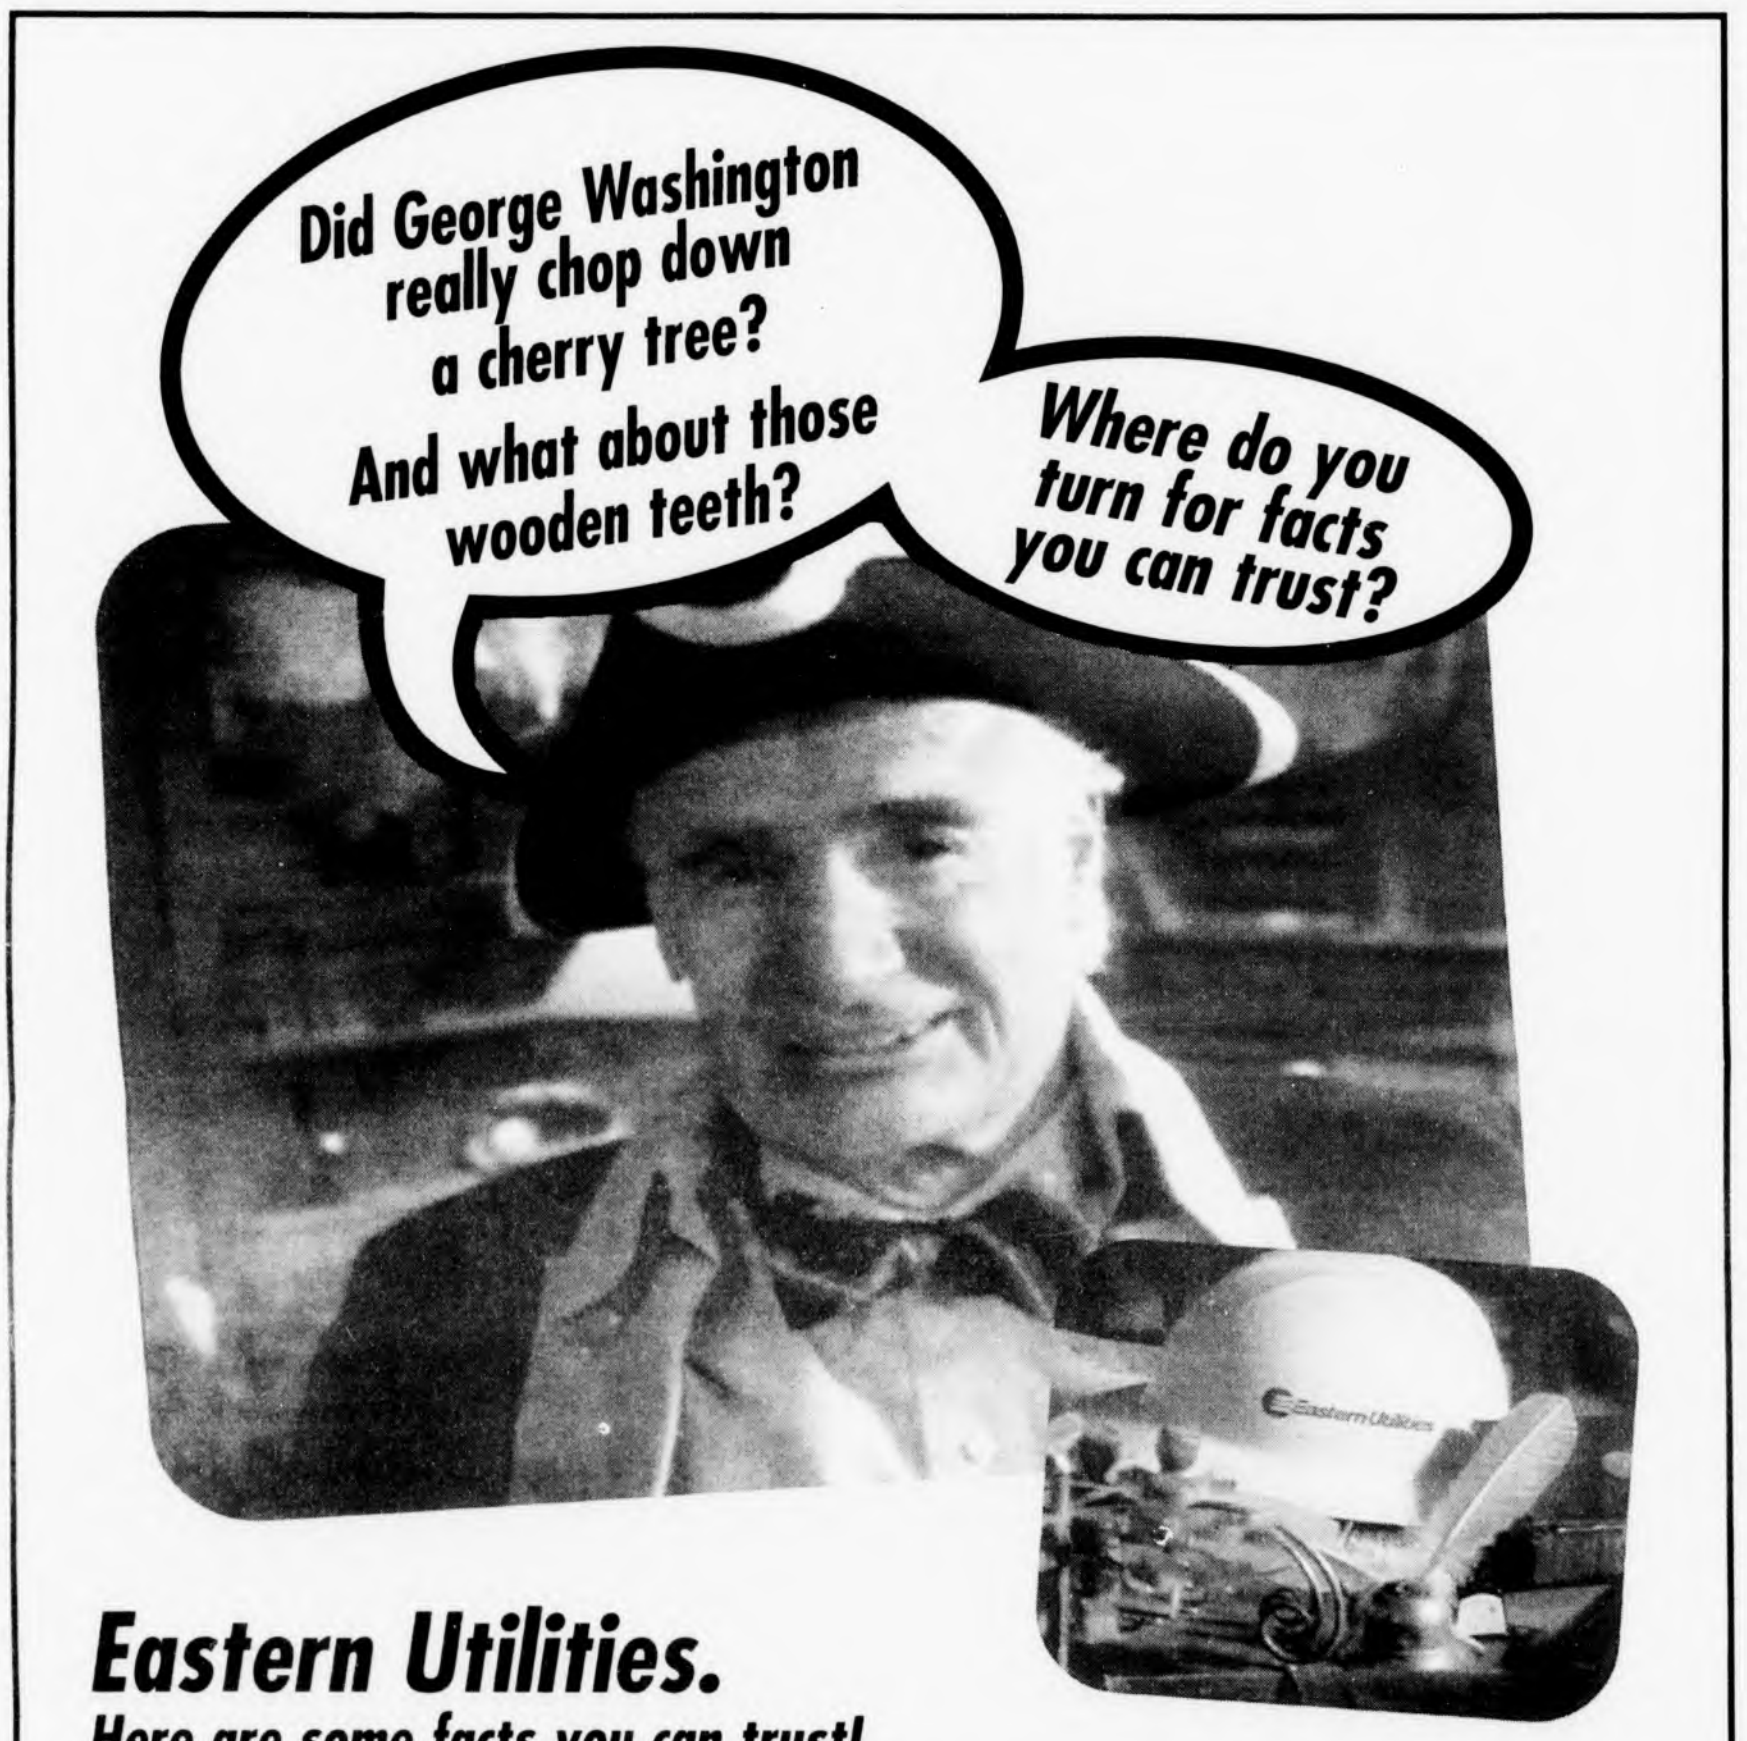
Social Service League provides turkey dinners for needy

As they have for many years, the Social Service League of Cohasset will deliver to needy Cohasset residents a free Thanksgiving dinner, under the direction of longtime member, Barbara Donohue. In conjunction with the Meals-on-Wheels program, which is directed by Jeff Steele, Public Health Nurse Judy Fitzsimmons and licensed social worker Pat Carleton, have posted signup sheets around town and are inquiring discreetly who might be alone and like to have their turkey dinner delivered free of charge to their home.

In discussing the Thanksgiving program at a recent board meeting of the league, members got to reminiscing about the history of the Social Service League — where and how it all began. The league wants to share these highlights with the town to show how the league continues to serve in this, its 86th year.



Founded in 1912, the year Woodrow Wilson was elected President of the United States, the Cohasset Social Service League began with five members, Mrs. Tower, Mrs. Bates, Mrs. Pratt, Mrs. Howe (president) and Mrs. Gammons. Within a week these women recruited 30 additional members. Their motto was "There are those who are lifted and those who lift. This league will lift." They hired a nurse who lived with a Mrs. Gross on Elm Street. The league provided her with a bicycle. At the time, there were 660 registered voters in the town, 69 were women. Prior to 1921, when women's suffrage became fully operative, in Massachusetts women were only allowed to vote for school committee members. There were 30 telephones in Cohasset and horse and buggy was the primary mode of transportation. Of course, there was no radio or TV.

The original purpose of cial Service League was prevent disease in childre. volunteers purchased a horse drawn "barge" or bus to transport residents from Beechwood to Elm Street, where their headquarters were, for keep-well clinics. According to the Cohasset Historical Society archives, the primary diseases handled by the town nurse in 1919 were syphilis, insanity, TB and rickets. The league formed a basket-weaving class for boys and a sewing class for girls. In 1913, they established a branch library at Beechwood and a penny savings bank for children. Since malnutrition was a major problem at the time, they also initiated a school lunch program, served out of the Bates Building. At Christmas, they provided meals for needy families. During the 1918 flu epidemic, nurses made 560-580 home visits in one month. The league bought a Ford runabout so the nurses could make these visits, but the hand crank was a problem. With contributions from the town and local churches, they were able to provide a self-starting automobile.

In the 1930s and '40s the motto of the Social Service League was "To cooperate for the welfare of the people of the town to alleviate poverty, to promote thrift and good health and to help those who are trying to help themselves." A licensed social worker, called a "welfare worker" was hired. Six doctors were asked to join an advisory board. A thrift shop, the original consignment shop, was opened at the community center. The Willcutt Fund was established in the will of Mrs. Mary Hooper in memory of her father, Levi Lincoln Willcutt, to give financial assistance to Protestant couples over 70, who were in want, so that they might live out their lives in dignity in their own homes. This fund exists today serving several local families. The league conducted classes in nursing, pre- and postnatal care and reading help for children. A food pantry was set up during World War II, residents were encouraged to grow and donate produce. The league taught canning and preserving. They provided drivers to take patients to doctor's appointments. They put together an employment bureau, which exists today as the Job Bank. Following World War II, there were many volunteers available to help, as few women worked.

The league thrives today, coordinating delivery of Meals-on-Wheels, overseeing the activities of Judy Fitzsimmons, R.N., the Public Health Nurse, and providing counseling and support groups to Cohasset and its surrounding towns through Pat Carleton, the licensed social worker. The Cohasset Consignment Shop, managed by Andrea Merrill, at Shaw's Plaza is operated solely to benefit the programs of the Social Service League.

For more information about the Social Service League, or to volunteer as a much needed Meals-on-Wheels driver, please stop in the league office at 16 Highland Avenue, or call 383-0771.

Eastern Utilities.

Here are some facts you can trust!

- With deregulation, you will be able to buy electricity from a competitive supplier.
- But Eastern Utilities will still be your distribution or "wires" company.
- We'll still maintain power lines and provide safe reliable service.
- We'll still get you back in power after any storm or other emergency.
- We'll still manage billing and provide customer service.
- We'll still be in our communities — offering safety-education programs to children & adults.
- We'll still offer conservation programs to help you save energy and money.

By the way... Sorry to disappoint – but all evidence points to the fact that the Reverend Mason Locke Weems invented the story of six-year-old George and the cherry tree in his Life of Washington, published in 1880. The hatchet story was added in the fifth edition, published in 1806. Should all share in sewer costs?

Sewer question is before voters Dec. 5

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

What is clear is that hundreds of shoppers — as they have traditionally for years — will flock to the town common Saturday for the annual Village Fair.

But what is in doubt is how many of those will take the time to walk across the common to vote in Saturday's special Prop. 1-/2 election on additional funding for the North Cohasset sewer project.

A "yes" vote supports taxpayer subsidy for 50 percent of the additional cost of the project. A "no" vote means users will pick up the entire additional cost through betterments.

Assistant Town Clerk Jacquelyn McGuire hopes shoppers will meander into the town hall to vote. Otherwise, she said, it's going to be a very long day at the polls, which are open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

"I'll bring my Christmas cards to address or maybe I'll even wrap," joked McGuire.

She said the number of absentee ballots, which is usually a gauge of voter turnout, is very low. As of Monday, only about 30 had voted absentee - in contrast, at the Nov. 3 state election more than 150 absentee ballots were cast.

What's at stake in the election is how the $2.7 million to supplement original funding for the sewer project will be paid for.

Completion of the sewer project is not in jeopardy and will go forward no matter what happens at Saturday's election, said Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild.

A "yes" vote supports taxpayer subsidy for 50 percent of the addi-

Selectmen don't waver on fee for St. Anthony's

Board accused of discrimination

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Despite a firestorm of criticism, a majority of selectmen still stands behind the decision to charge St. Anthony's a building permit fee to construct a new parish hall.

Last month, selectmen voted to change their policy eliminating language allowing the board to pick and choose which non-profit groups to grant waivers to.

The building permit fee for St. Anthony's is estimated at $18,000 or 10 percent of the $1.8 million project, which is now underway. It's the first waiver request to come before the board since establishment of the old policy in 1990 which said the board shall not waive fees for non-profits "as a matter of course" meaning requests should come before selectmen for discussion.

As it turns out, the board might have avoided all the controversy if it had asked for town counsel's opinion first. Town counsel advised selectmen this week that they don't have the right to waive fees of any kind without town meeting approval.

That was little comfort to selectmen Ronnie McMorris, Tom Callahan and Diane Sullivan who were stung by several scathing letters accusing them discrimination and bias. (Selectmen Nan Roth and Merle Brown wanted the fee waived and were opposed to the change in policy).

"This decision is patently discriminatory and should be reversed," wrote Dr. and Mrs. John M. Cahill, 412 S. Main St.

John M. Buckley, 26 Old Coach Road, threatened to gather his family members "to remember your decision on the next Election Day" if the board didn't reconsider.

And Marian C. Atkinson, 59 Highland Ave., said "if reason, fairness and conscience rules at Town Hall - reconsider your biased decision and grant the same waiver to St. Anthony's, as has been granted

Schools ready to work with MCAS results

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The final word on MCAS results is not yet in because the scores have not been distributed to local school districts. But, nevertheless, there's lots of opinion on the statewide results released ten days ago.

While Gov. Paul Cellucci finds the preliminary results unacceptable and the usually cantankerous John Silber, chairman of the state's Board of Education and chancellor of Boston University has taken a non-alarmist approach, educational leaders in Cohasset are ready for whatever comes.

"We're looking for some good information coming from these tests, no matter what the scores are."

— Deer Hill School Principal Paul Callahan

The MCAS exam scores, once they do arrive in Cohasset, will reflect how well teachers, students and administrators are following the Education Reform Act of 1993, and the state's curriculum guidelines.

"I think we're quite optimistic that the students will do reasonably well," said school superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey.

Paul Callahan, Deer Hill principal, is looking forward to the seeing MCAS scores. Deer Hill houses grades four through six.

"We hope to use the scores to see if there are some deficiencies in our methods," said Callahan. "If so, we will fix them. If we see some

Independence Building

The Chamber of Commerce may not be the only one in town interested in the Independence Building on South Main Street below St. Stephen's Church. Selectmen went into executive session this week to discuss the possible sale or lease of the building as allowed under the Open Meeting Law.

Earlier in the meeting, Dean Rizzo, vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, said his group is still interested in the building and would like to turn it into offices, which would include a public restroom.

"We're not in a position to purchase the building but will secure financing to renovate it," Rizzo said.

Haddad said the replacement cost of the building is $110,000, according to the insurance company. It is assessed at $16,000.

Selectmen said they would look at all options before making a recommendation on disposition of the building. A request for proposal would then be drawn up and brought to town meeting, Haddad said.

Until recently, the Independence Building housed the teen center, which moved to the old DPW garage in the town parking lot.

Hurrah for the Skippers!

Selectmen took time out of their busy agenda this week to praise the Cohasset High School Skippers for their victory — the first in 11 years — against Hull on Thanksgiving Day (for game coverage, see sports in this week's Mariner).

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris also pointed out that the girls' varsity field hockey team also had an upset victory against Hull about a month ago.

"Congratulations to our young athletes and coaches and to all who support youth sports in town," McMorris said.

DiNero's manager changed okayed

Selectmen approved a change in manager at DiNero's restaurant this week from Robert J. Infusino to Sandra M. Stilphen. Stilphen, a Weymouth resident, has assisted in the management of DiNero's since 1995. Cohasset police have no reason to request her application as manager be denied, Town Manager Mark Haddad told the board. As the local licensing authority, selectmen must approve a change of manager when a liquor license is involved.

TIPS training a success

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen this week that all liquor license holders in town and their employees who serve or sell liquor have completed TIPS training. Following an incident earlier this year when a license holder sold alcohol to a minor, selectmen made it a condition of license renewals that license holders and their employees undergo training to help them avoid situations involving the abuse of or illegal sale of alcohol. TIPS training is good for three years, Haddad said.

Fire call boxes raises $5K

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town collected more than $5K through the recent sale of more than 100 old fire call boxes.

The money was deposited in a "gift account" to be expended by selectmen.

Selectmen Merle Brown suggested the town spend some of the money to buy a "town flag" to fly below the American flag on the flagpole on the common on special occasions. The other selectmen liked the idea but want Haddad to find out how much the flag would cost. Selectman Tom Callahan said the town should buy two town flags, so the second one could fly on the pole at the high school field.

Haddad said several of the call boxes were given as gifts to places and organizations such as the town hall, fire department, library, Osgood School and historical society.

Treasurer to stay on board

Treasurer/collector Joseph D. Buckley will stay on the job until June 30, 2000, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. Buckley's term as elected treasurer/collector expires April 10. Once his term ends, the post becomes an appointed position by the town manager.

"I am extremely pleased with Joe's performance," Haddad said. "He has computerized the office which has streamlined the operation and has made the office extremely productive.

"Joe also played a key role in the recent upgrade of the town's bond rating. Furthermore, based on his investment decisions, we have seen an increase in investment income," he said.

Haddad said he intended to appoint Buckley to the position based on Buckley's performance and to provide continuity.

"Joe wants to return," he said. "He's willing to serve on a year-to-year basis."

Selectmen unanimously voted to waive their power to reject the appointment making the appointment effective immediately, as allowed under the town manager act.

Buckley's current salary is $46,000. Haddad said he would budget $48,300 for Buckley's salary for FY2000, which starts July 1.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said Buckley has served the town well.

"The town's been lucky to have Joe and is lucky Joe decided to put off his retirement," she said.

How to read the MCAS report card

Experts caution: don't over-react

By Chris Szechenyi
CNC PROJECTS EDITOR

Soon, parents who had children in fourth, eighth or 10th grade last spring will receive a report card that shows how they performed on what some state officials have called "the toughest test ever taken" by students in Massachusetts.

The tests included sections on science, math and English and took students an average of 15 hours to complete, taken over the course of three weeks. They are designed to evaluate how well students are doing in a new, uniform curricula outlined by the state.

Because of the unprecedented level of detail in the tests, it took more than 400 computer programs to sort the results and spin them out into an understandable format that should tell parents where their children stand compared to standards set by other students at the school they attend; compared to the entire local school district; and compared to the level of achievement set by students in the same grade across the state.

Now the challenge may be for parents to interpret the results of their children's performance. To help to explain the new format, the graphic included here offers a sample of a student report that will be provided to students and their parents in December.

According to officials at the state Department of Education, the first part of the report to check will be the overall performance levels each child achieved in math, science and English language arts.

Listed immediately below the student's name, general performance levels include advanced, proficient, in need of improvement or failing. They are designed to describe each child's achievement level in general, summary terms.

On the right is a graphic display that shows where each child's scores fall within those broad categories.

This graphic is designed to show where in a performance category a student scores.

Experts have urged parents to read how each performance level is defined, to explain the new terminology of MCAS and the expectations of each performance level.

In rough terms, an "advanced" score is like an A; "proficient" means a B; "needs improvement" rates a C and "failing" is the equivalent of a D.

For a broader perspective, the bar chart at the bottom of the student report shows how this particular student's performance compares to other students at his or her school; to other students in the school district, and to the state average for the grade.

Experts downplayed the comparative aspect of the report.

"What's important is that your child meets the standards, not whether he or she does better than others," said Rick Atkins, an assessment specialist for the state Department of Education.

Experts have also cautioned parents and others against reading low scores as signs of failure.

"Remember these are the highest standards that schools and students have ever been held to, so they shouldn't be surprised by the scores they receive," said Linda Neri, communications manager for the Massachusetts Coalition for Higher Standards, a non-profit group of 16 school districts. "They shouldn't be alarmed if they're in a lower category than they expected."

This year's test was, in essence, a trial run, an attempt to "set the bar" and identify both deficiencies in the test and in school curricula. For now, parents should consider the test scores "baseline data," Atkins said.

In other words, experts caution, don't over-react.

"The standards are tougher than in the past," Atkins said. "It's going to take time for both schools and students to adjust to the new standards."

To see how each child did within each subject area, the check marks in the middle of the report card break down each test into components. For example, they indicate if a student was weaker or stronger in writing or reading on his English language arts test. So he or she may have been considered "proficient" at English language arts but with an identified weakness in writing. That is designed to help schools target areas for improvement.

"There's a lot here that was never available before - individual results broken down student by student," Neri said. "Previous tests were not based on standards used across the state."

Inevitably, the start of a new, statewide standard means parents and students shouldn't be surprised if many of the report cards are disappointing. But experts agreed that the test is chapter one in an effort to strengthen school programs across Massachusetts

"There should be significant improvement in the next three to five years," Neri said.

Reporting Category for Question 17: Characteristics of Organisms

17. Which is the correct order of the metamorphosis of a butterfly?
A. egg, larva, pupa, adult
B. egg, pupa, larva, adult
C. egg, adult, larva, pupa
D. egg, larva, adult, pupa

Reporting Category for Question 18: Organisms and Environments

18. Which of the following helps the leaves break down after they have fallen off the tree?
A. meat-eaters
B. rocks
C. decomposers
D. cold temperatures

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY, GRADE 8

Reporting Category for Question 5: Characteristics of Organisms

5. Which statement about photosynthesis and respiration is true?
A. Photosynthesis stores energy and respiration releases energy.
B. Respiration stores energy and photosynthesis releases energy.
C. Photosynthesis and respiration are the same process.
D. Photosynthesis and respiration do not have anything do do with energy.

MATHEMATICS, GRADE 8

Multiple-choice Questions, Session 3

Reporting Category for Question 17: Ratio, Proportion, Percent

17. The Massachusetts Department of Employment and Training predicts that 374,000 new jobs will be created in Massachusetts between 1994 and 2005, and about 2 out of 5 of those jobs will require a college education.
Based on the information given above, about how many of the new jobs will require a college education?
A. 37,400
B. 187,000
C. 72,800
D. 149,600

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY, GRADE 10

Open-response questions, Session 3

Reporting Category for Question 35: Position and Motion of Objects

35. A tennis ball is hit over a net.
a. Describe and diagram (using arrows) at least three factors that affect the motion of the tennis ball from the moment it contacts the tennis racket to the moment it is over the net.
b. Choose one factor and discuss how you could change the ball or racket design to alter the effect of this factor on the motion of the ball.

MATHEMATICS, GRADE 10

Reporting Category for Question 16: Algebra

16. Which of the following could be the next step in solving the equation $3(x + 2) = 3 - (x + 1)$?
A. $3x + 6 = 3 - x - 1$
B. $3x + 2 = 3 - x - 1$
C. $3x + 6 = 3 - x + 1$
D. $3x + 5 = 3 - x + 1$

strengths, we will work on those, too. We're looking for some good information coming from these tests, no matter what the scores are."

Still, Malvey has some concerns about a concept that seeks to steer all school districts toward a standard, statewide curriculum.

"I think conceptually it's a terrific idea," allowed Malvey. "But there will be a lot of questions in terms of the amount of time it takes away from instructional classes to run the test. If MCAS serves as a catalyst to address overall curriculum, that's good. Certainly, we want students to achieve well on tests such as this, but each town has their own culture, interests and what they view as a broad based education. I hope we don't naturally define our school curriculum based only on this test."

According to Callahan, MCAS was a tough testing situation which left fourth-graders dealing with the stress seniors experience with the SATs.

"There is a lot of hype about how poor the scores will be," he said. "It was a new test for all the students and a difficult one. I really don't know how well they will do. I'm concerned not only with the fourth grade scores. If the eight grade scores show some problems, then fifth- and sixth-grade curriculum will need some changes."

"I think conceptually it's a terrific idea, but there will be a lot of questions in terms of the amount of time it takes away from instructional classes to run the test. If MCAS serves as a catalyst to address overall curriculum, that's good."

Dr. Edward Malvey,
School Superintendent

A parent information night is scheduled for Dec. 16 at the Deer Hill school, to go over the scores with parents and discuss changes in curriculum to address whatever weakness may show on exams.

"It took 13 days for them to test," said Callahan, about the comprehensive MCAS exam. "If you've looked at the samples that were in the paper, you look at the fourth grade ones—you're an adult looking at them. Imagine a nine-year-old looking at that."

Callahan argues that some of the questions were difficult, ambiguous and not easy for a fourth-grader to understand.

Moreover, the test itself may have been too grueling.

"I think we need to realize that the testing situation was a lot to put them through," he said. "High school kids are burnt out from SATs. For the fourth-graders, it's (expected to take) 45 minutes to complete the test but we told them they could have as much time as they needed."

According to Callahan, that time extended to as long as an hour and a half.

"That is a long time for a child to spend on a test," he said.

Ruth Fennessey, Curriculum Coordinator, will be working on making curriculum changes based on the MCAS results.

Open-ended questions which are responded to in essay form are expected to need some review.

"Overall, I'm looking to see the curriculum strengthened across the state," said Callahan "Testing itself is always beneficial. But if a teacher gives a test and every child fails, then you need to figure out why. The concept of testing is its ultimate purpose; to make sure that children understand what they're being taught."

Parents will be kept up to date on the issue, according to Malvey.

"We're gearing up in terms of public presentations at the different schools plus we'll have a remediation plan," he said. "To the extent that we may need some assistance in areas where students haven't done as well, we'll be prepared to come forward with recommendations."

Should taxpayers share in sewer costs?

tional cost of the project. A "no" vote means users will pick up the entire additional cost through betterments.

A Prop. 2-1/2 debt exclusion is needed in this case because the additional cost cannot be absorbed within the tax cap.

This is the third time in as many years that a sewer override has come before the voters. A ballot question asking for 50/50 shared town/user funding for the North Cohasset project narrowly failed in 1996. A ballot question, which included both the North and Central Cohasset projects, subsequently passed in 1997.

But at that time, sewering North Cohasset was expected to cost $6.6 million. However, bids for the project came in about 40 percent higher than expected - resulting in more than a year of wrangling among town officials and residents on what to do about the $2.7 million cost overrun.

Months of debate ended in October when, in a vote of 238-36,the special town meeting overwhelmingly supported the 50 percent taxpayer subsidy contingent on a ballot vote.

Yet despite town meeting's support, Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, is still nervous.

Plante has been a relentless campaigner for fairness for the residents of North Cohasset.

"I hope people remember this is a municipal project answering the call from the state to clear up a mandate," said Plante, who has been going door to door to help educate her neighbors about the project.

The town is under a court order to solve its wastewater woes and faces steep fines if it doesn't comply.

If Saturday's ballot questions passes, the tax impact on a home assessed at $341,000 will be about $19.21 a year for 20 years. If that home is in North Cohasset, the cost per year will be $568.20 per year not including annual operation and maintenance costs of $400 per year.

If the question fails, the cost to taxpayers (excluding those in North Cohasset) will be zero. But a homeowner of a $341,000 house in North Cohasset would pay $733.35 a year, not counting operation and maintenance costs.

The project, which will connect about 320 "dwelling units" via a sewer main to the Hull treatment plant, will be paid in full at the end of 20 years. (Hookups include houses, condos and apartments.) Installing the sewer main in North Cohasset — known as Phase One of the project — is being paid for with part of the original $6.6 million appropriation. North Cohasset homes will be hooked up to the sewer main via a pump system due to the high amount of ledge. This type of system is more complicated and expensive than the gravity system slated for Central Cohasset, which includes about 660 "dwelling units" and is estimated to cost about $13 million.

Plante said she is frustrated by those who say, "it's not going to benefit me, it's your sewer" and won't support the 50-50 funding plan.

"We shouldn't be left out on a limb, the project is a municipal one," she said. "How would they like it if I said, 'it's your library - I go to Hingham's.'"

Selectmen don't waiver on fee for St. Anthony's to all other non-profit projects in the past."

Selectmen were receptive to putting the matter before town meeting. Town counsel sent the board a copy of a Nantucket by-law that gives selectmen there the authority to grant fee waivers.

"I see a value in putting it to town meeting to see if residents wish selectmen to have that authority whether we exercise it or not," she said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said a quick survey of some other towns, such as Hingham and Duxbury, revealed they never waived fees except for town buildings.

Haddad said the town did not charge the teen center, Lightkeepers residence or DPW garage, permit fees because they are town buildings.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who is Catholic, said her vote was not discriminatory.

"We are sympathetic to the issue but we cannot waive the fee due to town policy. It is not discrimination based on religion."

— Selectman Diane Sullivan

"I support town policy," she said.

Sullivan said while she was concerned about the amount of the fee being charged St. Anthony's, after talking with the building inspector she was satisfied that building permit fees in town are assessed fairly.

She also pointed out that in FY98, the town collected $63,418 in building permit fees. The total amount to run the building department that same year was $63,536.

"It was virtually a wash," she said.

In a normal year, the town only collects about $30K in fees, she said. FY98 was a big year due to the development of Sunrise Assisted Living and other projects.

"We are sympathetic to the issue but we cannot waive the fee due to town policy," she said. "It is not discrimination based on religion."

Callahan said he was also taken aback by the charge of discrimination.

"If anything is discriminatory, it is singling out any group of private property owners (for special treatment)," he said.

Two weeks ago, Francis Collins of South Main Street came to the selectmen's meeting to ask them to reconsider. He said that in the past other churches in town were granted waivers.

"We are the only church in town not to have undertaken a big project," he said. "I hate to think your policy is discriminating."

He said the parish hall would have been built years ago except the sewer issue had to be resolved.

"I am dismayed and upset that St. Anthony's is not afforded the same waiver as everyone else and I ask you to reconsider," he said.

Latest gas leak on Linden Drive sparks concern

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The latest in a series of gas leaks on Linden Drive forced school children to board an ambulance Tuesday morning to get to their waiting school bus a block away.

This is the third incident of its kind on the residential street, which has resulted in one worker's license suspension, as well as a growing concern about the number of gas leaks that have occurred there since contractors from D&C Construction of Rockland began to connect residents to the sewer.

Students normally picked up by their school bus on Linden Drive were instead transported by ambulance for safety reasons, according to Cohasset Fire Captain Mark Trask, who was on the scene that day.

Also on the scene was an investigator from the state Department of Public Safety, notified by a neighbor distressed by the number of visits to the street by Boston Gas officials, as well as the previous gas leak.

According to Trask, the area had been marked in accordance with DIG SAFE's guidelines, which require 72 hours of notification prior to excavation work so that utility companies can mark potentially dangerous lines to avoid when digging. Ted Guild, sewer commission chairman, said that DIG SAFE had been contacted in advance and that the gas line had a marker to signal its location.

Several officials have said that contractor Joseph DeGiacomo has had his license suspended. According to Guild, DeGiacomo had been involved in "several gas leaks in town."

However, Dan Coughlin, spokesman for Tutela Engineering who is supervising the project for the town, said that DeGiacomo was, in a sense, only peripherally involved in some of those incidents

"Over the summer, one worker drilled through a line while pre-drilling," he said. "There was an earlier leak, too, but that was only a service connection. Both of those leaks happened on unmarked lines."

DeGiacomo was not actually the one who hit the gas line on Tuesday, according to Coughlin.

"I don't think Joe was even the person who was involved with the break," he said. "They had three crews working in the same area. I guess the gist of it is that he had been the operator previously on this project for some time so all the previous breaks in the gas main were listed with his name. But it was done by another operator who is still on the job."

Guild and Coughlin said DeGiacomo will get a hearing with the state Department of Public Safety.

"With what happened there, I don't have any problem with anyone being overly cautious at this stage of the game. It's understandable. We don't want what happened in Hingham to happen in Cohasset. That's our primary concern."

— Dan Coughlin, Tutela engineering

One explanation for the high rate of gas leaks offered by Guild is that contractors are contending with "ledge and shallow gas and water pipes in the area."

The difficult terrain on Linden Drive, according to Guild, is partly why the contractors called on Boston Gas to visit the site a number of times to properly clarify where lines were located. Those repeated visits, Guild surmises, prompted some residents to believe that gas leaks were the issue.

Coughlin sums the leaks up as a "really difficult situation," for Boston Gas and the contractors, because "Boston Gas doesn't always know where their gas lines are," he explained.

Typically, gas lines are two feet below the ground's surface. For that reason, contractors generally tear up the first foot of pavement and then excavate the remainder with hand tools.

"We have found one gas line four inches below the surface and yesterday's line was about 18 inches below the surface," said Coughlin. "I'm not trying to defend the contractor, either—it was marked yesterday."

Tutela Engineering will continue what Coughlin calls "construction observation," where the company can help direct if the contractors need to do work that strays outside of specifications.

"The contractors are trying to finish up the work as soon as possible," said Coughlin "I know people are upset with what happened in Hingham with the Crowleys' home."

Last week, a construction worker from Albanesi D&S Contractors of Malden, who was in the process of connecting the Crowleys' home on Canterbury Street to a sewer hookup, pulled up a natural gas line to the house. The homeowners escaped with only the clothing they were wearing and their cat and dog.

"With what happened there, I don't have any problem with anyone being overly cautious at this stage of the game.," Couglin said. "It's understandable. We don't want what happened in Hingham to happen in Cohasset. That's our primary concern. Consequently, we will assign a Tutela supervisor to each of the two crews operating in the Linden Drive area and elsewhere as conditions require."

Warrant deadlines

Selectmen voted to open the warrant for the March 27 annual town meeting this week. The warrant will close on Jan. 14. The deadline for citizen petition articles is Jan. 11.

Litchfield contract is extended

Town Manager Mark Haddad said this week that he has extended DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield's contract for one additional year until June, 30, 2000.

Cancer Society's Relay for Life to return in May

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Despite past objections from high school neighbors, the school committee unanimously approved the American Cancer Society's request to hold its third annual Relay for Life this May on the high school track.

Briarwood Road resident Henry Rattenbury described inconveniences of the all-night event to the school committee and suggested that it be moved elsewhere.

Last year, a petition signed by Rattenbury and 18 of his neighbors complained about the loud music, lights and general noise level of the event.

In the past, cancer society officials attempted to address the neighbors' complaints by softening the lights, turning speakers downward and in toward the high school field and setting up a quiet time from 10 p.m. to 9 a.m.

Another accommodation was an offer from the cancer to society to treat Rattenbury and his wife to dinner and a night at a motel; an offer Rattenbury said he declined out of loyalty to his neighbors.

Mary Shepherd, an American Cancer Society South Shore Unit's field executive, and longtime volunteer Al Odermatt were present at the meeting and responded to Rattenbury's complaints.

"This does a lot of good and it's only for one night," said Odermatt.

School committee members seemed to agree.

"We will try to respect their privacy and keep it as quiet as we can. We're there to raise money and Cohasset has been really supportive. Hopefully, the changes we will make will make the evening an easier one for the neighbors."

—Mary Shepherd,
American Cancer Society

"Can't you put up with it for one night?" asked Mark DeGiacomo.

Shepherd said the cancer society would do its best to alleviate the problems raised by the neighbors.

"It's an unfortunate situation," said Shepherd. "We will try to respect their privacy and keep it as quiet as we can. We're there to raise money and Cohasset has been really supportive. Hopefully, the changes we will make will make the evening an easier one for the neighbors. Maybe they will even get involved at some point, though if they don't, we understand."

Society members will gather for their first planning committee meeting on Dec. 16 to discuss some of the changes Shepherd agreed to in response to Rattenbury's complaints and school committee members' suggestions.

Two police officers will be on hand from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. to curb any youthful exuberance.

According to Rattenbury, "blood-curdling screams" were heard about 2 or 3 a.m. last year during the overnight event.

The Relay for Life will be held at Cohasset High School on May 21 and 22 with eight- to 12-member teams from corporations, clubs, schools, families and neighborhoods, represented by at least one walker or runner on the track for 24 hours. Team members may camp out in tents amid a celebratory atmosphere that includes music, food, games and a general camaraderie.

The 3 p.m. to 3 p.m. relay will hold two special ceremonies; a 6 p.m. opening ceremony with survivors walking the first lap, and a 9 p.m. luminaria ceremony to honor all who have dealt with cancer. Candles will burn through the night and illuminate the track for team members making their laps there through the night.

The Cohasset-based relay amassed $40,000 for the society last year, which is why it would prefer to keep the event here.

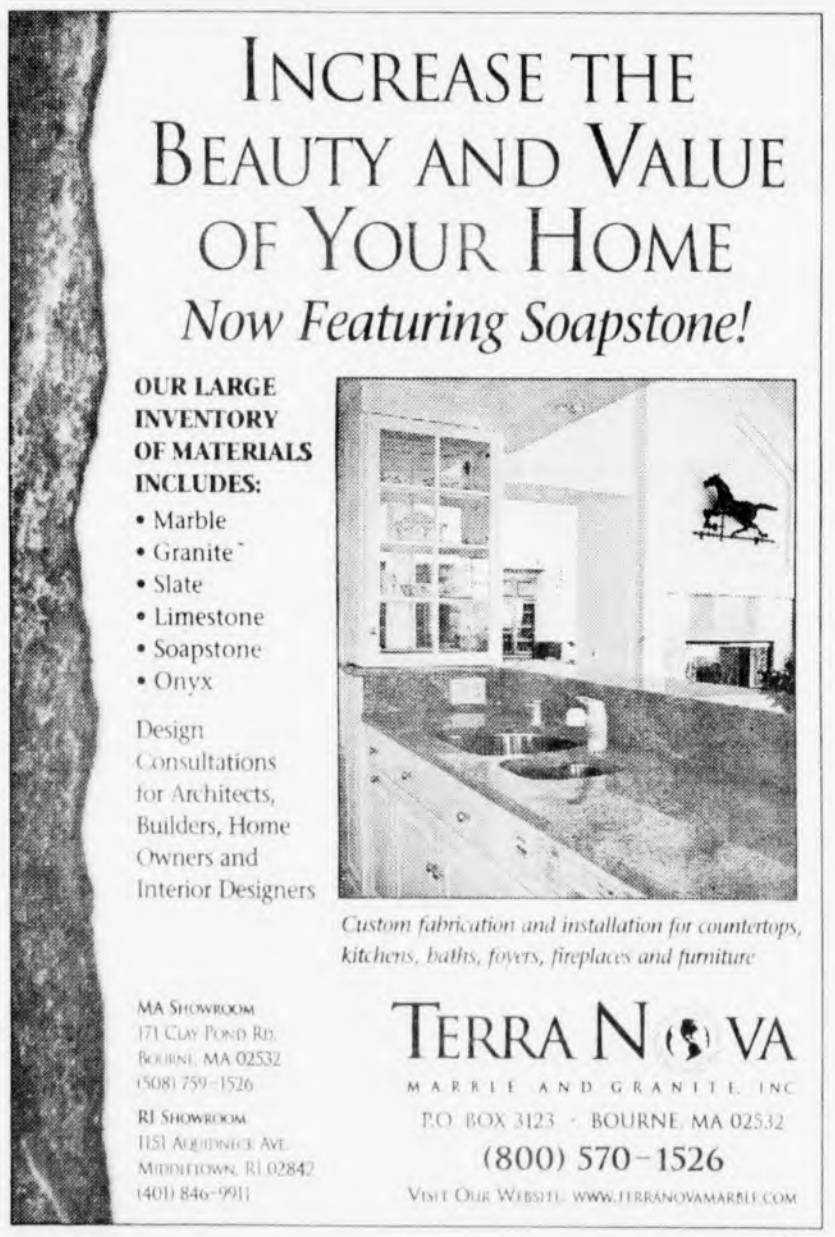
Chairman Richard Shea had suggested that the overnight be put aside, but Shepherd felt that the event would not have the same continuity for people that way, and that some might not return the following day.

Besides the two police officers on hand from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m., the society will also cut off the music by 9 p.m.

Shepherd said that the society would attempt to get parents to supervise more, too.

A disappointed Rattenbury, a six-year cancer survivor himself, did not trust that the noise level could be contained in an overnight situation. He stated that he lost a renter due to last year's festivities.

"He told me that he did not know that he would have to put up with that kind of noise," said Rattenbury.



Still, committee members Kathy Ofsthun and DeGiacomo said that the society had made concessions in the past and had offered to do more this year.

Anyone interested in volunteering can call Mary Shepherd, field executive for the South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society, at (508) 584-9600, ext. 229.

Christmas tree sale fund-raiser

First Parish in Cohasset is again offering fresh cut Christmas trees to be picked up the morning of the Village Fair, Dec. 5, 9 to 11:30 a.m., at the Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main St., or the following day, Sunday, noon. to 1 p.m.

Trees from 5 to 9 feet tall will be sold for $35. Buyers may choose from a nice selection of treesCall 383-9845 to order or for more information. Pre-orders are being taken.

Metco holiday wreath sale

The Cohasset Metco Committee is selling balsam holiday wreaths as a fund-raiser again this year. The wreaths are double-faced and are standard, door size (22"). The wreaths will be supplied by growers who furnish fashionable nurseries, yet will cost only $10 each.

The holiday wreaths will be pre-ordered. All order forms and checks should be returned to the secretaries of Osgood and Deer Hill Schools or to Metco coordinator Yvonne Jones at Cohasset High School before Friday, Dec. 4. The wreaths will be available for pick-up at the Cohasset High School gym Saturday, Dec. 5, (the first day of recreation basketball tryouts) from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Decorative, handmade bows will be available for the customers' convenience on that day as well.

Last year's second annual wreath sale made more than $1,600, which funded the Metco scholarship for graduating seniors. The Cohasset Metco Committee and the participating Boston families thank you for your support of the Metco program which provides such positive results for all of us in the community.

Please call Metco PSO representative Connie Afshar at 383-6006 or Jean Hajjar at 383-9917 for more information.

Senior citizens can defer sewer betterments

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Many senior citizens know they have the option to defer their local property taxes if they meet certain income and age guidelines. Basically, senior citizens 65 or older earning less than $40,000 can defer all or part of their property taxes, up to 50 percent of their income, until they die or sell the property. The town places a lien on the house and sets up an account tracking the amount of tax money deferred including an eight percent annual interest cost. If the person dies, the taxes must be paid. A surviving spouse who is also a senior citizen may be able to continue deferring taxes. If a descendant inherits the property, the lien must be paid. It's a great program that helps senior citizens struggling to pay property taxes on fixed incomes.

But what many senior citizens may not know is that they can also defer sewer betterments. The board of selectmen had planned to place an article on next year's town meeting warrant creating a sewer betterment deferral program. That was until Deputy Assessor Cheryl Pooler said that the town already set up a sewer betterment deferral program in 1996.

"This is a very helpful program for senior citizens," Pooler said. "The sewer projects generate big bills, and most senior citizens don't have that kind of money. This legislation goes along with the tax deferral program. The deferral of the sewer betterments qualifies under that."

"The sewer projects generate big bills, and most senior citizens don't have that kind of money. This legislation goes along with the tax deferral program. The deferral of the sewer betterments qualifies under that."
— Deputy Assessor Cheryl Pooler

According to Treasurer/Collector Joseph Buckley, senior citizens can take advantage of the program as soon as the town issues the first betterments for the new sewer projects. He expects the first betterments to appear in fiscal year 2000. Buckley said the program will help senior citizens struggling to pay taxes, sewer bills and now betterments.

"A lot of people get older and still have this large house without the income to afford it," Buckley said. "Everything is in place for sewer betterment deferrals. Senior citizens just have to apply."

The sewer betterment deferral program is set up in the same way as the tax deferment plan. Senior citizens can defer both property taxes and sewer betterments if that's what they want to do. They can defer some or all of their taxes and betterments within the program guidelines.

Buckley said he has favored a sewer betterment deferral program for many years. The only drawback is that many senior citizens don't use the program.

"A lot of people don't like to do it because they feel like they're taking away something from their families," Buckley said. "But it's a great program that allow people to stay in the homes they grew up in."

Selectmen Diane Sullivan is a strong supporter of the program. She said she worries about senior citizens struggling to pay property taxes, sewer operating costs, and betterments.

"This is a wonderful thing," Sullivan said. "I don't want to see our senior citizens driven out of town because they can't afford these bills. One problem is that people don't want to avail themselves of this program because they don't want other people to know they're struggling or that they have a lien on their houses. But its done through the treasurer/collector's office and no one else would know."

More information about guidelines and eligibility is available through the treasurer/collector's office in town hall.

Make your mark on Cohasset history

In 1898 Cohasset published the Narrative History of Cohasset written by E. Victor Bigelow describing the town and the people of the time. Today that book is treasured by all who live here and own it.

In 1956 Cohasset published Volume II of the Narrative History of Cohasset written by Burtram J. Pratt describing the town and the people of the first half of the 20th Century. Today that book is treasured by all who live here and own it.

In 2001 Cohasset will publish Volume III of the Narrative History of Cohasset written by Jacqueline M. Dormitzer describing the town and its people today. That book too will be treasured by future generations.

You can be part of this wonderful heritage...

The Committee on Town History is extending an invitation to town residents to contribute to this effort in a number of ways. You can decide on which of the following you would like to do:

- Be a sponsor and have your name permanently recorded as a major benefactor of Cohasset.
- Be a contributor and have your name included in the book for future generations to see.
- Order advance copies of the Volume III of the Narrative History of Cohasset at a reduced price.
- Secure copies of Volume I and Volume II of the Narrative History of Cohasset while they are still available.

SALESMAN

Every Friday afternoon a salesman from the plumbing supply house in Boston would pay his visit to inform us of the specials that he might have on sale, and to see if he could sell us more products. This particular salesman was of the sort who tried to force things on you; and we had often ended up ordering far more than we generally needed. Needless to say we hated to see him come in the door. His grating personality and his lack of cleanliness added to our amazement that he was a salesman at all. Anyway one notable Friday we spotted him coming across the street from the parking lot. I quickly locked the door and the secretary and I hid behind the oak knee-hole desk. We heard him knock at the door then tap on the window and try the latch. We said nothing and then waited a few more minutes to make sure that he had left. Just then the back door opened and there stood the salesman staring at the two of us hiding beneath the desk. My secretary quickly remarked that we had dropped something or other and we were looking for it. He said he was delivering a part that one of the men had ordered and he had left it out back. We felt a little sheepish then, but he didn't bat an eye. He still came every Friday.

AROUND TOWN

WAY TO GO, SKIPPERS!

What a way to start Thanksgiving Day! The Skippers beat the Pirates, something that hasn't happened in a long time (YEAH!); the weather held off so that the dedication of "The Rock," thanking all who made the field possible, was wonderful, and there were people there who hadn't been to a game in some time — there were lots of "legendary" families present, the Keatings, Durkins, Mahoneys, Whitmans, Dooleys, Meers, Evans, Fioris, Sinopolis, Youngs and McCarthys, to name a few.

50/50 RAFFLE

As is the case at all football games, the Gridiron Club held a 50-50 raffle, and Brian Keating was the winner — he and his wife Terry (Prescott) donated it back to the Cohasset football program! That's the kind of people they are (the Keatings) and that's the kind of day it was! Hope that all of you had a wonderful one, too!

NEW ARRIVAL

We know of one family that had an exciting day; the McDonalds! Paulina and John McDonald had a baby girl Oct. 14, Rose Marie McDonald. She weighed 6 pounds 3 ounces, and joins 3-year-old twins, John and Hope, and her brother, Christopher, 2 years old! Rose's maternal grandparents are Mary and James Rosano of Cohasset; her paternal grandparents are Maryann and James McDonald. Can you imagine the activity around that Thanksgiving table? What fun!

KEATING CLAN

1998 CHS REUNION

The Class of 1998 CHS is planning their 10th reunion, to be held at the Cohasset Lightkeepers House, the day after Christmas from 6 to 10 p.m. The committee hopes that you will read this and help them to find the following people they have been unable to locate . . . they are: Greg Baker, Dan Bickerstaff, Scott Caristo, Ed Hayes, Rich Hynes, Dennis Leary, Joe Marks, Joe Mazza, Michelle Meagher, Samantha Platt, Bill Reed and Twilda Shenette. If you know of the whereabouts of any of these folks, give Abby (Adams) Greer a call at 383-3271. They thank you in advance!

GET SERIOUS ABOUT SHOPPING

After Thanksgiving the "serious" shopping begins — start off your list with a stop to the Village Fair, which will be held this Saturday (Dec. 5 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.). You'll be able to decorate your tree with items purchased from the boutique, books from the book sale, anything and everything from the White Elephant table, cheese from Cabot Vermont . . . the list goes on! People come from everywhere to attend this fair, it has gained a terrific reputation!

Hats off to all of the hard workers who make it possible.

There will also be a "secret room" for kiddos to do their shopping, and Santa will be there!

After the fair, continue on downtown to finish off your list! Flemings has once again outdone itself with all of the wonderful things they have, you'll love it! Donna Green is across the street, her works are as awesome as ever! Then, head around the corner and work your way up the street — when you are through, you can have a nice hot bowl of chowder at the Second Congregational Church as your personal reward! Have fun!

A LIVING LEGEND

Guess who was spotted last week, looking like a million dollars — Louis Bailey! He was walking around the track at Alumni Field at quite a clip, his surgery last July certainly paid off! Louis did so much for this town in his "heyday," it is so nice to see him feeling so chipper. In our eyes, he is another "living legend," loved by all who know him!

ON THE MEND

We are happy to report that Norm Brown is home, and that he is feeling much better! Keep up your good work, Norm!

BEST KEPT SECRET

The South Shore Art Center is one of the best kept secrets around for the holidays — your children can surely be thrilled with their offerings — for the next three weeks they are offering lots of classes and workshops for all, including making ornaments from clay (both stamped and free form), drawing, painting, creating goodies, the list goes on! The PreK-K workshop will meet Monday, Dec. 7 and 14, from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Grades 1 to 3 will meet Thursday, Dec 10 and 17, from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Call the Art Center at 383-ARTS to register or for more information. I don't know about you, but the best presents we receive are those made with love by our little ones!

REMEMBER TO VOTE

I have been asked to remind one and all to vote on the override this Saturday — your vote will determine how the $2.7 million needed to complete the North Cohasset sewer project will be paid back. If the override passes, the cost will be divided between the users and all taxpayers. If it fails, the users will pay back 100 percent of the cost through betterments.

JOLLY NEWS WANTED

That's the news for this week — 'tis the season for tons of news, so keep in touch! We love to hear your jolly happenings!

HITTING ABOVE THE BELT

Weightlifters and delivery people sometimes wear wide leather belts to support their midsections and avert strains. However, new research suggests that their trust in these belts may be misplaced. According to a study performed at the Albany Medical Center in New York, men who wore the supportive belts and those who did not had similar numbers of injuries and strength gains after lifting. Yet, those men who lifted without the belts had stronger abdominals and lower backs than the belted group. These muscles contract naturally during lifting to buttress the midriff and build a stronger torso. Those who lift heavy objects at work or play would do better to invest in a chiropractic evaluation than a leather support belt.

Do you lift weights or heavy objects? Should you be wearing a back belt? Let us at SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC help you decide. We will be happy to answer any questions you may have. Chiropractic care is an effective way to provide relief from pain associated with such conditions as lower back pain, headaches, and many others. Call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment and let us help you take control of your health. Our safe and gentle adjusting methods offer you relief from pain as well as restored function and mobility of affected joints. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor.

P.S. The tips that heavy-lifters receive from the chiropractor can help them prolong their careers and sustain their health.

Being put to the test

The release of scores of the state's first comprehensive assessment system tests — better known as the MCAS tests — has brought fear to the education world. Students fear they may fail. Parents fear their children will have their sense of accomplishment dampened by low scores. Teachers fear they will be charged with failing to teach effectively. School administrators fear they will be blamed for not managing their schools successfully. Community residents fear low scores will devalue schools systems that have earned glowing reputations in the past.

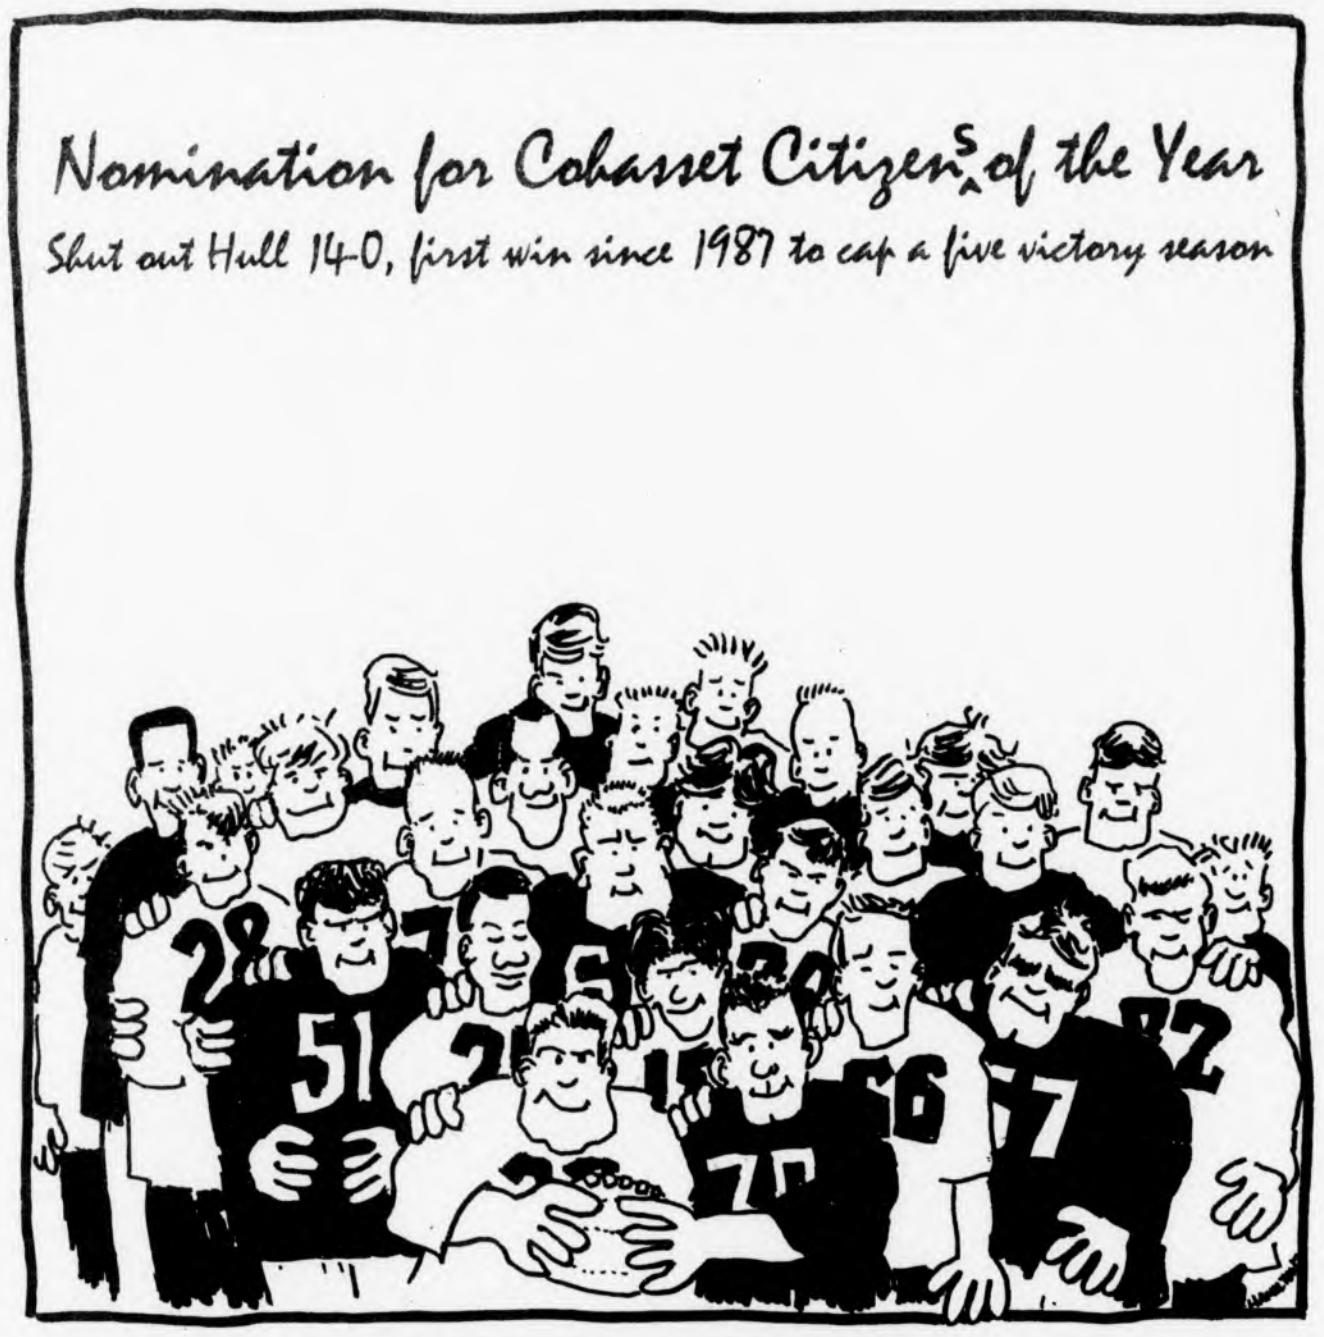
What would serve us all better than these fears will be a reminder about the nature and the goal of this examination.

The MCAS test represents a brave and important first step in the direction of a better education system. It boldly conceives of all the schools in Massachusetts as part of one interlocked system, and affirms that a single set of expectations will make it possible to serve all the children of the commonwealth better in the years to come.

It is a necessary part of the current effort to reform the education process, setting a high standard that we should expect all of our children to attain.

Of course students will score low on this first test. A state-wide test that showered easy approval of current accomplishments would hardly serve to drive improvement. But because the test offers a detailed format that means each student performance can be closely scrutinized, it is more than a simple score. In the hands of educators who accept the challenge, it is the start of an individualized lesson plan that will let teachers and parents target each student's relative weaknesses.

It will help teachers and parents set realistic goals for a better curriculum.



And the MCAS test will make it possible for a realistic assessment of the relative strengths of each school district, as well.

Some of this will be unpleasant information, but it will all be important and necessary, the first step to improvement.

Today we have a landscape that is sharply differentiated by performance and reputation into school systems that range from very successful to those that offer great opportunity for improvement. The heart of the MCAS test reflects the importance of local control and local accountability, but islands of successful school systems will not be enough to serve us in the future. We need one consistent set of standards that demands a great performance from each of our young people, and that gives each the support needed to get there.

We hope that educators, parents, taxpayers — everyone with a stake in the future of public education will accept the first MCAS scores in the right spirit.

They are the first big step on a long journey to stronger schools across the commonwealth.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

DA-elect Keating appreciates support

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to thank the voters of Cohasset for their support during the recent elections. Thanks in large part to the strong show of support here and across the South Shore, I was elected to the office of Norfolk County District Attorney.

When I take office in January, I hope to bring a new energy and a new focus to the office while maintaining the high standards of professionalism that will ensure safer schools and streets throughout Norfolk County.

As District Attorney, I will work to establish a Norfolk County Anti-Crime Council, modeled after the Statewide Council I was appointed to by Mike Dukakis. The Council will benefit from the participation and contributions of professionals in a wide range of fields, including police, corrections officials, domestic violence prevention advocates, school teachers and administrators and medical professionals. The Council will draw on the expertise of these community leaders, as will my office, to develop new and innovative methods of preventing and combating domestic violence, hate crimes, violent drug crimes and other violations.

Again, I thank the people of Cohasset for availing me this opportunity to bring my experiences and knowledge as a legislator to the challenging role of District Attorney. I look forward to serving you for the first time in this new capacity.

William R. Keating
District Attorney Elect, Norfolk County

St. Anthony's should be granted waiver

SELECTMEN:

I have lived in Cohasset for forty years, with pride...until now. I had always believed it to be an educated community that reflected values; and although of different philosophies and beliefs, a sense of unity, equity and fairness toward all existed.

To my dismay and great disillusionment...I find that bias is alive and well in Cohasset.

Your recent decision to deny a waiver to St. Anthony's Church on its building permit fee for a Parish Center, that will benefit not only the youth of St. Anthony's, but also the general community in Cohasset, brings only one word to mind...discrimination.

In the past...all non-profit communities have been grated a waiver. Why not now? Why at this point in time, when all other religious and non-denominational efforts have received this benefit, do we now decide to rule against the waiver for the Catholic Community and to henceforth strike the phrase in the previous policy?

I have been privileged to be an educator in the Cohasset Schools for 25 years and have taught and celebrated diversity within our community. Is all of this negated as we witness our "governing board" blatantly discriminate against the parish of St. Anthony with an arbitrary dollar value placed on a building which will be utilized to strengthen those values which make Cohasset the cohesive community it strives to be?

Please — if reason, fairness, conscience and intelligence rules at Town Hall — reconsider your biased decision and grant the same waiver to St. Anthony's, as have been granted to all other non-profit projects in the past.

Mrs. Marian C. Atkinson

New paramedic on board

Town Manager Mark Haddad hired the town's first certified EMT/paramedic to fill the vacancy on the fire department.

Haddad offered the position to Laura Morrison of Pembroke contingent on her passing the physical agility test for firefighter candidates and a physical examination. She should be able to start work by the end of the month and would have to attend the firefighters' academy, Haddad said.

Morrison is a certified paramedic and currently works for a private ambulance service that provides emergency medical service for the town of Marshfield.

Haddad said her references and background check "were outstanding."

He said hiring the first paramedic is an important step.

"In order to start a paramedic division within the fire department, we have committed to hiring certified paramedics when a vacancy occurs," he said. "Our goal is to hire eight paramedics."

Haddad said Morrison's salary would be about $36,000.

HEALTH NOTES

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

Social Service League Programs

There are all kinds of leagues: The League of Nations, The Arab League , Little League, etc., but one league about which there's no doubt is the Social Service League of Cohasset. Funded primarily by the Consignment shop at Cushing Plaza, it provides Counseling and outreach to needy citizens. Its volunteers deliver Elder Services Meals on Wheels - hot, well balanced meals to Cohasset's elders.

But perhaps one of the busiest offices in Cohasset is the League's Nursing Services unit sponsored by your Board of Health and staffed by the Town Nurse, Judy Fitzimmons. Judy manages the 'Keep Well' clinics held twice a month which do blood pressure screening, weight, blood sugar testing, and provides nutritional education.

At this time of year, Judy is giving free Flue and Pneumococcus shots for those at risk.

Pneumococcus disease kills more people in the US than other vaccine preventable diseases combined. It is especially dangerous for at-risk groups such as elders and those with long term health problems such as heart or lung disease or diabetes.

If you're 65 or older, or have a condition which may lower your resistance to disease, meet Judy at the nurse's office at Saint Stephen's Church and get a free health review and a Pneumococcus shot. It could save serious complications this winter.

Judy Fitzsimmons, Town Nurse

Invasion of the Acronyms

Our lives are threatened by words we can't even pronounce: HDTL's, PCB's MTBE, etc.,

Only last week, MTBE was reported as infiltrating our water supply, and threatening our health. Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether is an aromatic which has replaced benzene in 'reformulated' gasoline. Many organic hydrocarbons are bad news: Benzene is a known heavy duty carcinogen; one of many including naphtha, and carbon tetrachloride all of which were used in our past with unconscious abandon. Apparently, MTBE is very little better.

True, all these compounds threaten our water supply, and the threat is very real. But the problem is ignorance about how these things get in our water, and how rapidly they travel when they get there.

Most hydrocarbons: oils, lubricants, solvents, etc., are lighter than water. When they enter the ground, they float on top of the water table. Many of the aromatics have very low viscosity, and therefore can travel much faster than the water they are floating on. You've seen a drop of oil spread on a pond. It seems that in no more than a second, the colorful rainbow sheen is many yards wide. Underground, on our water table, the same thing happens. The velocity of flow of low viscosity hydrocarbons floating on our water table can be more than fifteen times as fast as the flow rates of the underlying water in the water table.

So, the problem is keeping any hydrocarbons from entering our groundwater. It's crazy to pour gasoline on the ground because in less time than it takes to think about it, the circle of destruction of underground biota and animal life is many yards wide. Such poisons take away the ability of soil to remove pollutants such as e-coli, and other natural wastes.

Particularly important is the proper treatment of storm drains which collect large amounts of hydrocarbons from roadways and parking lots. In future issues, we will talk at greater length about the need for Cohasset's treatment of storm drain effluent. This is a major unrecognized problem with a fairly simple and economical solution.

We need a better monitoring and cleanout program. The Public Works Department is doing a good job with the tools it has, but for a few bucks and a little cooperation from other organizations in town, they could do a much better job.

League strives to shed outdated image

By Jerry Elsden
CORRESPONDENT

The local chapter of the League of Women Voters may have an image problem.

Is it a bunch of older housewives who meet during the day to discuss irrelevant issues? Does it endorse candidates? Is it liberal in its policies? Does it exclude men?

"None of the above," explains League president Ellen Rossano of Hingham.

"It's not your mothers', and definitely not your grandmothers' League anymore. The League is, and has always been, about informing voters, so they can make up their own minds about candidates and issues. We are nonpartisan, and, yes, membership is open to men. Becoming a member of the League allows you to become involved in issues like education, conservation, land use, water quality, recycling, health care, campaign finance ..."

Campaign finance is another name for "clean elections," which the US Congress is currently investigating.

And while other women's organizations have spoken out about President Clinton's troubles with Monica S. Lewinsky, the League of Women Voters has remained silent, for good reason.

"One of the great things about the League is that it takes no stands on issues until members have deliberately studied them and reached consensus among members," says Rossano.

Local league members are known for their activism on local issues, providing hands-on assistance, then allowing town departments to take it from there. A few examples include:

A three-tier program for the public schools about local history the League developed to honor Hingham's 350th anniversary. It is now included in the social studies curriculum at the elementary, secondary and high school levels.

The rezoning and land use restrictions at the harbor between the Hingham Rotary and the Bathing Beach.

League members, who include Cohasset residents, successfully fought a proposal to develop a full-service marina on Route 3A at the harbor. The League proposed a town meeting article to re-zone the area. The beautiful harbor front park is to some extent a result of this re-zoning.

"The League is, and has always been, about informing voters, so they can make up their own minds about candidates and issues."

— Ellen Rossano, president

But where the League is most visible and valuable is in voters' services. League members had for years registered new voters at school open houses, nursing homes, even supermarkets.

"Even though we have the Motor Voter law, drivers only renew their licenses every five years," Rossano notes. "We make it convenient for new residents moving into town, and for folks moving within the town, too."

"We're also very proud of our Candidates Nights," notes Rossano. "They're not debates, and you won't see candidates talking only to each other on their favorite issues. We provide this forum for candidates to address the audience, with a question-and-answer period. Voters can then be more informed on their choices."

The League has always been a stepping stone to elected office, almost a victim of its own success as many serve on town boards.

There was a time, 25 or so years ago, when League members met during the morning at least twice per month. Childcare was provided for $1, and home-baked cookies were served. Members used to joke that, "I don't clean for the League," implying that researching issues were priority.

Now the League holds evening meetings and most (but not all) of the members work outside of the house. The result is fewer studies the local League can tackle, but the ones they do are more relevant. The group also receives guidance from the Massachusetts League in its state studies.

While other leagues around the state are dissolving because more women are working, the Hingham League remains active, albeit with fewer members than a generation ago. The Hingham League now includes members from Cohasset, Norwell, Weymouth and Hull, bringing to the group a more regional perspective.

Rosanno hopes to attract new members with its upcoming state study on special education, a huge part of the education budget.

"The League has a lot to offer to forward-thinking, active women who want to make a difference," she said.

For information about joining the League of Women Voters, or if you would like to attend an upcoming event, call Rossano at 740-8703.

Arab family channel battles Western decadence

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The Arab Radio and Television Company has started a family TV channel to help cleanse the Middle East airwaves of such decadent Western influences as "The Little House on the Prairie" and "The Waltons."

Soon, we can expect antennae dishes all over the Arab world to be tuned into the Imam Ali Ben Robertson and his 700 Club and reruns of "Leave it to Moustafa" or "Ayatollah Knows Best."

"We aim to present entertaining programs that are devoid of decadence and impropriety and are appropriate for viewing by Muslim families," said the company in its announcement.

The purpose of the channel is to give the Arabs a rest from Western television shows, which (horrors!) include flashes of women's bare ankles (at least) and men and women enjoying a glass of grappa in their homes.

The channel is sent out free of charge (and no commercials) to satellite dishes in the Middle East, Africa, and Europe.

"We have a message we want to spread, and our aim is to make Iqra (the name of the channel) available to as many people as possible," said Abdul-Qader Tash, the director. "Our aim is not commercial gain."

Iqra is "read" in Arabic and is said to be the first word the Archangel Gabriel said to Mohammed, which turned him from an illiterate peasant into the prophet for millions of Muslims.

Western decadence appears to be burgeoning in the Middle East, where one can eat fast food at McDonald's, Taco Bell, Kentucky Fried Chicken, and Pizza Hut and wash it down with beer from the Fat Black Pussy Cat & Jazzy Dog Cafe in Cairo.

It may come as a surprise to most people that the harshest critic of Western decadence, the ruling Taliban of Afghanistan, has started a website on the Internet in the fight to combat exports from Hollywood and Main Street alike.

You can call it up by dialing "www.taliban.com."

Recently, the New York Times recorded this news item from Taliban Online:

"(The religious police) arrested 16 people in raids on different parts of the city, on the charge of having their beards trimmed to less than the required length. Two taxi drivers were also arrested for taking unattended, unveiled women as passengers."

The protection of women, whether they want it or not, is the aim of the radical Muslim attack on Western decadence.

As Taliban Online explained, "Men in the West have made women an object of their lusts and desires. They have used them as they pleased. When these slaves-of-their-desires had to go to work, to offices and factories, they drafted the women along with them also.

"Women were made to work in offices, restaurants, shops, and factories for the gratification of male desires. In this way did the Western man destroy the personality, position, and identity of a woman.

"The women of the West are laboring under a double burden. One, she is torn by anxiety as to who will look after her in case she remains unmarried. She is thus forced to wander from door to door in search of security.

"Even in the matter of dress she is exploited. Men wear trousers which cover their ankles, while women are forced to wear skirts with their legs bare in every kind of weather. In the scantiest of dresses, merely a sleeveless blouse and miniskirt, the Western woman can be seen roaming in shops, airports, stations, etc.

"She is a target for unscrupulous men who satisfy their lust with them, wherever, whenever they please. She has become no less than a bitch, chased by a dozen dogs in heat. If these are the rights of Western women, then the West is welcome to them."

Let's see what Gloria Steinem and NOW have to say about that.

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project has once again invited Santa to come visit the children on Cohasset Common during the Village Fair Dec. 5. Santa sitting in his sled will be on the Common from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Photographs of this special time will be available upon request.

Also, don't forget to check out the Second Congregational Church's Bates Hall for beautiful, handmade Appalachian crafts.

Children's mini-opera is Dec. 9

It's probably been awhile since you've heard a singing donkey, cow, horse, camel or bull, but next Wednesday evening is your chance to catch up! The Crickets and Junior Voices are working hard to prepare for their Dec. 9 concert, which begins at 7 p.m. at Wilder Hall in Hingham. The children will sing holiday songs they've learned this fall, and will then don costumes for their mini-opera entitled "The Christmas Jazz." The story takes place in a very overcrowded animal inn where "the smell is enough to disgust us, with everyone packed to the door!" The arrival of the exhausted donkey, sung with professional projection by Sarah Gassert, draws the animals into the familiar story; the music provides a stirring, as well as amusing, telling of the events surrounding the baby's birth. The one-hour program is appropriate for school-age children, and is free of charge while space allows.

During class sessions this fall, the Junior Voices and Crickets have been learning how to read notes and rhythms and sing new songs using solfege (do-re-mi) syllables. The singing program is directed by Margo Euler and is open to motivated and musical children in grades 1-2 (Crickets) and 3-5 (Junior Voices); the classes meet Wednesday afternoons. Second semester will begin Jan. 20 at Wilder Hall, 666 Main St. in Hingham. Pre-registration for new JVs and Crickets is required; call Lynn Anderson at 749-9759 or speak to her Dec. 9

You can bet that the turkey tasted that much sweeter on Thanksgiving when they beat Hull for the first time in more than a decade by the score of 14—0. Here, the Skippers all try and get their hand on the trophy that's awarded to the winner of the holiday game each year.

Their turkey tasted that much better

Skippers baste Pirates, 14-0

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Revenge is sweet.

The Cohasset High football team realized the true meaning of those worlds last Thursday when they finally beat the Hull Pirates in the traditional Thanksgiving Day game. With hundreds of ecstatic parents, friends and alums looking on, with coaches near tears on the sideline, the Skippers finally cashed in on the mantra "beat Hull."

There is not ample space to do justice to the reactions of those involved, physically and emotionally, in last week's milestone. Cohasset hadn't beaten Hull since 1987, when some of the players on this year's team were not yet in kindergarten. With trophy raised high, the seniors walked proudly off the field, many of them with tears streaming their cheeks, to the applause of the crowd.

The word had leaked out. Hull was down this year. Cohasset had its best senior class in a long time. The game was at Cohasset. The Skippers wanted it more. Even Hull's Jon Anderson conceded that a Cohasset victory seemed likely. The stage was set.

With the knowledge that "this could be the year," and smelling victory, graduated CHS football players returned to Cohasset to watch a game where many of them had never played, Alumni Field. Indeed, only one Thanksgiving game had ever been played on it until Thursday and that was a 46-8 Hull victory two years ago.

At halftime of this year's game, CHS Athletic Director Clark Chatterton unveiled a commemorative rock which credits the contributions of those who helped make Alumni possible.

All that remained was the game itself. The skippers romped, winning with style. And the Cohasset seniors played the game of their lives, for many of them their last game.

The senior class brought a fitting end to a long varsity career with their 14-0 victory. Every senior contributed noticeably during the game. Jamie DeMichele ran the offense at quarterback, while Justin Golden ate up yardage and threw blocks from fullback. Cohasset's second scoring drive was marked by Raheem Shepard carrying half the Hull defense downfield for 10 yards.

On the defensive side of the ball, Cohasset showed no mercy. Alex Russell picked up two sacks and struck fear into the heart of Hull's Linebackers Greg Parkinson Adam Sasso were seemingly everywhere, while Shepard's backfield penetration disrupted Hull's offense. Cornerback Greg Taylor dished out one particularly nasty blow while allowing nothing behind him, and Ben Roine was like a blanket in pass coverage.

However, when asked where the game was won and lost, there can only be one answer, the line, Cohasset's line, on both sides of the ball, dominated. Offensively, seniors John Considine, Luke Caldwell, John-Paul Laugelle, Sean Parkinson and Adam Sasso made possible runs by Golden, Shepard and Daniel Trowers. They were the Sears-Roebuck Foundation to the backfield's PBS. Hull's defense never stood a chance as the "O" line could often be spotted still holding their blocks well downfield. The game was won along the line.

In the stands, disbelieving euphoria was rampant. Parents beamed proudly as their sons vanquished the Pirates and alumni grinned with vengeance, remembering the beatings and the insults.

On the sidelines, Coach Dave Terry hopped up and down. Coach Brian Pattison looked like Jim Valvano after NC State's Final Four victory, looking for someone to hug.

The face of Coach Bob Silvia, the coach with the longest tenure holding a CHS clipboard, showed joyous relief. Players hugged each other and waved to their families. Cohasset's JV ran out the final plays.

The wait was over. it was VE Day. Bob Dole winning the Republican presidential nomination. John Elway hoisting the Lombardi Trophy after winning the Super Bowl. The Red Sox finally winning the World Series…hey, there's always next year.

But on this Thanksgiving, there didn't need to be a next year. Not even last year counted. All that mattered was this year and the numbers 14-0, both on the scoreboard and etched in the mind of every single Cohasset senior to leave the field that day.

Cohasset Rec offers ski lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct Blue Hill Ski and Snow Board Lesson registrations Thursday, Dec. 3, at the recreation office, Cohasset Town Hall, between the hours of 2:30 and 3:30 p.m. and again in the evening, from 5:30 to 6:30.

Registration forms must be signed by a parent or guardian for participation in this five-week program. Beginner through advanced level instruction is available for children and youth, age 7 and older.

Lessons are scheduled to begin Thursday, Jan. 7, and continue for five consecutive weeks, through Thursday, Feb. 4. The bus will leave each week from town hall parking lot at 3:20 p.m. and return from Blue Hills at about 6:45 p.m.

The fee for the ski lessons and transportation for five weeks is $115 and checks should be made payable to: Town of Cohasset. Those participants who require equipment rentals may rent at Blue Hills and the cost for the five weeks with rental package is $155 per person for skiing and $175 for snow board lesson rental, transportation package, or $115 without snow board rentals.

This is the 22nd year that ski lessons at Blue Hills have been offered through the Cohasset Recreation Department and through the years, hundreds of youngsters have had the opportunity to learn how to ski, or improve their technique.

Football the way it ought to be

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

From the start of October to the week before Christmas, there's a group of men in Cohasset who have just one thing on their mind every Sunday morning.

That is to get down to the high school and gather on the front field for a game of flag football.

According to Joe Dooley, the "commissioner" of the league, "Just about the same guys have been participating in the games during the last 10 years."

Dooley added that the league has been in existence for more than 40 years, off and on, but he gave it some organization, along with Mike Maher back in 1987 and it has been going strong ever since.

When Dooley isn't organizing the Sunday morning games that pit Beachwood against Hillside, he runs the Red Lion Inn in Cohasset.

The inn figures big in the league, since that's where the players wind up after the games that start at 9:30 a.m. and run until 12 noon.

"After two and one half hours of playing tag football, we need a place to go and rest up and the Red Lion does that very nice," says Dooley.

"Anybody can play with us," he noted. "We get more than enough players every Sunday. We play eight against eight, so we need at least 16 people to show up."

According to Dooley, the Froios and the Dooleys just about dominate the league. There are four Froios (Ralph, Mark, Chris and Paul) and three Dooleys, Joe, Dennis and Kevin.

And, of course, there's the man that the players like to refer to as the oldest player in the league, Marty Maher.

The final game of the season is a major happening. The game is videotaped and following the game, film is played at the inn.

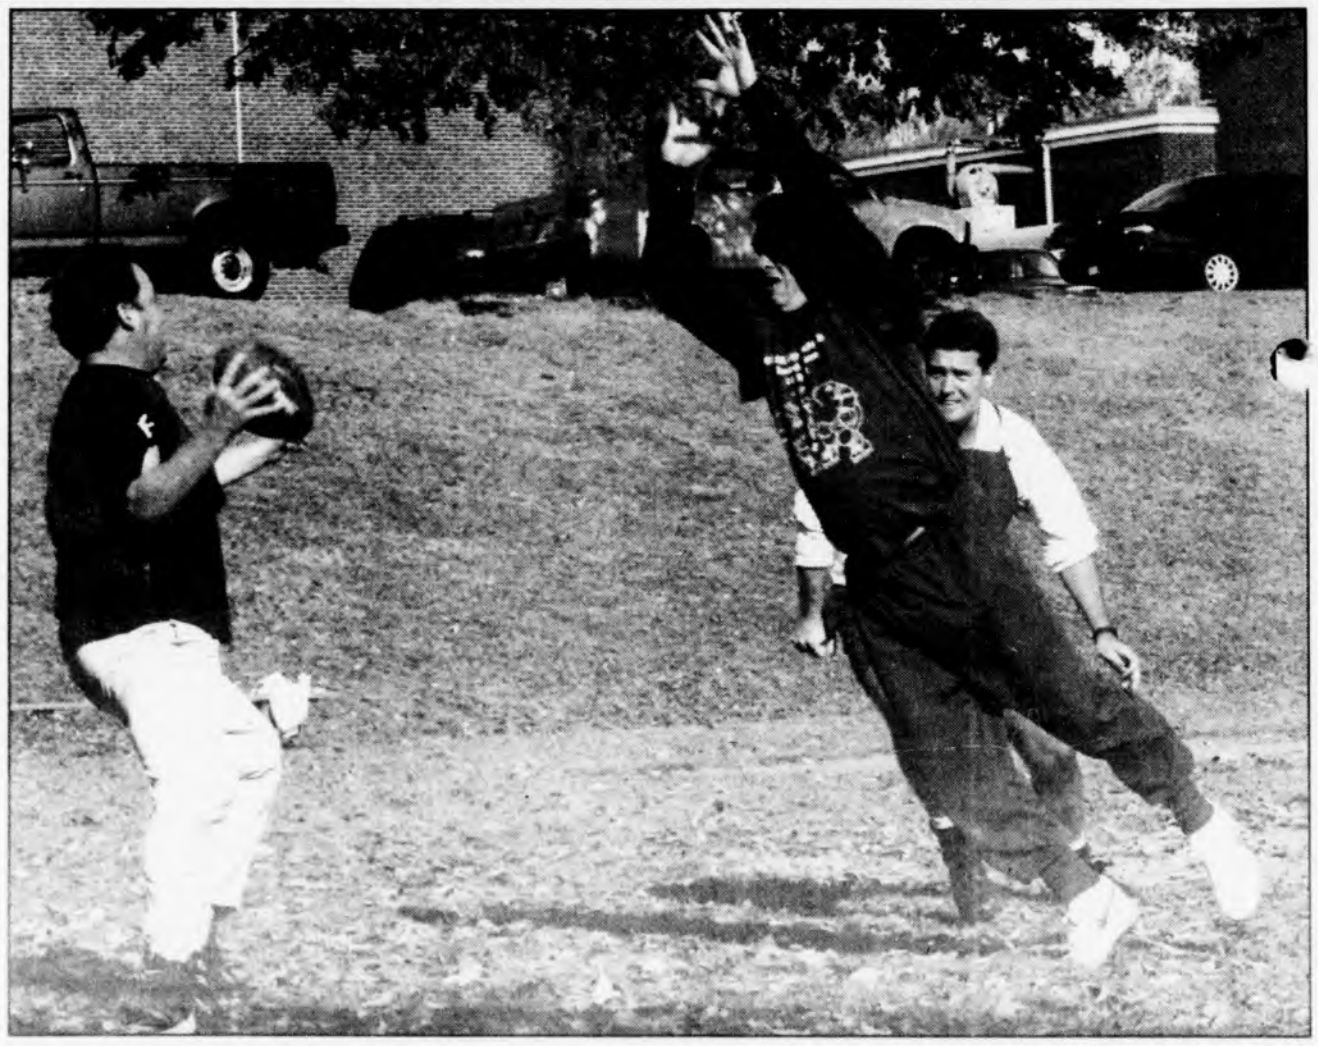
"We review the film and then vote for the Most Valuable Player and other top performers. We hand out trophies and it's just one great time. Last year we had about 70 people voting on who should receive the trophies," said Dooley.

For the final game, the players wear black or white shirts that are provided by the "commissioner" each year.

"It's a lot of fun," said Joe. "You should see the number of fans that turn out to watch the game. Of course, most of them are wives and children of the players."

The league also has a special vote that it takes at the final gathering. They vote for the most miserable person in town. "Of course it's all done in good fun," says Joe.

One woman in town has won the award 11 straight times, according to Joe, while a different man has won it each of the past 11 years.



What about women playing in the league? "We would love to see women get involved in the sport. We encourage it, but we can't find any women interested in playing the sport," noted Dooley.

Asked if anyone has ever been injured in the game, Joe answered, "We have been very lucky all these years. No injuries. Keep in mind we're just playing one-handed tag football.

"The worst that happens is that most of the players have aching muscles Monday and Tuesday and by Wednesday, they're feeling a lot better and ready to go in the next game."

The league has three more Sundays to play and of course the big game the third Sunday. The league goes all out for that one.

Besides the new shirts, the videotape and what not, the league also brings in a referee for the game of games.

STAFF PHOTO/KAREN QUINCY LOBERG

Not only do a bunch of friends get together each Sunday for a spirited game of touch football, some really get into the spirit and practice impressions of their favorite comic book super heros. Here the gentleman on the right tries his hand at being Superman. The group has been getting together for more than 40 years now.

Courtyard spruced up at Deer Hill School

By Constance Pittman Lindner

It was last year that Ohio newcomer Helen Daly spotted the Deer Hill courtyard. She knew immediately that it needed a little "TLC."

"When I first walked in, I thought, Oh, this place has such potential but needs some love and care," said Daly.

Thanks to gardener Bob Mowbray's generosity, the fourth-, fifth- and sixth-graders of Girl Scout Troop 4770 are getting professional advice on a courtyard design plan that is already falling into place.

"I chose Bob for my own landscaping work because he understood budget constraints and was open to moving plants instead of discarding them. When I asked him to help with the troop, he said, 'Yes.'"

"It's been wonderful," said Mowbray, of his work with troop 4770.

"The girls and I sat down in the courtyard in June and threw out ideas, measured it together and that type of thing and I incorporated their ideas," said Mowbray, who appeared on Chronicle in the spring and co-hosted eight episodes of an HGTV gardening show.

"You'd be amazed at their input and how much attention they paid to the project," he said.

A design suited to the active traffic and the girls' sense of aesthetics was soon drawn up.

Mowbray, a 20-year landscaping veteran, was able to provide some educational elements to the project, too.

"One girl wanted flowers, another wanted vegetables and another wanted herbs," he said. "We sort of incorporated all of it and added some educational elements that would attract butterflies, bulbs that would bloom in the spring and greenery that would draw birds to the four-season garden."

Mowbray is assisted in his volunteer work by Jean Connors, also a landscape designer and worker at the Village Garden in Norwell. Both have been impressed by the girls' curiosity and their anxiousness to see the project come to fruition.

"I think they were anxious from the first day to start ripping things out," joked Mowbray.

The pair gave the girls some gardening tips to ensure that their end product would prove a success.

"Jean and Bob came over and showed the girls what you look at when you think about a plant," said Daly. "He explained the pests that are not good for the situation, like grubs. We're looking to provide color plus nourishment for the birds all year."

The girl scouts are led by girl scout leaders Daly, Joanne Lehr and Terry James.

"It's a new troop with new fourth-graders," said James. "They all get along well and this is a nice introduction for the new members of the troop. It will also be nice for the sixth graders so that when they leave in the spring, they will leave their mark in the courtyard."

Work began on the project Oct. 26, on "Make a Difference Day." Some serious weeding work made possible a follow-up visit to plant bulbs for mums and some shrubs, too. Hardy mums were planted over areas where mum bulbs will shoot up next year, offering a sense of things to come.

The town will remove several bushes there so that donated trees can be replanted.

Helping out with the heavier planting tasks is Boy Scout Troop 28 under the leadership of Phil Lehr. Not only have the boys built six picnic tables for the area already, but they will assist with planting pine trees for the girls.

"Once the prickly stuff is removed from the area by the town, the kids can have lunch in the courtyard using the tables," said Daly

Those tables were also a product of Make a Difference Day.

Last year, Lehr's troop was all set to build tables for the new computer system, but Middle School principal Paul Callahan preferred that they make picnic tables.

"We worked on a rainy Saturday in October with kids from 11 to 18 years of age," said Lehr. "Most of the kids really like hands-on projects that they can look at later and see completed, particularly something like the picnic tables where if there is a nice day, the kids can eat outside instead of in the cafeteria. It's a good feeling for the kids to see their tables being used."

That project was completed with eight boys and four carpenters who are also assistant scout masters.

The initiative of adult volunteers who lend their professional skills to the troops for projects such as these leave an indelible mark on the children's world, James said..

"Helen undertook this project because she had past experience as a scout leader in Ohio and she just had a sense of what the courtyard needed," she said. "This has been such a great experience for the girls because they can make something that everyone will enjoy. Sometimes you see something all the time, like the courtyard, but don't even notice it. Helen did, and it's been a great experience for everyone."

The biggest roadblock to Rosalie's recovery was the road itself. When Rosalie discovered she had cancer, she knew what she had to do. She knew she had to keep living. She knew she had to beat this disease. She knew she had to receive chemotherapy. Her only question was how? How would she get there? Friends? Family? Public transit? Walking? These wouldn't work.
Fortunately, the American Cancer Society has a program called "The Road to Recovery." Where volunteers drive people afflicted wtih cancer to their radiation treatment. "Road to Recovery" just one of the many cancer support programs funded by your United Way contribution.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Don't miss 'The Music Man' this weekend

By Allison Moje
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

"The Music Man," being performed at Cohasset High School Dec. 4, 5 and 6, is something you don't want to miss. It is about a crooked salesman called Harold Hill (played by Ron Nicynski) who moves from town to town convincing the inhabitants that their children are in danger of being corrupted. In this case, he moves to Rivercity, Iowa, to create a fear that the new pool table in town is going to turn their innocent children into mob-like gamblers. Unfortunately for him, the town librarian (Mareth Collins-Wooley) suspects that his plans to form a band are not true.

Will she find out? Will she expose Harold Hill and his secret? To find out, come and see the show at Cohasset High School Dec. 4, 5 and 6. For tickets, call Mrs. Nicynski at 383-1329.

And now an interview with one of the cast members, David Ingber.

Allison: What part do you have in the play?

David: I am a traveling salesman, as well as a member of the River City ensemble.

Allison: What has the whole experience been like?

David: I like the experience of conversing with upper class men. It puts me in an environment I usually would not be in.

Allison: What are rehearsals like?

David: We spend the first hour going over the chorus as a large group. Then we break into small groups and work on things we know need fixing such as full cast dances, or the starting scene "Rock Island," a rhythmic piece in which I happen to be involved.

Allison: Who is directing?

David: Mrs. Jo-Ellen Wood, the eighth-grade English teacher, is directing the speaking scenes. Mr. Bryan Marks, the chorus teacher at C.H.S, is in charge of the choral numbers. Sharon Terman is the production's choreographer and Mrs. Jean Birmann is the piano player.

Allison: So, what do you expect from the show?

David: I'm hoping for a lot of tickets to be sold. So pick up the phone and dial 383-1329 for tickets!

Grade 8

Cohasset Middle/High School

Allison Moje and David Ingber are in the eighth grade at the middle/high school.

Funds needed for leadership program

Three students from Cohasset High School have been chosen by the school administration to attend the Presidential Classroom leadership program in Washington, D.C.

Mike Baird, Megan Connolly and Steve Reynolds need to raise $2,700 to fund this very worthwhile educational experience. They will be selling the Entertainment '99 Book as one of their fund raising activities. The gold card and coupons provide the buyer with opportunities to enjoy two-for-one dinners at many outstanding South Shore and Boston restaurants. Kimball's By the Sea, La Dalat, Bert's Cove, The Red Parrot, Oceana at Marriott Longwharf, and Michael's Waterfront are just a few of the excellent choices. There are discounts for fast food restaurants, movie theaters, dry cleaning, sport events, hotels, and airline tickets.

If you would be interested in purchasing an Entertainment '99 Book for $30 or making a donation to the Presidential Classroom, please call Megan Connolly at 383-1248. Thank you for your time and support.

Local author to speak at Glasonbury Abbey

Thomas H. O'Connor, professor of History, Emeritus at Boston College and author of "Boston Catholics: A History of the Church and Its People," to speak at Glastonbury Abbey. Professor O'Connor, a member of the Massachusetts Archives Advisory Commission, board of trustees of the Bostonian Society and resident fellow at the Massachusetts Historical Society has published a number of books on the history of Boston including "Lords of the Loom"; "Bibles, Brahmins, and Bosses"; "Fitzpatrick's Boston, 1846-1866"; "South Boston: My Home Town — The History of an Ethnic Neighborhood"; "Building a New Boston: The Politics of Urban Renewal, 1950-1970"; "The Boston Irish: A Political History" and "Civil War Boston: Home Front and Battlefield."

The lecture will be held Sunday, Dec. 13 at 11 a.m. at the Glastonbury Abbey Chapel, 16 Hull St., Hingham.

OBITUARIES

Linda Wallace

Linda Clarke Wallace, 57, of Cambridge and Cohasset, a Harvard Square real estate broker, died Monday, Nov. 16, at her home in Cambridge.

Mrs. Wallace was a record-setting Realtor in Cambridge.

She enjoyed needlework and fly-fishing and traveled extensively.

She was the first woman to fly the B-29 bomber and at the age of 9 she had a part in "Showboat" at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset.

Mrs. Wallace leaves her husband, Dr. James Woodward Wallace; two sons, James Woodward Hendrickson Wallace of Seattle and Joshua Andrew Bligh Wallace of San Francisco; her mother, Mildred (Blye) Clarke of Hingham; a brother, Laurence Litchfield Clarke Jr. of Grandville, Ohio; and four grandchildren, Elliot, Ethan, Cameron and Alexander; and her mother-in-law, Dorothy Colman Wallace of Cambridge. She was also daughter of the late Laurence Litchfield Clarke.

A Memorial Service was held at King's Chapel, Boston. Interment was private.

J.S. Waterman and Sons Eastman-Waring Funeral Home, Boston, directed the arrangements.

In lieu of flowers, remembrances may be made to Drayton Hall, 3380 Ashley River Rd., Charlestown, SC 29414.

Siros in Hingham opens in grand style

Gala event draws a crowd

By Liz Derby
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset residents Kristy Henriksen, owner of Siros on Main Street, and her husband Tom Fallon looked forward to a fabulous evening Monday for the grand opening of their new restaurant in the former Whiton House. They weren't disappointed.

Hundreds of invited guests and local dignitaries - including US Rep. William Delahunt - packed the former Whiton House to socialize and enjoy the hors d'oeuvres, drinks and entertainment.

"This building and I go back a long way," said Delahunt, who is also a family friend. "I was a dishwasher in this kitchen during my college days in the summer of '61 when this place was known as the Country Fare."

Henriksen, who also owns Siros at Marina Bay in Quincy, intended the event as a special gift to her friends, family and patrons. But in reality the affair celebrated Henriksen's efforts to revive the beloved Hingham landmark.

Traffic snarled and tempers flared more than a couple of times at the notorious Queen Ann's Corner where Siros is located, but any upsetting incidents were quickly abated by Hingham police, who directed traffic. Police estimated that as many as 1,500 or more people stopped by at some point during the opening, which was held from 6 to 10 p.m. Not only was Siros parking lot full, but also cars were jammed along Main Street and into just about every public parking space within walking distance.

Invited guests included state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and Garrett Bradley, a former county prosecutor who challenged Murray in the recent state election. Also on hand, were Bruce Cameron and Vince Longo from the South Shore Music Circus; Brian McLaughlin, CEO of D'Angelos; former local talk show host Wigmore Pierson of Cohasset; representatives from US Senator John Kerry's office, selectmen and other local officials.

His daughter, Kara, to lend support for the occasion, accompanied Delahunt, whose daughters spent their school vacations working at Siros at Marina Bay.

The congressman expressed his admiration for Henriksen's flair for fine cuisine and her elegant sense of style.

Henriksen's style — augmented with the support of Repertoire's Celeste Cooper, a Boston based interior designer — is displayed in renovations that include the opening up of the entire main dining room to let in the light. The undraped windows let in the New England countryside. The white linen-draped tables and dark mahogany with black leather chairs add just the right amount of sophistication. Henriksen's color coordinated corporate dining rooms (which vary in seating capacity from 10 to about 50) display her selections of interesting china and art that individualize each setting. These private rooms have been "purchased" by corporations for their functions, and bear the company names.

Finger hors d'oeuvres such as scallops on the half shell and little salmon petite-fours were offered continuously throughout the evening. Servers dished small plates of wild mushroom raviolis, and shell pastas in sauce to a never-ending line that formed on both sides of a service table. Throughout the evening guests were entertained with the soft jazz sounds of the Kristin Spath Quartette. Desserts by "The Bashful Baker" (Susan Hebbs) and coffee were served in the A.W. Perry Room. These exquisite delicacies bewitched guests, causing them to abandon calorie counting for the evening and heap their plates with three or four.

Marge Brownell complimented Henriksen on the wonderful food and the decor at Siros.

"Such simple elegance," she said, "warm and inviting." Her husband, Judge Thomas F. Brownell of the Plymouth District Court, offered that his wife ought to know good food because she loved cooking and was such an elegant cook herself." Then he added, laughing, "But she likes making reservations even better." Fallon's daughters, Denise Fallon and Dorene Ambrose, were among the celebrants. Sydney Fallon, Fallon's and Henriksen's 10-year-old daughter, invited a few of her friends from the Deer Hill School in Cohasset, among them were Amanda Adams, Caitlan Sanchez, Ariel Siegel and Ben Bolster.

A large tent accommodated an overflow crowd, a popular place and welcome relief when the main dining room became overly warm as the numbers increased. Henriksen hopes to press a similar tent into service as an adjunct to the main dining room for weddings and parties.

Putting Siros on Main Street together was an extensive project. It took three months just to negotiate the lease, then several more months of work followed, Henriksen said. A lot of problems were uncover had to be corrected, not unli home. She said she is grateful loyal and competent staff, who has for the most part been with her for several years, and without whom she feels she would not be successful today.

Henriksen said her vision for the restaurant was very clear from the beginning. She wanted to open it up and brighten it up. However, she is sympathetic to those who patronized the Whiton House and do not welcome the change. Some liked the menu the way it was particularly the prices. Henriksen said she would try to provide alternative entrees with pricing that would appeal to this group. But that's a little down the line.

In the meantime, if you've been planning to go to the Whiton House to compare the changes they've made and to order your favorite meal, do not. Instead, make a point of visiting the all new Siros on Main Street. Check out the bright new look. Order something different from the elegant contemporary Italian cuisine. Enjoy the music from the grand piano in the main dining room. You'll love it.

Number of gas leaks greater than reported

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

An investigation by the state has confirmed nearly 14 gas leaks—only eight or nine of which were actually reported—have occurred as part of the sewer project work in Cohasset.

That discovery was apparently enough for the state Department of Public Safety to yank the hoisting license of Giuiseppe "Joe" Digiacomo, acting manager of D&C Construction Company of Rockland.

Last week's leak on Linden Drive was reportedly one of three there, according to sewer commission Chairman Ted Guild.

But according to an investigative report by Richard Feeney, district engineering inspector for the Department of Public Safety, "accidents do happen, but not 14 of them on one site. And the contractors only reported eight or nine to the fire department. Any gas odor would concern me and the fire department should have been notified each time."

While investigating with the aid of Captain Mark Trask of the Cohasset Fire Department, town engineer Arthur Leventis and Cohasset Special Officer James McLean, Feeney discovered from the engineer that people in the area had been saying that they wanted Digiacomo out, and his company, too.

Digiacomo thinks that's unfair.

"They shouldn't have done that," he said. "The gas wasn't marked right. That's why the leaks happened. So I don't understand why everyone is upset. In 11 years, we didn't have any dig that were bad like this. We don't have problems because of the ledge. It is the markings."

"The town hired D&C on a low bid and they kept hitting ledge," said

Cohasset students make the grade

MCAS results are in

With the embargo lifted on districts' MCAS results, the school superintendent was able to report that "Cohasset did reasonably well and we would expect that."

Calling it not so much an achievement test or measure of ability as a test on how the school's curriculum measures up with the state framework, school Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said that the results would indicate what extra work would need to be done.

"The test is about a new curriculum so even the failures, while not acceptable, are expectable."

—Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey

Overall, Cohasset's fourth-, eighth- and 10th-graders scored higher than the general state test scores.

"For a new superintendent coming in, I was pleased," he said. "I wasn't surprised or elated. I was involved in Basic Skills testing in the past in Massachusetts and I think that some communities are expected to do well in terms of their students and curriculum and that has been borne out here."

Of the four categories of percentages of students—failing, needs improvement, proficient and advanced—Malvey plans to concentrate on the needs improvement and failing group.

"If students need assistance, that's what we'll be giving," said Malvey. "We'll consider all those options and this will come with a cost. We'll need to find out what support the state Department of Education will provide."

Special education students made up most of the failing students.

Each student has an IEP (Individual Education Plan) as part of SPED (Special Education). SPED students that took the MCAS were given the accommodations called for in their IEP.

Taxpayers to share sewer cost

Override passes at the polls

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Those who fought hard to persuade voters to support a 50 percent taxpayer subsidy for the sewer cost overrun won the battle.

Although the turnout was low — only 29 percent — a $1.3 million Prop. 2-1/2 override passed at the polls on Saturday with a 118-vote majority.

This means the owner of the average Cohasset home, valued at $341,000, will see an increase of about $19.21 on their annual tax bill for 20 years. The money will pay for half of the $2.7 million cost overrun for the North Cohasset sewer project — the users through betterments will pay the balance. So if that average-valued home is in North Cohasset, the cost will be $568.20 per year (about $165 less than if the override had failed) not including annual operation and maintenance costs of about $400.

"I'm ecstatic, I'm really delighted," said Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, an outspoken proponent of town/user shared funding for the pro-

Toys for Tots collection bin

Police Officer John Small said the Toys for Tots collection bin is at the Cohasset Police Station on Elm Street. Citizens with toys to donate may drop them off 24 hours a day until Christmas. Donation cans are also located at various establishments around town. Small conducts the annual toy drive with his grandfather, Herb Jason. The toys will be delivered to the Marine Corps for distribution to needy families.

Winter guidelines for Cohasset residents

The D.P.W. has issued the following winter guidelines:

1. Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15.
2. Do not plow or shovel snow, water or any other debris from private property onto roadways or sidewalks.
3. Uncover storm drains when possible.
4. Sand for resident use only will be available behind the former highway garage at 55R South Main St.
5. The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mail boxes within the town layout.

Volunteers sought for growth committee

Selectmen are seeking three citizens-at-large to serve on a new Growth and Development Task Force to study growth and develop a master plan for the town. Interested volunteers should contact Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105.

The committee's charge is to guide, coordinate and oversee the two stage process of developing a comprehensive master plan for Cohasset as the town enters the 21st century. The task force will develop an RFP for consultant assistance in defining the vision or assessment phase of the process. With this consultant, the task force will identify through public processes the goals and proposed policy of the second phase, the comprehensive plan.

An architect's rendering of the new library showing a new entrance on the side of the old school where the 1954 wing is now located. The existing front door to the former school (facing Ripley Road) would serve as a pedestrian entrance.

Selectmen split on fate of Osgood wing

But library trustees want it removed

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A majority of selectmen is attached to the 1954 wing of the old Osgood School. Despite the fact that October's special town meeting endorsed the library's proposed design that included razing the 5,000-square foot section of the school to make room for parking and a new entrance some selectmen want the wing saved.

The issue, which is dividing the board and frustrating the library trustees, surfaced Tuesday night during a discussion about the need for senior housing.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, a vocal proponent of affordable housing for seniors, asked that the issue about what to do with the remaining wings of the old Osgood be on the agenda.

Sullivan — who insisted town meeting did not vote a specific library design plan but a concept — asked that the library shelve proceeding with its design plans to "lob off" the 1954 wing until the possibility of creating some senior housing units there be studied.

The Osgood Reuse Committee recommended the school be turned into condominiums for senior citizens, a proposal that was rejected at town meeting in favor of the library plan. But Sullivan did not think town meeting meant to shut the door on any senior housing proposal for the site.

"I'm hopeful the library trustees won't proceed with their design until we review the use of that wing and the balance of the building," she said.

Library trustees are only interested in utilizing the main section of Osgood — built in 1926 — for a new 15,000-square foot library which would be more than double the useable square footage of the existing Paul Pratt Library. Therefore, the rear section of Osgood — known as the 1929 wing — could be developed for housing or municipal use. Initially trustees thought options for the 1929 wing would have to include potential expansion for the library in 20 years because state funding requires that alternative be left open. But Towle said Tuesday the architect indicated it would be possible in the future to add on to the main section of the building — an option that will satisfy the state requirement.

But taking down the 1954 wing — which includes five classrooms and is on a slab — is an integral part of the plans for the new library, Towle explained. She said trustees were "clear and up front" about what they were proposing at town meeting so there would be no confusion.

"The (new front) door is a pretty important issue to the whole library plan," she said. Towle said it will not only provide for better handicap access but the location of the door and its relationship to parking and the service desk are an integral part of the design and future efficiency of the library's operation.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said special town meeting voters knew what they were voting on when they approved $152K for library construction drawings.

She warned that a major change — like keeping the wing — would result in not the same "quality library facility" endorsed by the voters.

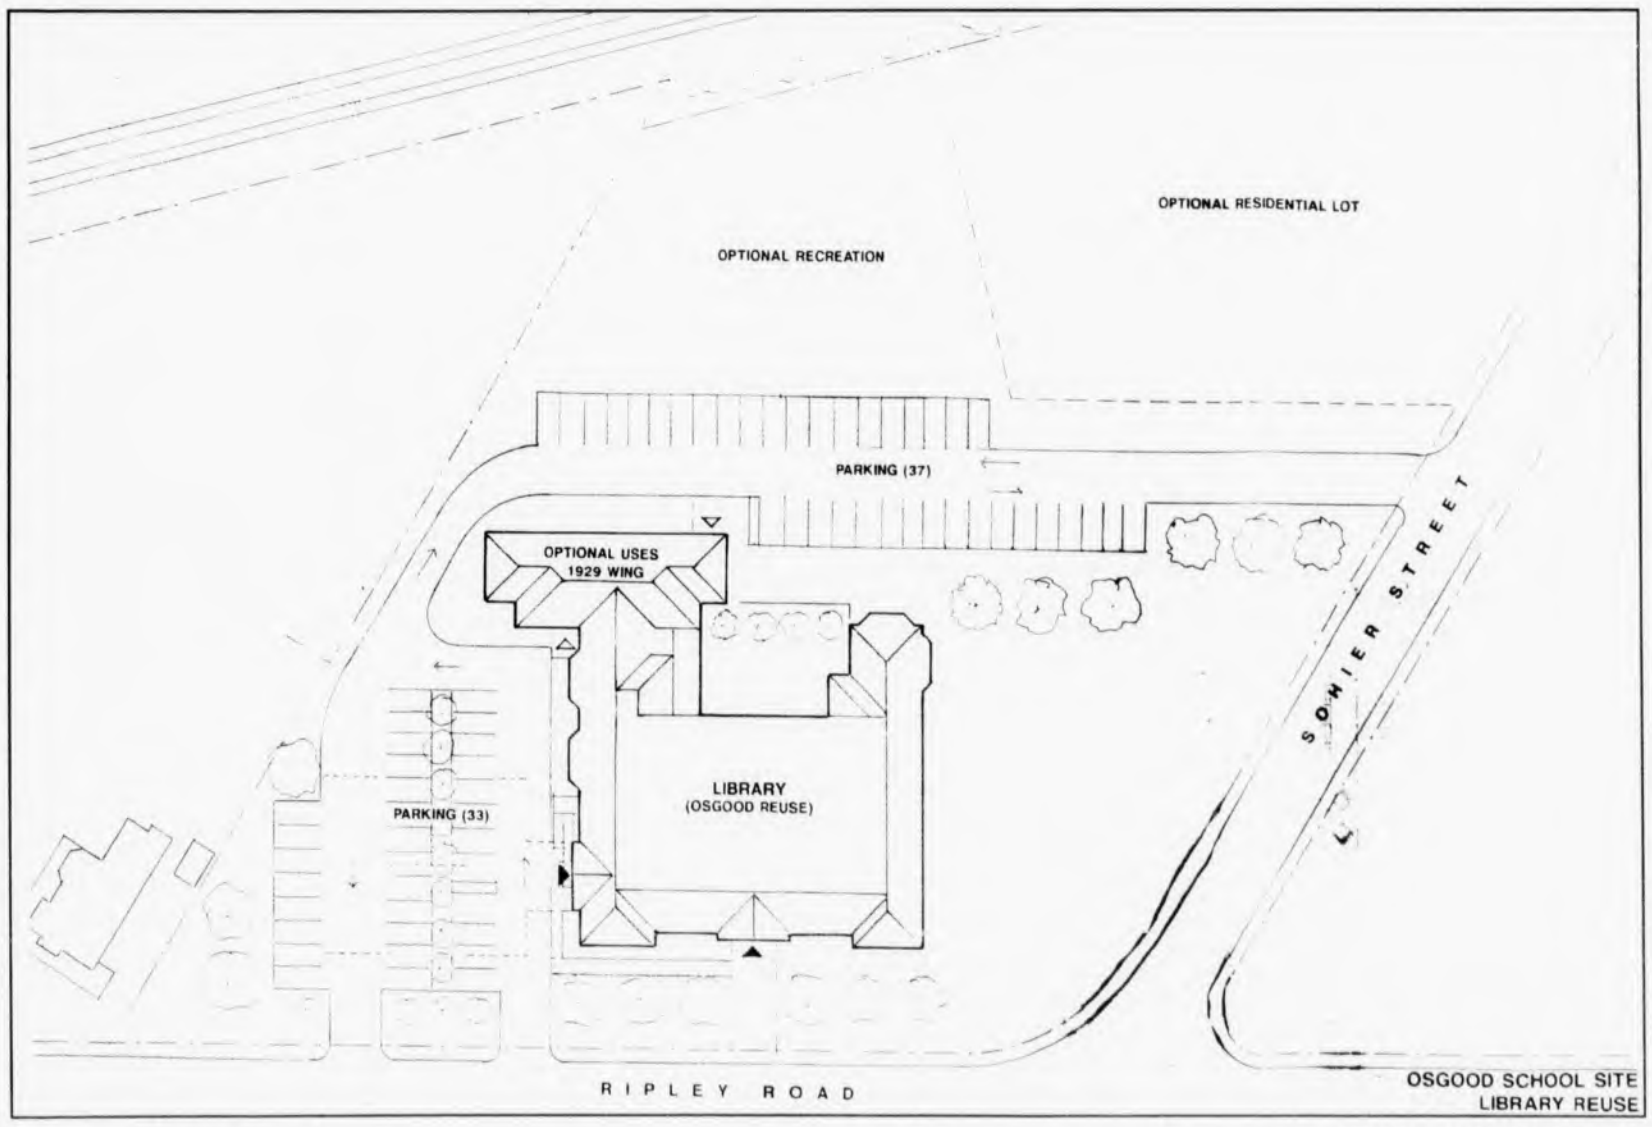
"I'm hopeful the library trustees won't proceed with their design until we review the use of that wing and the balance of the building."

— Selectman Diane Sullivan

But Selectman Tom Callahan said the trustees should compromise by "putting the brakes on their design" until Town Manager Mark Haddad finishes his review.

However, selectmen were even split on the initial message they gave Haddad on what a special subcommittee — they recently authorized to study possible town uses for what remains of the old Osgood after the library moves in — is charged to do.

Haddad and McMorris said the committee was working with the trustees and therefore should only look at uses for the 1929 wing. But in a majority vote Tuesday — with McMorris and Selectman Nan Roth voting in the minority — selectmen directed Haddad to include the 1954 wing in the study.



Several members of the Council on Elder Affairs were invited to Tuesday's meeting to provide input on the need for senior housing in town.

While she described the library proposal as "an exciting prospect," Barbara Anglin of the CEA was disappointed that discussion of senior housing took a back seat to controversy over the 1954 wing.

"Thank you for bringing senior housing back up," she told selectmen. "I implore you to keep it in mind. We need selectmen to take a leadership role as well."

Anglin said Cohasset's population of senior citizens is expected to double over the next ten years.

"We're interested in exploring all housing options," she said. "The library site is a beautiful site. We are not opposed to a joint project. But we are not in a position to say what should be done with the wings of the Osgood School."

Cohasset students make the grade

make sure that their needs are being met," said Malvey.

Until the state and school has gone over the MCAS results and test itself, it is not certain what measures will be taken to bring curriculum more in line with statewide standards.

"We expected the large number of 'needs improvement' students," said Malvey. "If they had all the answers, they wouldn't need to be here."

Grade 4 - Percent of Students

Subject	Advanced		Proficient		Needs Improve.		Failure

English	3	1	26	19	68	66	4	15
Math	19	11	36	23	38	44	7	23
Sci/Tech.	13	6	61	42	21	40	5	12

But some questions have been raised about certain parts of the exams, like trigonometry questions on the 10th grade MCAS when that subject is taught to Cohasset students in the 11th and 12th grades.

"I'm told for some of the topic questions were limited to maybe two questions so if the students didn't get those two questions, maybe we're only looking at a moderate change in curriculum in that area," said Malvey.

Should school officials decide on extra classes or a change in curriculum, it is not yet clear who will attend. "We haven't crossed that bridge yet," said Malvey.

If he has any concerns, the superintendent is worried about how much the statewide curriculum might impinge on broad-based approaches of individual communities.

"If we look at a narrow assessment and lose sight of other ways of evaluating students, then we may do a disservice to students and a broad-based education, however each community would define what that is," said Malvey. "Some people feel that this is unfair to be so controlled by MCAS tests."

Only Class of 2003 students will need to pass their 10th-grade MCAS in order to graduate high school.

Still, Malvey explained that the results of each exam will influence every grade since overall preparation for the test is part of a continuum from one school year to the next.

"I would anticipate next year's scores will be better because adjustments will be closer and more aligned with what the children will be tested for," Malvey predicted.

The results are just off embargo and so Cohasset school staff will be learning about the results over the course of the next two weeks.

"We're going to focus on those students who failed, rather than the 'needs improvement' students," he said. "Most kids fit into that category and that's what they're in school for. The test is about a new curriculum so even the failures, while not acceptable, are expectable."

Malvey also doesn't expect teachers, who elsewhere in the state have been taking some flak over their own testing woes, to "hang their heads under the desk over this one. We'll all be reviewing the results and then assessing needs. Really, it's a test of MCAS and the new curriculum, but the students are the ones who have to take the test."

Public sessions to discuss MCAS results will be held 7 p.m., Dec. 16, in Deer Hill and 7:30 p.m., Dec. 21 in the Cohasset Middle-High School with the respective principals leading the meetings.

Suburbs score better than cities

By Chris Szechenyi
STAFF WRITER

Reflecting historical trends, suburban school districts scored better on the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) tests compared to their urban counterparts, although some schools did buck the trend.

"What we've seen is what you would expect - prosperous schools with few foreign-speaking students and few students on the free lunch program scoring better than others," said State Board of Education Chairman John Silber.

Despite the disparity between the cities and suburbs, Silber declared the MCAS test "a superb diagnostic tool" that "gives us a way to pinpoint the problems" among the 351 school districts in the commonwealth.

While wealthy school districts in Concord, Lexington and Weston generally scored better than cities like Boston, Chelsea and Springfield, exceptions to the overall trend included the tiny Morse School in Cambridge.

"The Morse School shows what challenges exist in our urban areas, and what results are possible when a strong curriculum is tied to a strong school-teacher-parent partnership," said Massachusetts Education Commissioner David P. Driscoll.

Driscoll released the long-awaited results of the new standardized test at the Morse School on Wednesday morning, distributing thick packets of information with district-by-district breakdowns.

At the Morse School, which has 300 students in kindergarten through eighth grade with 40 percent from low-income families, fourth and eighth graders scored above the state average in English language arts, in math and in science/technology.

More than 200,000 public school students took the test last spring as part of the requirement of the 1993 Education Reform Act. The test is designed to examine whether students are learning the state-mandated curricula. Next spring, the state will add a test in history and social science for eighth and 10th grade students.

The performance of the state's wealthier school districts gave legislators more ammunition to continue to funnel most of the extra state funding provided by the Education Reform Act of 1993 to urban districts.

For instance, Concord's fourth graders' scores in English language arts, math and science/technology were higher than the state average as were the results for eight graders in all the categories.

But some school districts with fewer resources also did well on the MCAS, which validated the test in the yes of many experts. For example, Framingham's fourth graders got higher than average scores in English language arts, math and science/technology. Its eighth graders scored the same as the state averages in math and science and just below in English language arts.

Among urban school districts, a composite average for all grades shows that Lynn scored below Fall River, Brockton, Lowell, New Bedford and Fitchburg. But Lynn's schools did better than Chelsea, Springfield, Boston, Lawrence and Holyoke.

The average scores of Waltham's fourth graders on English language arts matched the state's averages in all subjects. Its eighth graders scored below the average in math and science/technology.

Every grade that took the MCAS test in Swampscott, one of the bell weather school districts in the commonwealth, scored higher than the state's average in all subjects, as did Cohasset's schools.

"The results indicate that MCAS is a fair assessment of real knowledge and skills that are consistent with tests in the past," said Jim Peyser, a state board of education member and executive director of the Boston-based Pioneer Institute.

"Overall, the scores are disappointing," he added. "They demonstrate we have a long way to go to meet our expectations. There, is in fact, room for improvement. We're going to start seeing more concerted efforts to focus on core academics. This is a good vehicle for driving improvement."

Harbor-front park sails by zoning board

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The zoning board has agreed that improvements to turn the town-owned Hagerty Property into a waterfront park do not fall under its jurisdiction.

"We've agreed to write a decision saying it's an allowed use because it's a public park," zoning board member Barbara Power said.

Engineer John Modzelewski of Civil Designs Inc., consultant for the project, presented the plans to the board Monday. The town's zoning by-laws require special permits for structures and surfaces within a flood plain or water protection district with a few exceptions. Public parks and incidental recreational uses are allowed under the by-law as a matter of right, as long as people are property are protected from the hazards of floods and pollution, the zoning board said.

The town bought the two-plus acre site at the end of Parker Avenue about four years ago. Selectmen subsequently appointed a committee to come up with a design that would include parking and passive recreational use.

Plans include raising the grade of the parking lot a maximum of two feet to help alleviate flooding there so some grass can be planted.

Modzelewski pointed out that because it is a tidal area, adding fill would not exacerbate flooding.

A dock and gangway is also planned and there will be a walkway replacing the existing footpath from the Hagerty site to Government Island with a small deck area near the boat house. Most of the walkway will be "loamed" and seeded. No paving is planned even for the parking area, Modzelewski said.

ZBA member Benjamin Lacey said when the town buys land for a park, the zoning board is excused.

"It's up to selectmen, it's their baby," he said. "They'll be plenty of control, it's just not us."

Improvements to the Hagerty property, the former site of Cohasset Colonials company, must also past muster from the conservation commission, which is meeting on the issue next week.

Permits must also be obtained from the Army Corps of Engineers and the state.

Hagerty Committee member Veneta Roebuck, who also sits on the conservation commission, said required permits should be in line by the spring.

"Then we'll figure out how much this is going to cost and go out to bid," she said.

Unicorn Singers to present unique choral work

The Unicorn Singers will present Elliot Levine's charming "Cantata of the Animals" this weekend in performances to benefit local charities at the host churches. This charming piece, recently commissioned by a New Jersey choral group, was received with much enthusiasm last February at the American Choral Directors' Association Eastern Convention in Providence, R.I.

The Cantata focuses on a variety of creatures present at the birth of the baby in the manger. In addition to the donkey, sheep and cows usually associated with the nativity scene, this work draws our attention as well to the cat and dog (at first baying at each other from the back and front of the hall!), the droll trio of mice peeking out of the rafters above the expectant mother waiting below, and even a spider spinning curlicues above the baby, while more earthly worms crawl out of the old timbers to see what's going on!

The "Cantata of the Animals" is a splendid vehicle for the Unicorn Singers, the South Shore's well-known vocal chamber ensemble; 14 of the group's 20 trained voices have solo or ensemble solo roles in the story. Director Margo Euler is enthusiastic about the theatrical staging; the performers — including orchestra members on flute, oboe, cello, handbells and percussion — move about the space and surround the audience with music from many locations.

Mr. Levine has been the baritone for the much-acclaimed Western Wind Vocal Ensemble since its founding in 1969, and for 13 years has been conductor and coach at that group's workshops, held at Smith, Dartmouth and UMass. He has been awarded five Meet-the-Composer grants, and is composer-in-residence at the Church of St. Thomas More in New York City. His compositions include choral music, solo songs, instrumental pieces and film scores.

Composer Levine looks forward to attending the Saturday evening performance of his piece at Old Ship Church in Hingham at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at Noble's in the Square or at the door. Sunday afternoon the concert will be repeated at First Parish in Cohasset at 4 p.m. The concert is suitable for school-aged children with their parents; as always at Unicorn Singers' concerts, there is lots of audience participation involved in the carol singing portions of the program and also at the finale of the cantata.

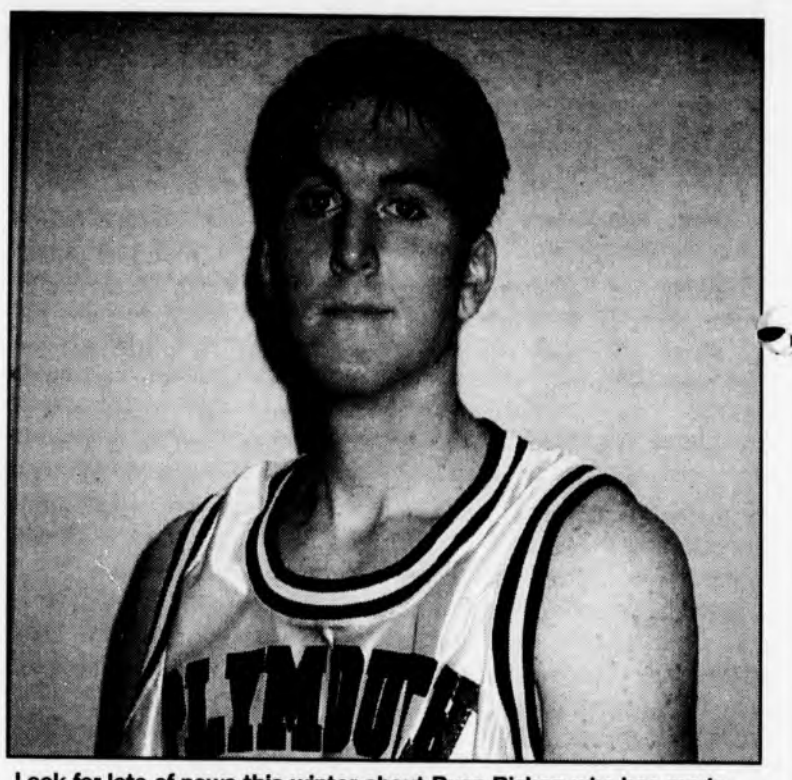
AROUND TOWN

ENCHANTED VILLAGE

Last weekend we had the opportunity to go to the Enchanted Village on City Hall Plaza, and what a treat it was! For those who might not be familiar with it, it is a re-creation of a New England turn-of-the-century village of brownstones and storefronts covered with snow, with lots of animated figures, teddy bears and animals. It's like going back in time, and is well worth the trip — the line looked as though it would last forever, it didn't! We moved right along, purchased tickets ($1 per person for those over 5) and were inside in no time. By the way, City Hall is beautifully decorated also, perfect spot to take a picture or two while you wait! Don't miss this chance to go to a simpler time when ice cream parlors and quaint shops lined holiday streets.

COLBY IN CORK



Chloe J. Chittick, a junior at Colby College, is spending the fall semester of the 1998-99 academic year enrolled in a course of studies in the Colby in Cork Program. Chloe, a graduate of Cohasset Junior-Senior High School and the daughter of Stanley and JoAnne Chittick of Cohasset, is majoring in anthropology at Colby. We hope to hear all about her adventures in Ireland upon her return, what a super experience!

MINOT LIGHT ORNAMENTS

Speaking of going back in time, I forget to mention the beautiful Minot Light ornaments that you can purchase at Flemings. I was so busy describing everything in general I forgot that specific item! These ornaments are goldplated and beautifully done, anyone would enjoy them! Plus, there is an added feature! Two dollars goes to the Historical Society for every ornament that is sold! Go check them out, Flemings is open Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings until 8 for your convenience. It's almost like Cohasset's version of the Enchanted Village!

NEWS FROM BABSON

We saw Jon Anderson last week, he certainly is a busy man! He has been promoted to Assistant Director of Athletics at Babson College! In addition to his duties as soccer coach, he handles all budgetary matters for the department. And, his record as the Men's Soccer Coach is impressive, having guided Babson to eight post-season appearances and the 1997 ECAC New England Championship; Jon has been the Constitution Athletic Conference Coach of the Year four times! And to think he began his career in little ol' Cohasset!

Look for lots of news this winter about Ryan Bishop who has made the basketball team at Plymouth State.

HONORS AT XAVERIAN

We want to congratulate Eric Libby this week; Eric worked extremely hard at Xaverian High School, and consequently earned himself a spot on their honor roll! Keep up the good work, Eric, everyone is very proud of you!

VASSAR HOOPSTER

Joe Slotnick, Class of 1999 at Vassar, has earned a position on the Vassar College men's basketball team. He is a team co-captain, and last year Joe was named the best defensive player on the team! He opens his season at Babson College and will play 25 games throughout the year, so watch for his name in print! Good luck Joe, here's to a winning season!

PLYMOUTH STATE BASKETBALL

Ryan Bishop also makes basketball news this week, he is a sophomore at Plymouth State College who made the squad. Ryan plays center for the Panthers, and we know he will have an impressive season — after all, we saw him in action playing for CHS! He was (and is) great!

MORE BISHOPS NEWS!

Here's more news about College Boy's Basketball — Peter Bishop, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Bishop of Summer Street, is a member of the 1998-99 Hamilton College men's basketball team. Peter is a senior majoring in communication at Hamilton. It sure speaks well for CHS with all of these fine players going on to make a name for themselves on the college scene — we're sure that coach Ford must be very pleased and proud, all of us are!

GIFT CERTIFICATES

Now that Christmas shopping has begun in earnest, there is bound to be someone who has everything" — here's an idea for you — buy a gift certificate to the South Shore Music Circus! As everyone knows, we work there in the summer, and you would be surprised at how many people are there as a result of some thoughtful person purchasing a gift for them! And, the anticipation of watching for the schedule to come out adds to the pleasure! It really is a super idea!

DAR HELPING VETERANS

The local chapter of the DAR will meet at the lighthkeepers residence from 2-4 p.m. on Sunday to wrap gifts to be distributed to the veterans hospital in Brockton. if you can help wrap or have something to donate, please stop by! For more information, call Nancy O'Toole at 383-1547.

GIVE ME A BUZZ

That's the news for this week, I sure hope that you will be in touch with me regarding your latest adventure! Just give me a buzz and we'll do the rest!

Something for friends who drop in!

How many of us would rather make a meal of hors d'oeuvres than anything else? This is the season when friends and relatives "drop in,"

NOW I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

whether to say hello, check out the decorated house, or drop off a gift. It is so nice to be able to ask them to stay for a while, and to be able to offer them a little "goodie" to go along with their glass of wine or ginger ale! Here are some hors d'oeuvres that can be made ahead, frozen, then taken out to present to your guests! They're simple and yummy!

BROILED JUMBO SHRIMP

Shell and devein 25 jumbo shrimp; marinade overnight in 2 cups French dressing. Freeze in marinade. To serve, defrost, drain and broil as close to heat as possible for 3 minutes on each side.

CHEESE LOBSTER ROLLS

Melt in double boiler 1/4 pound butter and 1/2 pound pasteurized processed cheese; add 1 pound lobster meat, fresh or frozen cut in pieces; remove crusts from 2 loaves very fresh sliced white bread. Roll the bread very thin with a rolling pin. Spread lobster mixture on bread slices. Roll up and freeze. When ready to serve, cut each roll in half and spread with melted butter. Defrost and bake at 400 for 10-15 minutes (makes 70 rolls).

CHEESE SAVORIES

Put through food chopper 1/2 pound yellow cheese, 1 onion and 8 slices crisp bacon. Blend this with 2 teaspoons mayonnaise and 1 teaspoon dry mustard. Cut into 1-1/2 inch rounds (you should get two from each slice) 2 loaves thick fresh sliced white bread. Toast on one side. Spread mixture on other side. Freeze. To serve, defrost and broil 2-4 minutes. (makes 5 dozen savories).

ROLLED PANCAKE BITES

Make dollar size pancakes, using a thin batter. Combine 2 tablespoons mayonnaise, 3-ounce package softened cream cheese, 4 teaspoons horseradish, and 2 large cans deviled ham. Fill the pancakes with this mixture; roll and secure with toothpicks. Freeze. To serve, defrost and broil for two minutes under broiler or sauté lightly in butter in a skillet or chafing dish (40 pancakes).

There you have it — make them now, serve them later! Or, make and enjoy!

LIBRARY CORNER

Magazine survey results

The results of a poll of library users concerning their favorite magazines have been tallied. The most frequently cited favorites were: New York People, Practical Sailor, American Heritage, American Spectator, Cooking Light, Mother Earth News, Organic Gardening, Teen, Time, Vanity Fair and Weekly Standard.

"It's no surprise that Practical Sailor ranked high in this community," said Library Director Janet Husband. "But perhaps it's good news that Cooking Light was favored over older cooking magazines — Gourmet, for instance."

The popularity of New York, Vanity Fair and Weekly Standard suggest a sophisticated readership. Listings for American Heritage and Time indicate a traditional readership, yet those for Mother Earth News and Organic Gardening hint at some "countercultural" interests.

Will the library be influenced by the results of this survey? "Yes, indeed," said Mrs. Husband, "we'll be renewing or adding all the titles listed above."

Lions Club donates audiobooks

The local chapter of Lions International has donated $500 to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library for the purchase of audiobooks. "This comes at a perfect time for us," said Janet Husband, Library Director, "because we are just building up our selection of audiobooks."

Audiobooks, also called books-on-tape, were originally produced for use with the visually handicapped. They are designed to play on ordinary cassette players. But they have also become popular with busy commuters who like to listen to books as they drive. Fortunately, as the demand for audiobooks has increased, the supply of new titles has also increased. In fact, many bestsellers are issued in hardcover and audio format on the same date.

The Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library would like to thank the members of the Lions whose fund drive made this generous donation possible. And thanks also to those who contributed to the Hull Lions Club's recent fund-raising campaign.

Ambulance billing update

Last month, the town billed for 26 ambulance transports for a total commitment of $9,499.37. During November, $13,671.43 was collected in ambulance bills that can apply to prior months and prior fiscal years. So far this fiscal year which began July 1, the town has collected $62,020.41 and billed for $66,494.24 for ambulance service.

No price yet for town flag

Town Manager Mark Haddad said his office is still in the process of getting price estimates for a new town flag. Selectmen said they would like to spend some of the $5,000 collected through selling the obsolete fire boxes for a new town flag to fly under the American flag on the town common flag pole on special occasions. They may buy another town flag for the flagpole at Alumni Field.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Dec. 15.

Town meeting warrant deadlines

Selectmen voted to open the warrant for the March 27 annual town meeting. The warrant will close on Jan. 14. The deadline for citizen petition articles is Jan. 11.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Managing our teachers

Testing all teachers, which is Gov. Paul Cellucci's stock response to the recent MCAS scores, is a glib and superficial prescription for teacher workforce development issues that are critical to improving our schools.

It also demonstrates again the disconnect between management in the modern corporation and management in schools. Most companies we know put little stock in standardized tests for prospective employees. They interview carefully, check out the applicant's past work and references, and monitor new hires closely during a probationary period during their first weeks on the job.

But in teaching, one of the world's most stressful occupations, the tradition is to throw new-hires into classrooms with little guidance and minimal supervision. They are expected to teach a full schedule, and often are saddled with extra duties and more difficult students. A high percentage of teachers struggle their first year, and as they struggle, so do the children in their classes.

This trial by fire is typical of the peculiar workplace culture in most public schools. Co-workers are slow to either mentor or criticize in a culture that stresses mutual support and encourages institutional defensiveness. Administrators share the cultural bias against criticizing those they think of as coworkers, not subordinates. Unions serve to protect poor performers and discourage meaningful evaluation and rigorous supervision.

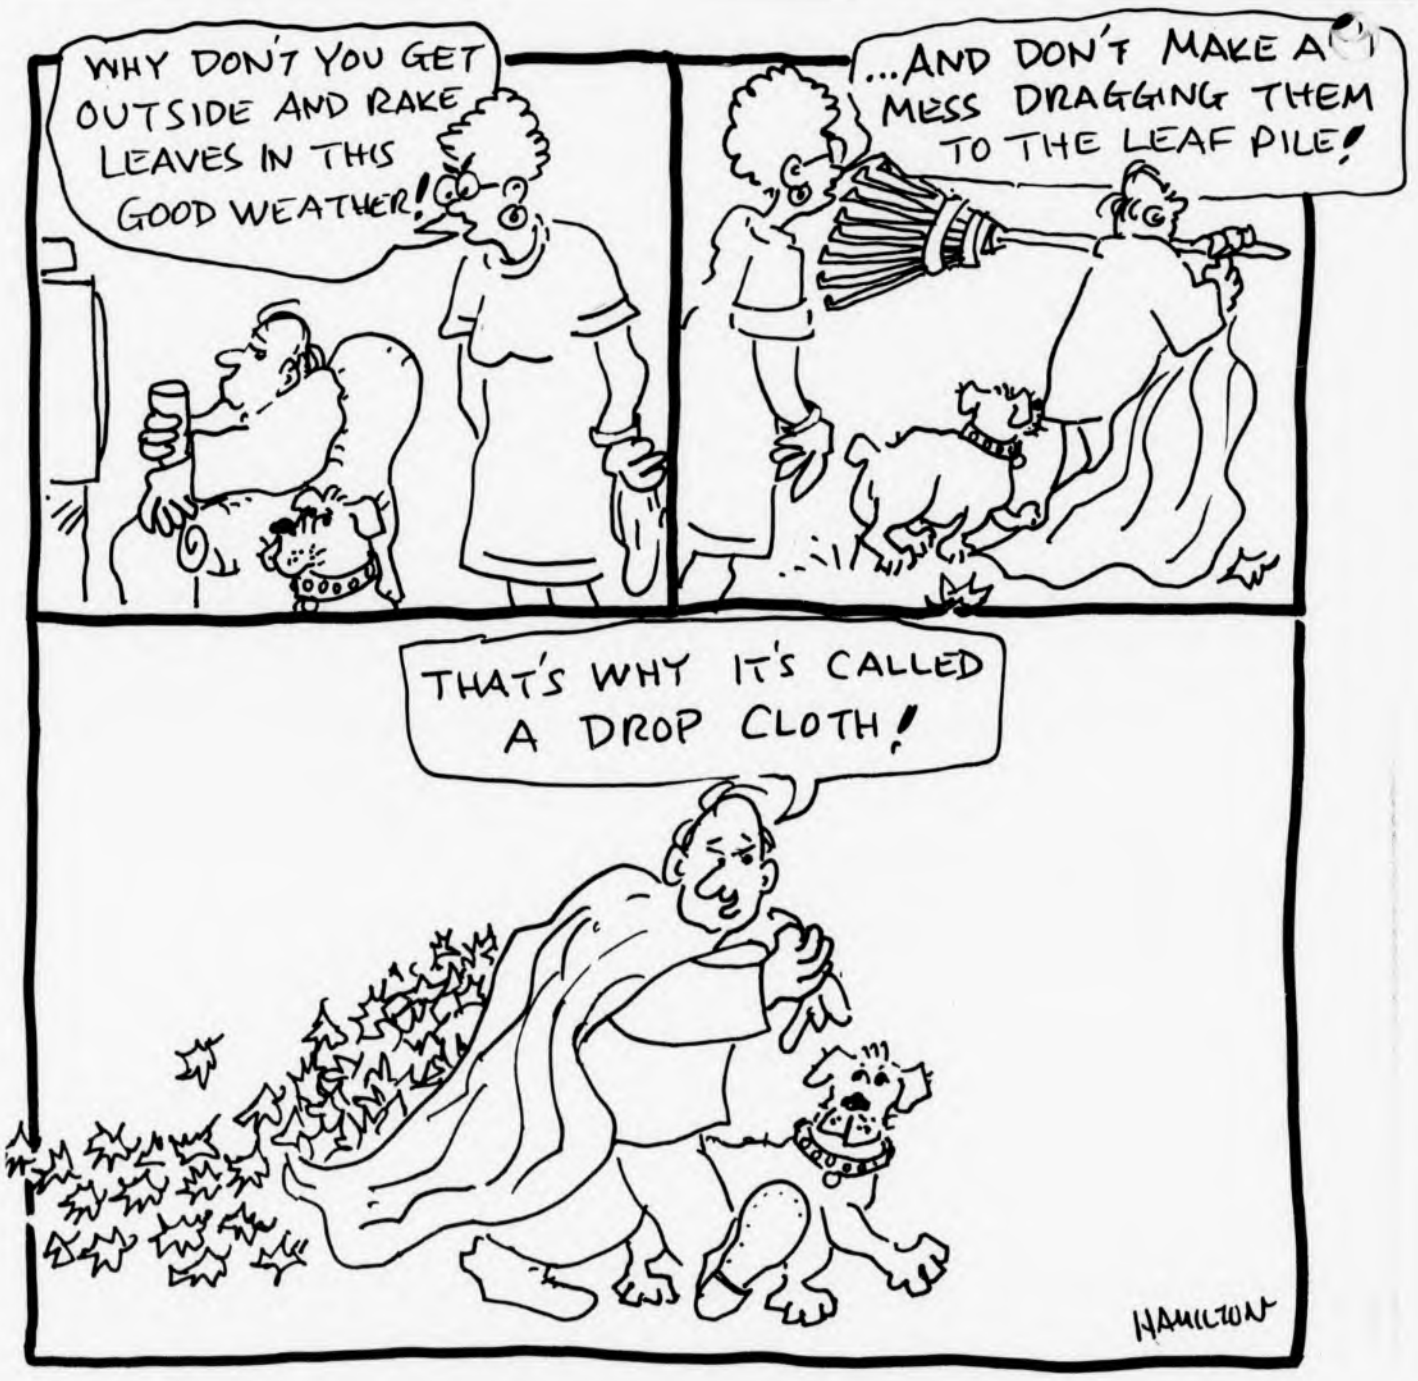
Some of these problems are reflected in a new study of teacher development in Massachusetts prepared for the Massachusetts Education Reform Review Commission. In a survey of 29 school districts, its authors found inadequate training, supervision and evaluation down the line.

"Most districts have adopted new supervision and evaluation tools, but many administrators lack adequate and ongoing training to use them," the report states, "and there is a lack of evidence of the rigorous application of supervision and evaluation standards in schools."

At a time when new curricula are being introduced, new professional training required and new diagnostic tools provided to improve classroom performance, effective management of change at the school level is more important than ever. But according to the study, "many administrators have a large number of supervisees to evaluate, undermining their ability to provide in-depth coaching and supervision."

This point is reinforced by a national analysis by the Educational Research Service. Using Bureau of Labor Statistics data, it found that that in the communications field, for instance, there are an average of 3.7 people employed for each supervising executive. In construction there are 5.5 workers for each boss; in manufacturing, there are 6.2.

But in public elementary and secondary schools, where the work is more creative and demanding, where the workers are on their own most of the day, in an industry under intense pressure to improve performance, where the front-line workers are under fire from all sides? There, each supervisor is responsible for an average of 13.5 employees.



For years, critics of public education have railed about "excess administrators." Thanks to those critics, school consolidation and budget cuts, the number of administrators nationwide has actually decreased over the past 35 years and the percent of school budgets allocated for administration has declined over the past 15 years.

Those who perennially call for government to behave more like business ought to recognize that if management is critical to an organization's success in the private sector, we shouldn't expect schools to succeed without strong management.

The authors of the state's Education Reform legislation recognized this by giving principals more authority over those in their buildings and superintendents more authority over teachers and principals. Some have responded positively to this new authority, but many others, burned out by expectations that rise faster than public support, have left the field. The ranks of would-be school administrators were thinned by widespread teacher layoffs in the early '80s, when today's principals were starting their careers, and today's booming economy is offering tempting alternatives to school life for the best and brightest administrators.

Those working on improving Massachusetts schools are learning that education is a seamless garment. To get better students, we need to attract and train better teachers. To get better teachers, we'll need more and better administrators. We can start by recognizing that in schools as in business, good management isn't a luxury, it's a necessity.

From the MetroWest Daily News/Rick Holmes

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thanks for the memories

To the Editor:

Two years ago we moved to Cohasset from Scotland knowing only one family! This week will see us return with an address book full of new friends. We wanted to take this opportunity to say thank you to everyone for being so welcoming and friendly. We have had the most wonderful time and are so very sorry to be leaving this beautiful place.

There are so many special people in this town whom we'd particularly like to thank, but here are just a few:

To Adrian and Sarah Roche and their kids for being the "one family" we knew of and for suggesting Cohasset as THE place to live. Thanks for everything you've done for us.

To Kate McPhee, Rose Collins and Maureen Alcott at Osgood who eased Katie into a new school in a new country, different ways and a slightly different language! Thanks to them, she has loved every minute of her school days here.

To Ilene Colwill who looked after her from her first to her last day, and eventually managed to persuade her to ride on the school bus!

To Lyn Previte who took little Alexander into her home, made him feel like one of her own and gave him the best introduction to time away from Mom. She will always hold a special place in his heart.

To Lynne Sheridan and all his wonderful teachers at the South Shore Community Center Nursery School and to Linda Bolster for his fun Wednesdays.

And a very special thanks to our close friends the Kimlas, the Cahills and the Fortins for just being there for us.

We know we will return to Cohasset, if only for vacations (anyone want a house swap in Edinburgh?!).

Until then . . .

Happy Holidays!

to this project. It would not have happened without their enthusiasm and desire to help others less fortunate. Our Deer Hill students are a remarkable bunch and they should be very proud of their accomplishments.

Thank you to all the parents who donated yarn and needles and wielded their crochet hooks in the closing up of minor and major hat holes. Their support and positive feedback made those nights of casting on 50 students' hats and reknitting twists just fly by! Deer Hill parents are truly the best.

A big thank you to both Brian Shultz of the South Shore Collaborative and to kindergarten teacher, Christine Darmetko, for the hundreds of pom-poms made by their students. The toppers really "finished" the hats and made them look spectacular. Special thanks to the Deer Hill staff and especially, to Principal Paul Callahan, for supporting this project by knitting themselves, encouraging the students and by allowing the occasional knitting in class, during reading time.

I would also like to thank the Cohasset community who called with yarn donations and offers of assistance; this truly was a community effort and without all this support we definitely would not have accomplished our goal. To all who helped make this idea a reality, thank you. And lastly, to the Cohasset Mariner, for your support of the arts and of all my projects, a big thank you. It is nice to know you are out there. And, as always, Alan's pictures are great, too!

Response to Greenbush letter urged

Trudy Coxe, Secretary
Executive Office of Environmental Affairs

DEAR SECRETARY COXE:

I am in receipt of a joint letter from the boards of selectmen representing the towns of Scituate, Hingham and Cohasset dated Sept. 15. This unprecedented effort sends a clear and strong message regarding the frustration and confusion surrounding the proposed restoration of the Greenbush rail line.

I have recently been informed that no response has yet been received from your office. I urge you to acknowledge this unprecedented effort and respond to the concerns of the selectmen in a timely manner.

The letter recounts what thousands of residents, both in favor and against the restoration, have told me; specifically that the Supplement Draft Environmental Impact Report is incomplete, inconsistent, inaccurate and misleading. The taxpayers in these towns have put their financial support behind professional independent reviews of this report and the results have been no less than shocking.

The MBTA has clearly failed to adequately respond to your concerns of June 1, 1995. It is of paramount importance for all concerned, including the MBTA, that a solid presentation of the facts be made, so a proper evaluation of the project can be made.

There have been numerous changes on the South Shore and in the scientific community over the past five years. The dismissed option of expanded commuter boat service has not only been proved viable, but is thriving. The scientific community is re-evaluating the volume of pollutants emitted from diesel locomotives, and alternative fuel vehicles have been a success in many places around the world. It is clear that the time has come to revise the documents submitted the MBTA and consider the facts as they stand today.

As my senate district completely encapsulates the Greenbush line, it is not without careful thought that I have reached these conclusions. There are many commuters in my district in need of relief from overcrowded highways and inadequate public transportation. Although I respect the immediate needs of these constituents, I have a responsibility to the future residents and taxpayers of the South Shore. They will fund the project and deal with its environmental impacts for decades to come. A rush to judgment based on incomplete, inadequate and inaccurate data is a disservice to all residents of the Commonwealth.

I support the efforts and the courage of the selectmen who signed the aforementioned letter. I urge you to carefully consider their request as it did not come lightly or without a great deal of research, forethought and debate.

State Senator

Open letter to students

TO THE EDITOR:

To Students Awaiting MCAS Results:

Last May many of you took the MCAS tests for the first time. You will be receiving your scores in early December. Some of you may be worried. You shouldn't be.

MCAS is a work in progress. The tests are meant to measure how well you are learning what you are supposed to know under new learning standards recently established by the state. Schools are still in the process of matching what students are taught with these standards. In addition, the tests themselves are new. They are being "tested" to make sure they are fair.

While all that is true, it is also true that there is likely to be a great deal of interest in the test results, both for individual students and for each district. Many of you may be wondering how these results will be used.

If you received high scores on the MCAS, and if you also receive good grades and other positive feedback about your accomplishments and behavior, congratulations! You are on the right track.

If you didn't do so well on MCAS, don't despair. In addition to looking at your MCAS scores, teachers will look at your grades, classroom performance and results on other tests to help you to do better in the future.

What now? Study hard and take the MCAS seriously. That doesn't mean giving up other activities — such as music, sports or drama — that are not evaluated by these tests. It does mean, however, that your school work should come first. The stakes are high. Your test scores will be part of your school transcript, and, by 2003, seniors must have passed the grade 10 MCAS tests in order to graduate from high school.

The responsibility is not yours alone. Teachers and school administrators are working hard to make the system work. They will be analyzing your district's test results to figure out if they need to make changes in what they teach — or how they teach it. This is not a one-time exercise, but an ongoing process of improving our public schools.

Your parents and the community as a whole also have an important role to play. They must support your teachers, support your schools and support you in your efforts to do your best in school.

There is a lot of work to be done, but the rewards for doing well in school are also high. Massachusetts already has a high-quality public education system, as well as a strong, knowledge-based economy. By working together to raise student achievement, we can all make a strong education system even better.

IT'S HAPPENING

Clothing drive for homeless

Although the weather has been beautiful, in a few weeks it will change dramatically leaving too many homeless people out in the cold. From Dec. 7 until Dec. 16 the Social Awareness Organization of Cohasset High School will be having a clothing drive. All donations will be brought to Pine Street Inn. The clothing can be dropped off at all main entrances to the Cohasset High School. Please help especially during this holiday season. Thank you for your support and generosity.

The Social Awareness Organization at Cohasset High School will also be having a Toys For Tots collection from Dec. 14 to Dec. 18. All toys can be dropped off at the main entrances of the high school. Thank you for your help, Happy Holidays!

Junior gardeners postponed

Junior Gardeners of the Cohasset Community Garden Club will be cancelled due to a school conflict. If there are any questions, call Georgine Butman at 383-2528.

Training for volunteer drivers

There will be a training for all volunteers Saturday, Dec. 12, at town hall. This training will be conducted by South Shore Elder Services. This is in preparation for arrival of the new handicapped vehicle.

The time for the training session is from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Please call the Council on Elder Affairs at 383-9112 if you are unable to attend. There must be a minimum of eight people in order to conduct the training.

Chamber holiday party

Join your fellow members of the Cohasset Business Community at the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce Annual Holiday Party Monday, Dec. 14, at Really Great Pizza, 35 South Main St., Cohasset Village, 5:30 to 7:30 p.m.

Great food and refreshments will be provided compliments of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

Bring a friend, family member of business associate.

Please RSVP: 383-1010.

Victorian seaside holiday fair

The Hull Lifesaving Museum is celebrating the holiday season with its annual Victorian Seaside Holiday Fair. The newly painted station is festively decorated with running greens and bows, a Victorian style Christmas tree and the Museum Store fully stocked with clothing, books, music, ornaments, toys, soaps, and other gifts. In addition to the dozen artisans at the museum for the craft fair, the station will showcase local artists from the Studio Connection in Hull during the festival weekend.

The craft exposition will include jewelry, textiles, wood sculpture, handcrafts, metal work and more. Renee Marcou will display jewelry of copper, brass and silver with beads in ethnic designs as well as wood sculpture, Kate Greenlaugh will be presenting hand-woven textiles, Chris Hidell will be returning with his metal sculptures, and Nanci Jaye will be on hand with her silk scarves, fimo clay jewelry and pastel paintings. Hand crocheted afghans will be available from Eileen Dever, Marilyn LeBlanc will be on hand with Victorian-style Christmas stockings, lighthouse slates, embroidered floral work and other touches of whimsy, and Liz Holbrook will be returning with her handmade olive oil soaps and natural lavender heating wraps. Nick Cotoulas of Pasquales Prints will be returning with historical scenes of Hull and the region.

The Museum's own boatbuilder Reuben Smith will demonstrate half-hull model carving, and Friends of Boston Harbor will have an information table with a few exclusive Harbor-related gifts.

This year the Museum's youth rowers will host a gift-wrapping table and raffle table to benefit programs. Admission is free. For more information, please call Corinne Leung at the Museum at 925-5433.

Open discussion on Alzheimer's

The Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore will hold an open discussion and peer support meeting Wednesday, Dec. 16, at Thaxter Community Hall, 30 Thaxter St. in Hingham at 7:30 p.m.

Families dealing with the disease are invited to attend to share problems and solutions. Topics will include coping techniques for the holidays for patient, caregivers and family members.

Anyone interested in learning more about Alzheimer's Disease is welcome. For more information call Ruth Scully (781) 740-2426 or Toni Abbott (781) 749-1823.

Children's Council to meet

The Coastline and South Shore Councils for Children will hold their annual holiday gathering at the home of Roberta Dunfield, 35 Arbutus Dr., Braintree, Tuesday, Dec. 15, at 7:30 p.m.

The Councils are a South Shore group of volunteers living or working in Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Randolph, Scituate and Weymouth, who are interested in improving services for children and adolescents. The meeting is free and open to all. This is an opportunity to meet the membership and learn more about their activities.

For further information, call Ms. Marty Amdur of Hingham at 749-0691.

'Sounds of Christmas' concert

"Sounds of Christmas," a free concert by the Sanctuary and Holiday Choirs of the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset will be held Sunday, Dec. 13, at 3 p.m.

This year's concert is under the direction of Ellen Brown and promises to offer a variety of Christmas music that will set the tone for the weeks ahead. All are invited to join in the spirit of the season at the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset (next to town hall). Call 383-0345.

Carousel of Light

The first lights of the Friends of the Paragon Carousel will be turned on for the holidays starting Dec. 14 in time for Hanukkah and the Christmas holidays. Set to shine through Jan. 10, the Carousel of Light offers all lovers of the former Paragon Carousel a way to show their support for the landmark during the holiday season.

For every $5 donation received through Jan. 5, the Friends will light another bulb on one of the 20 strands that encircle the carousel. Sponsorship of a light or lights may be made in the donor's name or in the name of a loved one. Donations should be sent to the Friends of the Paragon Carousel, P.O. Box 100, Hull, MA 02045.

Planning board tours Morrissey parcel off Highland Ave.

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Planning board members, neighbors and Ellen Morrissey met up at 8:30 a.m., Saturday, to tour Morrisey's property and proposed common driveway off of Highland Avenue.

"We had posted that we would meet at 8:30 and we were all there," said planning board Chairman Al Moore. "We walked all over the property. No decisions were made. It was largely just to see firsthand what it was all about."

The ongoing Morrissey bid to build a driveway to access her property has been a lengthy affair, stretching back at least five years, according to Moore.

"It's a touchy situation," he said. "The initial plan was totally misdrawn so we've asked her to come back to us with a proper engineering drawing. Because of the proximity of this, we really want to make sure that everything is surveyed properly. It's pretty much like you would expect. There are a lot of problems associated with that property relative to access."

Planning board members, Morrissey and neighbors surveyed the area for 1-1/2 hours in an attempt to gain a better sense of the property layout.

"It's unusual," said Moore, about the visit. "We rarely do that. But when we have a site that is as complicated an issue as this one, it sometimes helps to see it. It certainly helped me. At least we got a very real sense of what we're talking about.

The case has been an unusual one in many ways, not only because of Morrisey's many visits with the planning board, but also because of the board's various attempts to steer the situation to some kind of resolution.

A meeting several weeks ago that offered Morrissey's neighbors a chance to air their views on what they would like to see done at the site resulted in a tepid response.

Mark DeGiacomo of Holly Lane explained that the neighbors were reticent about expressing their ideas because what might benefit one neighbor would more than likely have a negative impact on another neighbor in the area surrounding Morrissey's lot.

The site is difficult to see when passing by car on Highland Ave. If you were to come out of the town hall parking lot, turn left, three houses later, see two hedges that are very close together and the little space between them is the road, that would [illegible] it," said Moore. "And that road go[illegible] up would virtually take off the corner of the house going back there."

Morrissey is expected to come before the planning board again with new professional plans drawn up.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Gun story concerns raised

To the Editor:

A recent article "Police Aim to Track Cohasset Guns" contained some inaccuracies and raised some concerns.

First of all, we note that the term FID stands for "Firearms Identification" card, not "federal." The card is issued by the local police department, not the federal government.

We would also point out that the law clearly exempts all persons who held a license to carry firearms or FID card as of June 1, 1998, from having to take a "gun safety course." The firearms license has contained a photograph, signature and fingerprint for decades.

Further inaccuracies were contained in the paragraph about self-defense. Despite your allegations that "law enforcement officials believe it is inappropriate for a citizen," the law clearly allows a person to use deadly force when acting in the immediate belief that a person unlawfully in the home was about to inflict grave bodily injury upon an occupant of the home.

I'm also not sure why "law enforcement officials" would say such a thing. The most recent national survey of police indicated 96.2 percent support the citizens' right to self defense with firearms.

Let's talk about the subject your article never addresses directly. Despite 90 years of licensing, are you saying local law enforcement just doesn't trust private citizens with firearms? That they believe — though the record clearly shows — that private citizens can not be trusted to carry firearms? The new gun control laws deliberately set out to create more criminals by making it more and more difficult for the law abiding to obtain a license. The focus is on the law abiding citizen, not on the criminal.

Massachusetts gigantic information-gathering machine, set into motion by the passage of Chapter 180 of the Acts of 1998, goes directly against the national trend. In the past decade, more than 30 states have enacted "right to carry" laws. In each and every case, violent crime was immediately reduced, and the rates have continued to drop. In one state, violent crime dropped by more than three times the national average.

Regardless of whether or not you own guns, it should trouble you that the government is seeking this depth of containment on people who have a proven track record as law abiding. We urge you to contact your state representative and senator to ask them to repeal this onerous law.

Jingle Bell Walk a success!

To the Editor:

On behalf of the South Shore Community Center, we would like to express our appreciation to the many merchants and volunteers who lent a helping hand at our Fifth Jingle Bell Walk.

We had a beautiful day, the bells were ringing from St. Stephen's Church, Mr. and Mrs. Claus and helpers arrived at Government Island by boat and everyone got into the holiday spirit.

Congratulations to the winners of the Turkey Trot, and all of the children who joined in. Everyone had a great time with more than 100 children participating.

A special thanks to the following merchants: Aquarius Sunrooms, Barry Waste, Noble's, Donna Green, Buttonwood Books, Victoria's Pizza, Hallmark Properties, Sweet Surprises, Village Wine & Spirits, South Shore Art Center, Hernon's, Tedeschi's, Hunneman Real Estate, Atlantic Valuation Group, Cohasset News, Dunkin' Donuts, French Memories, Goodale Insurance, Hingham Institution for Savings, Stop & Shop, Hub Shipping, Rockland Trust, Nuthin' More Natural, Royal Vending, Village Greenery, Fleet Bank, Shaw's, Bank Boston, Fitness First Plus, Bergson's, Pat the Barber, The Children's Exchange, Good Sport, Carousel Antiques, Rudolph Adamo, Cards & Shards, Cohasset Hardware, Fleming's, Flowers by Joan, Heads-n-Tails, The Silver Spoon, Dependable Cleaners, CVS, Kimball's by the Sea, Papa Gino's, IES Language Program, Pilgrim Co-Op Bank.

We would like to thank all our volunteers. A special thanks to the students from Cohasset High School under the direction of Maureen Duffy, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce Merchant Members, the Council on Elder Affairs, the Girl Scouts, Cohasset Harborfest Marching Band, Cohasset Fire Dept., Cohasset Police Dept., Mr. and Mrs. Claus and all their helpers, Mark Haddad, Joseph and Lynne Previte, Kit Coffey, Matt Salerno, Kevin Crough, Sue DiPesa, Matt Galligan and Lisa Westcott, who gave so much of their time to make this event a huge success. Thank you all.

The cold war missiles of Cohasset

Site was part of Boston defense ring

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Turkey Hill offers one of the nicest views on the South Shore. Thanks to the recent acquisition of the 50 acre site for passive recreation, members of the public can travel to the top of the hill and enjoy that view.

But 40 years ago, climbing to the top of Turkey Hill would have been a violation of national security. A U.S. government Nike anti-aircraft radar installation sat on top of the hill awaiting Soviet bombers and the beginning of World War III. That radar facility served as a tracking station for 48 Nike anti-aircraft missiles which sat in three underground storage bunkers in Cohasset on the site where the state DPW now maintains a storage facility. Within 15 minutes of an enemy sighting, those missiles could launch to intercept incoming Soviet bombers intent on dropping nuclear bombs on major U. S. cities.

It seems almost incomprehensible that the U.S. government maintained anti-aircraft missiles in Cohasset. But the local Nike missile program was part of a ring of about a dozen anti-aircraft missile sites that protected the Boston area from a Soviet bomber strike beginning in the 1950s and continuing through the 1970s. Other Nike sites protected cities all along the east coast and sometimes farther inland. As the Nike missile program evolved, the government replaced the conventional missiles with nuclear warheads at a limited number of sites. The nuclear warheads were intended to destroy entire formations of Soviet bombers with a single missile. Sites not converted to nuclear capability were dismantled in the mid-1960s. There were no nuclear missiles in Cohasset

Information about the Nike site in Cohasset is limited. The bases were kept semi-secret because they were part of a national missile defense program. Some information about the Cohasset site is stored in the United States Naval and Shipbuilding Museum, maintained by archivist Jim Fahey on the U.S.S. Salem in Quincy. Declassified documents from the U.S. Army's Department of Real Estate Division confirm the location of Nike missiles in Cohasset.

The Nike anti-aircraft radar installation on Hog Island (now Spinnaker Island) in Hull was similar to the one atop Turkey Hill during the cold war.

Tom Foster of the Trustees of Reservations was able to supply some additional information about Nike Battery B-38, the name of the Cohasset site. Nike Battery B-38 opened in 1956 and stayed in active operation through 1964. Obstructions on Turkey Hill forced the army to place the three radar units on steel towers. The army usually placed the radar units on ground-level concrete pads. The access road extended from the top of Turkey Hill, down its north side close to Route 3A.

The Nike program began at the end of W.W.II. The army saw a need for a missile defense program to defend against a nuclear strike by the Soviet Union. In the early 1950s, airplanes were still the prime method of delivering a nuclear bomb to a target. The situation would change in later decades with the development of intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBMs). The Nike program installed anti-aircraft batteries around major metropolitan areas and important military installations.

The first type of missile used in the Nike program was the Ajax, a two-stage rocket with a solid fuel booster and a liquid fuel sustainer. The first Nikes were deployed in 1954 and most stayed in use until 1964, with the last sites decommissioned in 1974. Each site typically contained three launch areas each containing 16 missiles, a barracks, missile preparation buildings, dog barracks, and a fence surrounding the entire base. Missiles were stored underground, and raised on hydraulic arms to a launch pad for firing. The missiles were controlled from the ground using radar to track targets. The operator would detonate the missile when it was close enough to the target.

The radar system was not sufficient for its task: missiles could not lock onto a single airplane. Operators could fire only one missile at a time because of the inadequate radar system. It was common for a missile to detonate in the middle of a formation of aircraft. Also, army tests showed that the detonations rarely took out the intended targets.

In 1958, the army fitted selected sites with nuclear tipped Hercules Nike missiles. The plan was to detonate a small three or four kiloton warhead— less than half the size of the 10-megaton bomb dropped on Hiroshima — and take out an entire Russian bomber squadron. Essentially, the army intended to destroy planes carrying nuclear bombs with a nuclear missile. The army felt the fallout from a small detonation at a high altitude would be better than letting the Soviets drop larger nuclear devices on large population centers.

The Boston defense ring included Nike sites in Quincy, the Blue Hills, Weymouth/Hull, Danvers, Burlington, Hingham/Cohasset, Reading, Bedford, Danvers/Topsfield, Beverly, Nahant, Lincoln and Needham. By the mid-1970s, the army realized that if the Soviets attacked, they would launch ICBMs over the Arctic Circle into the U.S. The Nike was obsolete, and the remaining bases were decommissioned.

Donald Bender is a Nike historian from New York. His research indicates that sites not converted to Hercules missiles were closed in 1964. The Cohasset site was closed around this time. Bender said the only Massachusetts sites converted to Hercules missiles were the locations in Danvers, South Lincoln and Ft. Duvall/Hull (Weymouth). Army documents also list Needham as a Hercules site. The Cohasset site held Ajax missiles, but was never converted to Hercules capability.

Donald LeBlanc of Randolph worked at the Blue Hills site through 1964. He was eventually transferred to the Weymouth/Hull site, which did contain nuclear missiles. LeBlanc said the Randolph site never fired a missile. But during the Cuban missile crisis of 1961, the missiles were raised onto the launch pad and ready to fire.

"The missiles were standing tall and the flags were pulled," LeBlanc said. "We were ready."

But the missiles were never fired. The Cohasset base never fired a missile either, and it was dismantled shortly after 1964.

Feeney. "I took Digiacomo's license away, had a hearing on Monday and revoked his license for two months so that he cannot operate hoisting machinery now."

Most troubling was the contracting company's callousness in dealing with the aftermath of their leaks, Feeney said.

"I went door to door and visited with the neighbors and from what they described about their treatment, I'm surprised that they didn't go out there with baseball bats to get this guy, the women especially," said Feeney.

One such woman, a Linden Drive resident, said that after the D&C Construction men broke the gas line leading into her house, she had the gas company in to shut the gas valve leading to her house and to extinguish her pilots. She expressed her fears and concerns to D&C Construction employees and to Mr. Digiacomo. The resident said that the men "laughed in her face and expressed no concern" for the fear that she was experiencing as a result of their error.

"About the rudeness; there was one lady and I never spoke to her myself," said Digiacomo. "She came out of the house yelling and screaming and we couldn't even say one word. The policeman spoke to her and said, 'Lady, it wasn't his fault,' because it was somebody else that pulled it. I was standing in front of her house, but I didn't pull the line to her house. It is the gas company's fault. It's the wrong marks and even the police saw that."

Feeney also visited a Forest Notch home where, on Sept. 10, a "large piece of ledge flew and landed within feet" of the resident and her three-year-old daughter in the backyard. The ledge "fell with a forceful impact" according to the visiting family member who penned a complaint to the office of the State Fire Marshall.

The ledge piece was a rock about 6"x5"x3" that had imbedded about 1.5 inches in the lawn.

When the visitor went to the contractor's engineer in the presence of the policeman on duty to show the piece of rock, he saw that they had not used a steel mat over the blast area of roadway as a preventive measure. He also noted that the policemen present had not been given a hard hat to wear for protection.

"There is no law against contractors being ignorant to the neighbors, but I license people to be trustworthy and competent," said Feeney.

According to Feeney, he is one of 10 inspectors for the entire state that keep tabs on license holders in a manner similar to the Registry of Motor Vehicles.

"We are the ones that can help with this," he said. "We license then and then we have the power to take the license away if they're not responsible."

For Captain Trask, the last straw was Linden Drive.

"When we arrived there, there were probably 10 or 12 kids waiting for the bus stop at Linden Circle and Linden Drive," said Trask. "The leak was at the beginning of the circle, 100 to 120 feet away from where the bus stop was. The first thing we did when we got there was escort the children to Rustic Drive where they would be out of harms way. During the course of standing by, several neighbors came out and complained to us. One in particular was very upset that there had been service line damage to her house and that the contractors were laughing at her when she complained about it. That's when Mark Mooney, assistant chief of inspections for the Department of Public Safety, was called.

Feeney interviewed contractors, staff that was working, police officers on detail and engineers with Tutela that were observing the work before issuing his report that led to the revocation of Digiacomo's license.

Dan Coughlin, spokesman for Tutela Engineering which oversees the sewer project for the town, said that he had not received a full report from Feeney, although he did know that Digiacomo's license had been revoked.

"To be honest it's the first I heard that neighbors were handled in a poor manner," he said. "I'll take their word for it. I've talked to several residents and they never told me that they were handled in a poor manner. Again, I don't know what Feeney is referring to. Maybe he spoke to people I didn't. I did hear of one time that one person expressed some concern that they smelled gas and that was near the trench where there was a broken main. My only knowledge was someone who was there at the excavation. I really don't have a comment."

Coughlin did, however, go on to say that Cohasset police have always been present for digging.

"You're saying that there may have been a greater danger but it didn't appear to be such at the time, only from the perspective that there were policemen on hand," said Coughlin. "If there were a greater concern, I would have though that they would have directed the people to stay away or move away or whatever. I don't know about that situation with the ambulance moving the children away. I don't know if its an overreaction to the situation there. We can these people to take all precautions. They are the public safety officials for the town of Cohasset. It's only been this last time that there has been a great concern raised and I think that was raised because of the Hingham situation."

Two weeks ago, Richard and Anne Crowley narrowly escaped with their lives when their 52 Canterbury Street home in Hingham exploded due to a gas main break leading to their home.

Although Digiacomo's license has been suspended for 60 days, he is still on site working as a laborer. "I've called Feeney's boss, Chief Mooney, and we'll be trying to request from the gas company that they do their markings and layouts in a fashion which would more or less guarantee their locations and they can't use alternate location methods," said Coughlin. The curved and narrow roads have been difficult for contractors due to ledge in the area and shallow gas pipes, according to Guild and Coughlin.

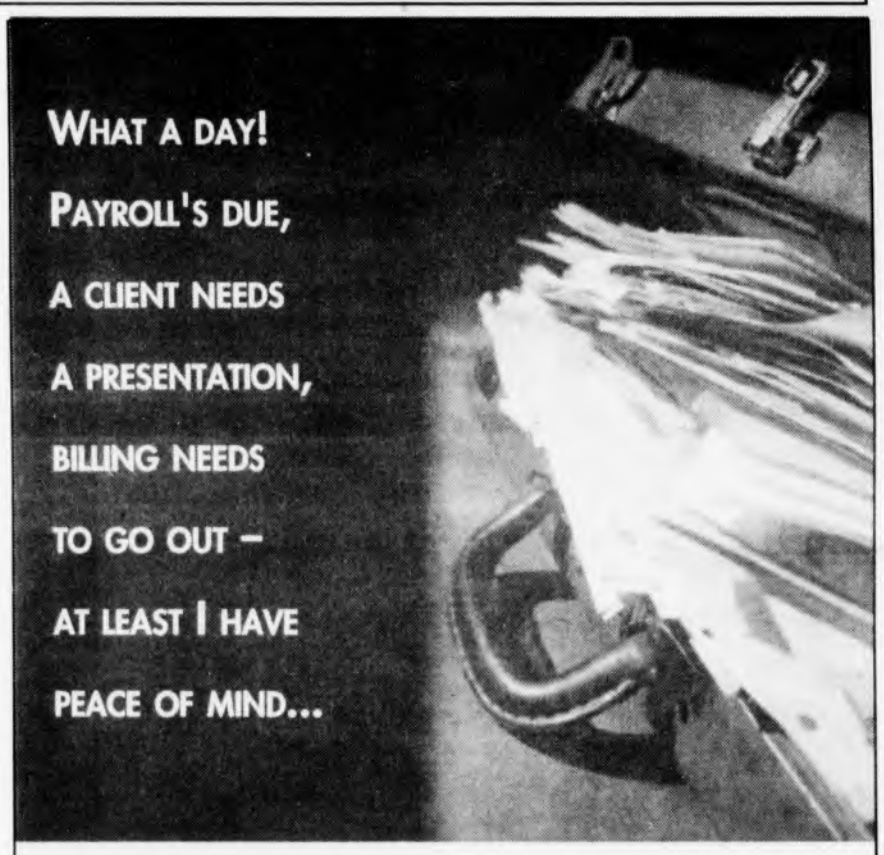
Unless Digiacomo appeals Monday's decision within the next few days, he will have to prove to the state that he has provided all his D&C workers that currently hold a Massachusetts hoisting license with a documented instructional session on proper use of heavy equipment around utility/gas lines, including the required use of hand shovels to locate gas lines. The instructional session must be completed prior to re-issue of Digiacomo's license.

"Everyone is against me, the fire guys and everybody was against me," said Digiacomo. "I couldn't say anything. It's not my fault—it's the wrong mark. I can't do much about it. Everybody, even the police saw that the markings were wrong. We were working until 5:30 one night and I pulled a gas mark that was off. The house in Hingham blew up and now everyone in Cohasset blew up. We want it to be safe for everybody, for me and for the people. I worry more for the people. Safety is first. I wouldn't have pulled there if the mark didn't say it was okay. I don't want anyone upset. Even the gas company has a problem when they come down because they can't figure out which pipe it is. We did everything by the book and I think I am the scapegoat."

Dept. of Public Safety lists violations

This is a list of preliminary findings concerning D&C Construction of Rockland and their work in Cohasset as submitted by state Department of Public Safety district engineering inspector Richard Sweeney.

Mr. Giuiseppe Digiacomo of Lexington, MA (Hoisting License 030647) did rupture multiple gas lines that were clearly marked and unmarked by Dig Safe.



D&C Construction of Rockland, MA did submit and use a Dig Safe number in November that had expired in August of 1998.

During my investigation in December 1, 1998 I observed three (3) working trenches without a hand shovel present.

During a gas rupture caused by Mr. Digiacomo and while emitting gas and being repaired by the gas company, Mr. Digiacomo was attempting (just approximately 100' away down wind from the leak) to detonate explosives and had to be ordered to stop until the gas leak was sealed.

A large piece of ledge approximately 5" X 6" X 3" flew to an adjacent street after being blasted by Mr. Digiacomo without proper blast mat, landing within feet of [a resident] and her daughter while in their backyard.

Town Engineer Arthur Levents has received many complaints regarding D&C Construction and the actions of Mr. Giuisippe Digiacomo.

Taxpayers to share sewer cost

ject. To Plante, education on the issue was the key on what she sees as a municipal project not something that would fall entirely on the shoulders of the sewer users.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who also lives in North Cohasset, was happy with the vote.

"I frankly feel the voters understood the issue and supported fairness," she said. "I'm very pleased with the vote."

Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild said it was an equitable solution.

"It's right for the taxpayers, right for the people who will benefit from the sewer and right for the environment," he said.

The North Cohasset area is predominately ledge making it impossible in many cases to upgrade septic systems.

This is the third time in as many years that a sewer override has come before the voters. A ballot question asking for 50/50 shared town/user funding for the North Cohasset project narrowly failed in 1996. A ballot question, which included both the North and Central Cohasset projects, subsequently passed in 1997.

But at that time, sewering North Cohasset was expected to cost $6.6 million. However, bids for the project came in about 40 percent higher than expected — resulting in more than a year of wrangling among town officials and residents on what to do about the $2.7 million cost overrun.

Months of debate ended in October when, in a vote of 238-36,the special town meeting overwhelmingly supported the 50 percent taxpayer subsidy contingent on a ballot vote.

"It's right for the taxpayers, right for the people who will benefit from the sewer and right for the environment."

— Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said 1,472 ballots were cast on Saturday. There are 5,123 "active voters" in town meaning they've voted in the past several elections, she said.

Precinct I—which comprises the "ocean side" of North and South Main Streets and includes North Cohasset —voted 542-311 in favor of the override. Precinct II — which includes Central Cohasset — voted 253-366 against.

The project, which will connect about 320 "dwelling units" via a sewer main to the Hull treatment plant, will be paid in full at the end of 20 years. (Hookups include houses, condos and apartments).

The $13M Central Cohasset project, which will connect about 660 "dwelling units" to Cohasset's sewer plant, will be bid in January.

Sewer override results

Shall the Town of Cohasset be allowed to exempt from the limitations of Proposition 2-1/2, so called, the amounts required to pay for the bond issued in order to supplement the original funding for the North Cohasset Strait Pond sewer expansion project?

Teachers' contract negotiations underway

School committee Chairman Rick Shea, Vice Chairman Kathy Ofsthun and school Superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey are involved in a collaborative process for teachers' contract negotiations.

"Kathy Ofsthun and I are the school committee representatives in that process," said Shea. "The are six teachers involved in the process, which is time consuming."

The discussions are trying to cover ground ranging from curriculum to salary to issues relating to work the teachers do for school committee members.

The meetings have been two hours in length and are conducted every other week.

"We started meeting weekly three weeks ago," said Shea. "We tried to resolve major financial issues by Thanksgiving."

In the past, teachers negotiations weren't conducted this early in the budget process.

"We wanted to get this resolved so that the budget process was underway with the proposal we'd tentatively agreed on," said Shea.

Shea and Ofsthun consider the process a high priority one.

"Ted is also participating and this allows us a window into the teachers' concerns, not only financial but also educational," said Shea. "I think it's a good process and I'm pleased to be participating in it."

State secretary silent on Greenbush letter

Lack of response leaves towns in quandary

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

It may be time for another meeting between Hingham, Scituate and Cohasset selectmen regarding the MBTA's proposal to restore Greenbush rail service to the South Shore, Hingham selectmen say.

The three towns wrote a joint letter to Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe in September expressing some of their shared concerns about the proposed rail restoration.

Because Coxe is leaving the agency to take another position, the fate of the correspondence is unknown. No response has yet been received.

Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan provided a Greenbush update last week to Hingham selectmen and addressed the issue of the letter sent to Coxe.

"A wide search for her successor is taking place, and the letter may be sitting on a corner of Trudy Coxe's desk to be addressed at a future date," Macmillan said.

Hingham Selectman Martin Crane proposed inviting selectmen from the other towns to get together to discuss the status of the letter.

Hingham Selectmen Chairman Katharine Reardon agreed, stating, "It's time to add to the pile on the corner of (Coxe's) desk."

Restoration of rail service still seems to be no closer to reality even after more than a decade of debate.

But, says Brian Pedro, spokesman for the MBTA, the transit authority has every intention of building the third branch of the Old Colony Railroad.

"A wide search for her successor is taking place, and the letter may be sitting on a corner of Trudy Coxe's desk to be addressed at a future date."
- Hingham Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan

"We built the other two branches and met every federal and local standard," he said. "But we're still waiting for final approval from the Army Corps of Engineers (the lead federal agency involved in reviewing the project)."

Greenbush opponents want to find a safer, less costly and more environmentally feasible means of transportation to help relieve congestion in the area.

Proponents, on the other hand, feel restoring the 17.7-mile Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad is the best solution to ease the transportation woes of the South Shore.

The Corps has been stymied in its efforts to move the project along, according to Macmillan.

"The Corps has been unable to resolve air quality issues and how they compare to other transportation alternatives," he said.

According to Macmillan, the Corps asked the MBTA to issue another report addressing a number of air-quality issues raised by Cohasset resident Kevin O'Keeffe and the Town of Hingham.

Macmillan said the report was delivered to the Corps a couple of weeks ago.

O'Keeffe is the founder of TREQ (Technical Resources for Environmental Quality) Inc. and has been studying air quality issues related to the restoration of rail service for a number of years.

While O'Keeffe said he isn't opposed to rail transportation, he is concerned about related environmental issues.

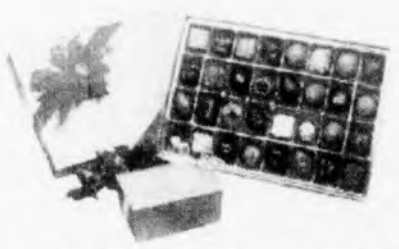
"The MBTA would be using a 900,000-pound vehicle to pick up a (limited number of) people locally," he said. "You can't achieve an environmental benefit by diverting people from low-occupancy cars to low-occupancy transit vehicles."

According to O'Keeffe, the weight of a vehicle affects the amount of energy required to move that vehicle.

The Environmental Protection Agency, which is involved in the review process, has met with him in the past to discuss air-quality issues.

"In fact, the EPA called me Nov. 24," said O'Keeffe. "There's a national rethinking about the whole issue of diesel trains."

Consultants from the Taubman Institute at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government, who are studying primarily the financial feasibility of the Greenbush project, may also highlight some of the environmental concerns surrounding Greenbush in their report, which is expected to be released in January.



Reardon called the Greenbush issue "incredibly complicated — it gets mind-boggling, which is one of the reasons towns get run over (by the MBTA)."

While Pedro acknowledges the complexity of the project, he said the process has been long enough for people to air their views.

"People have certainly had enough time to have their say regarding whether or not to build Greenbush," he said.

This week Cohasset selectmen said they were still interested in working with Hingham and Scituate on issues of mutual concern regarding the train. They will try to meet with their counterparts in Hingham and Scituate in January.

School committee confused by request

A written request to the school committee by the Student Advisory Council to the state Board of Education caused some confusion as to what it was that the advisory counsel was seeking.

The three-page document explained that the council is "lobbying for a bill that advocates a student voting member on each school committee in Massachusetts."

That much was clear, but school committee members were confused about the request for review of the attached copy of the bill.

School committee members unanimously voted to not support the matter.

It was a joyous Cohasset football team on Thanksgiving as the Skippers broke a long drought against Hull with a 14-0 win to end the season at 5-5.

Gridders take steps in right direction

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Even without the departing blaze of glory that was Cohasset's Thanksgiving Day of victory, this football season would be considered a success for the Skippers.

The 5-5 squad showed steady signs of improvement during the season and Cohasset's graduating class of 12 seniors exhibited class and talent throughout.

Cohasset's success this season can be attributed to the hard work and commitment of many of the players, along with the notable interest which the parents took in their sons' football careers. In addition, the CHS coaching staff this year helped milk the talent from a stacked senior class.

Coach Tony Rolfe commented that "the key to the season was the total commitment by everybody from the freshman to the seniors."

When asked who he could mention individually, Rolfe gave a nod to the Class of 1999. "Every senior on this team. Some teams have seniors out there by default. Every senior on this team had an impact; every senior played a major role."

The most obvious area in which next year's edition will be lacking is the line.

With Luke Caldwell, John Considine, John-Paul Laugelle, Alex Russell and Adam Sasso all graduating, only defensive end Ronan Buick, defensive tackle Craig Parker, and offensive tackle Craig Davis will remain from either side of the ball.

The line, often the most unaccredited unit on the field, was Cohasset's strongest unit this year, as Skipper wins were largely due to control of the line of scrimmage. The Hull game was a perfect example, as the line refused to yield an inch on either offense or defense. Cohasset's veteran line corps led by example and showed their true colors.

The defensive backfield will also be hit hard. First, though, linebackers Adam Sasso and Greg Parkinson graduate. Their starting roles will likely be taken over by Liam O'Donnell and Joe Carbone, two juniors capable of filling those spots.

However, the secondary also will be left in a tight spot, as hard-hitter Greg Taylor, cover man Ben Roine, and Justin Golden and Raheem Shepard, big reasons behind Cohasset's success in stopping the run, will all graduate. Brian Krupczak and Daniel Trowers should step up admirably, but from there the talent level depreciates.

The offensive "skill positions" lost two key members in fullback Justin Golden and QB Jamie DeMichele. Golden relished his role as Alstott-esque bonecruncher and DeMichele played remarkably well, particularly as a first year signal caller.

Placed there on the merit of his athleticism and smarts, DeMichele ran the Skipper offense smoothly. End and special teams stud Sean Parkinsons also picks up his sheepskin in the spring.

Star tailback Trowers remains and will be aided by ends Kevin Andrews and Chris Golden, along with quarterback Jason Brown and swingman Nick Bolster.

However, Rolfe remained optimistic about next year's depleted squad.

"What we lose in ability, I hope we'll be able to make up for in experience."

Cohasset's fans owe a debt of gratitude to the seniors who gutted out their careers and spent many games taking a beating. The seniors' perseverance and talent helped them earn the final successful season which they enjoyed this year.

And they beat Hull.

You could run for a 1,000-yards or intercept 10 passes in the weekend's Super Bowls, but it won't matter. The ballots have been cast and the results have been tallied.

The high school football awards are in and here they are:

Best Thanksgiving Day rivalries: Duxbury-Marshfield and Hanover-Norwell. Put some Super Bowl berths on the line for a couple of years and watch the fun start. Being neighbors helps a lot and then throw in a health dose of respect and you've got the making a good Turkey Day Clash. Can it be true Marshfield and Duxbury have only played 14 times on Thanksgiving?

Best Coaching Job: Hanover's John Sullivan. He turned a team hit hard by graduation into being a club one win away from the Super Bowl. It might not have been the most talented Indian club in memory, but no team got more of its ability. That counts for a lot here. Congratulations to the Indians.

Most Underrated Player: Norwell High quarterback Nick Hajjar. He was a receiver a year ago and turned out to be a big weapon at QB. Anyone who has an 85-percent completion rate going into Thanksgiving deserves to be honored. As opposing coaches will tell you have to stop Hajjar if you want to beat the Clippers.

Coach of the Year: Because he is so quick to give the credit to others, Rockland High coach Ken Owen often gets overlooked when it comes time to name the area's top coaches. He shouldn't. Owen has developed the Bulldogs into a powerhouse program. Norwell's Jim Sullivan and Marshfield's Lou Silva, two of the real gentlemen in high school sports, deserve votes here as well.

Most underrated team: This is an easy one. Who were the people picking Marshfield for fourth place in the Atlantic Coast League? Don't hide. Stand up please. The Rams ended up winning the league title with a strong ground game and a top defensive club.

Best offense: When you have the leading scorer in the state in Brian Fabrizio, chances are you have the best offense, which the Norwell High Clippers do. As Fabrizio would be the first to tell you, he isn't the only weapon in the Norwell arsenal. The Clippers killed team all year long with the speed and strong offensive line play.

The Cohasset/Norwell High varsity gymnastics team will hold a clinic for girls ages 6- to 12-year-old of all levels and experience.

The clinic will be held on Dec. 23 from 3:15 p.m. to 4:45 p.m. in the upstairs gym at the high school.

The cost is $10 (make checks payable to Ruthann Ardizzoni) and all proceeds will go to the annual Cohasset/Norwell Awards Dinner banquet at the end of the season.

Best defense: 50 points in nine game and five shutouts puts this award in the hands of the Marshfield Rams defense. Their linebacking crew of Brian St. Peter, Mike Jordan and Joe Nihill are among the best in the state.

Team of the year: 11-0, repeating as South Shore League champions, something that is never easy to do, which sends this award to the Norwell High Clippers. Please punt all that talk about a weak schedule. Just look at week nine when they handled ACL power Duxbury. End of debate there.

Turnaround award: The Hingham High Harbormen went from winning just one game in 1997 to finishing third in the Patriot League with a 6-4 record. Craig Buckley was a workhorse all season long for the Harbormen.

Next year's Top Dogs: A true story: I was at a family party in Whitman and a relative said to watch out for Scituate next year. I think so too. After learning leaderships lessons from this year's seniors, the young Sailors ought to be putting more wins together next year. After one down year look for Silver Lake to bounce back in a big way, while Cohasset is no longer a gimme on the South Shore League schedule. The Skippers should be tough in 1999.

Linemen of the Year: Norwell High guard Chris Sullivan went from thinking that his career might be over because of a hand injury to returning to be a force on the line for the Clippers. Rockland end Ken Molloy, St. Peter, the Marshfield center, and Rockland's Tom Strickland deserve mention here, too.

Best back: Norwell's Brian Fabrizio, the leading scorer in EMass, is well-deserving of the award, which he would gladly share with his outstanding linemen. He has the ability and speed to score from anywhere on the field. Marshfield's Marquisse Silva is a tough runner and probably gained most of his yards after breaking the first tackle, while Duxbury's Dave Seger used his speed to terrorize foes for three years. Both of them are deserving mention here.

Best defensive player: Marshfield's Jordan is crushing tackler. If you like linebackers, you'll like Jordan. After watching 11 weeks of tackling, this is probably the toughest category of them all. While offensive players drew most of the attention, there were a lot of solid defensive performers this year.

Watch out for them next year: Rockland's Bob Murphy, Hanover's Andy Breda, Marshfield's Kevin Degnan, Cohasset's Daniel Trowers and Scituate's Butterworth's Bryan and Dave, will be grabbing the headlines in 1999.

Predictor of the Year: When his coaching days are over, Owen might want to thinking about opening up his own sports betting line. Before the season, he predicted the Norwell would race through their season while after his team defeated Marshfield, he said to watch out for the Rams the rest of the way.

Best game of the year: Best hype for a game goes to Duxbury-Norwell. Games like this bring a lot of interest and attention to the South Shore, which is too often overlooked in the football talent department. Best game, though, was Whitman-Hanson's 18-10 win over Duxbury the fourth week of the season. Special mention here to the wild, wild Hingham-Middleboro game, which the Harbormen won 28-26.

Thanks to all the graduating seniors

Lax sign-up is Dec. 12

Registration for the 12 and Under and 14 and Under Cohasset Youth Lacrosse programs will be held Saturday, Dec. 12, from 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School.

The 12 and Under program, starting its fourth year, is open to boys and girls currently in the fifth and sixth grade. Registration is $75, which includes a uniform, practice jersey and a youth membership in US Lacrosse, the national governing body for lacrosse. US Lacrosse membership includes a subscription to a new magazine especially designed for kids.

There will be more information on the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program available at the Dec. 12 sign-up. If you have an age-eligible child and can not attend the registration session, call Jaffe at 383-9858 or Terry Kahn at 383-0032.

Local due making waves at Babson

Babson College sophomore Karen Niessink (Cohasset/Cohasset High) recently completed her first season as a member of the Beaver women's tennis team.

A captain and All-Conference performer in high school, Niessink played second singles and first doubles for Babson, which finished its season at 2-10 overall under rookie head coach Scott Wilkins. Niessink posted a big win in a narrow loss to Clark University late in the year and teamed with junior Julia Kelting to go 3-8 at first doubles.

"Karen worked extremely hard to improve this year and gave us some great efforts in both singles and doubles," said Babson coach Wilkins, a 1994 graduate of UNC-Charlotte. "She is a very good athlete with solid instincts and a good power game. She will be a big key for us the next two seasons."

Undecided on her major, Karen is the daughter of Jan and Deborah Niessink of Cohasset.

Another Cohasset native expected to make big contributions as freshman is Paul-Michael Quintin (Cohasset High), who will have a chance to crack the lineup for coach Stephen Brennan's men's basketball team.

Quintin, a captain and leading scorer for the Skippers last winter, will see action at the shooting guard slot for the Beavers, who were 13-12 a year ago. Quintin has impressed in practice with his outside range and hard-nosed play.

"Paul-Michael led his team in taking charges last year, which says a great deal about him as a player," says Brennan, who owns a 51-30 record in three years as Babson coach. "He is also a very gifted offensive player who will fit well in our up-tempo system."

Grapplers take it to the mat

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

A year older and another year wiser, a veteran wrestling team will open the season Wednesday with B.C. High.

Calling the squad "one of the better teams I've ever had," head coach Torin Sweeney starts his 16th season welcoming back every wrestler from last year to go along with a bumper crop of underclassmen that will help fill out the roster.

After B.C. High, the squad will travel to Canton (12-19) and then to Carver (12-23) before competing in the annual Marshfield wrestling tourney on Dec. 29 and Dec. 30.

Coach Sheerin will be helping Sweeney with the varsity team while coach Conklin will be running the middle school program.

"I've got 24 kids that came out for the team in grades 9 through 12 this year, which is the largest squad I've ever had," said Sweeney. "We've got a good mix of experienced wrestlers and younger kids. The depth is going to be a great help, but we are going to have to stay away from injuries to compete with the teams we have on the schedule."

It's a schedule that Sweeney said is the "toughest ever" for a team that finished 16-4 last season, placing third in the South sectional and 10th in Division 3.

Things should be no different this season as the pre-season rankings have them third in Division 3, and rated 12th of the 148 wrestling teams in the state.

Some of the tougher matches year will include a pair with Wayland at the end of the year as well as contests with Sharon and perennial wrestling power Foxboro not to mention a home-and-home series with league rival Carver, who has had a stranglehold on the South Shore League title in recent years.

The schedule also includes the Marshfield Christmas Tourney after the holiday as well as the annual Cohasset tourney, scheduled for Jan. 23.

As they try to catch the Crusaders for the league title, a number of veteran wrestlers will be expected to step forward and lead the team.

Captain Luke Caldwell, a sectional finalist last year, will be wrestling at 171 pounds while co-captain Mike Baird will try and better his fifth place finish at the state meet last season.

Mike Rossi, a South sectional champ who took fourth at the states, will be wrestling at 152 pounds.

Jordan Fiore missed most of last year but is back ready for action at 140 pounds.

Ben Littauer, a South Sectional finalist who finished fifth in the state, is slated to wrestle at 145 pounds.

Justin Golden will be wrestling at 160 pounds and J. P. Laugelle, a Bay State Games winner this summer, will be filling the heavyweight slot.

Of those seniors, four will be closing in a milestone over the year as Caldwell, Baird, Ross and Littauer are all approaching the 100 career win mark.

The only other wrestlers in Cohasset High history to accomplish such a fete are Nate Fiore (100 wins), Ryan Freeman (121) and Kevin Duffy (116).

Friends of Alumni Field

field," said Chatterton. "Everyone did something a little different to help out and they deserve to be recognized."

The problem with trying to thank everyone for a job well done is that invariably someone is left off the list.

"I've already thought of a couple more people who probably should have been on the plaque," said Chatterton even though the display is less that three weeks old. "There were so many people that helped out in one way or another over the years that it would have been impossible to get everyone's name on it."

The names inscribed on the plaque include Gary and Anne Vanderweil, Tom Callahan, Merle Brown, Mike Sullivan, Jane Goedecke Wayne Sawchuck, Steve Hart, Henry Rattenbury, Ralph Kidder and Harold Litchfield.

Larry and Linda Shultz, Clark Chatterton, Peter Pratt, Peter Laugelle, Mike Buckley, Bob Egan, Rick Shea, Jeff Waal, Larry Mitchell, Lee Jenkins and Gerard Keating.

It was a long road that finally brought Cohasset what is considered to be one of the better high school sports facilities on the South Shore.

Coaches have raved about the condition of the playing field so much that Alumni Field has been used by the MIAA for their higher level soccer tourney games the past two years.

The road began with the voters of Cohasset in May, 1994 when they approved a Proposition 2 1/2 override to do the much needed work on the facility.

Ground was broken on the project a little over one year later and Alumni Field was officially dedicated in September, 1996.

The project was officially completed one year later and, most recently, the track was dedicated to the late Charles R. Davis in front of his friends and family last May.

Davis was a longtime teacher and track coach at the high school.

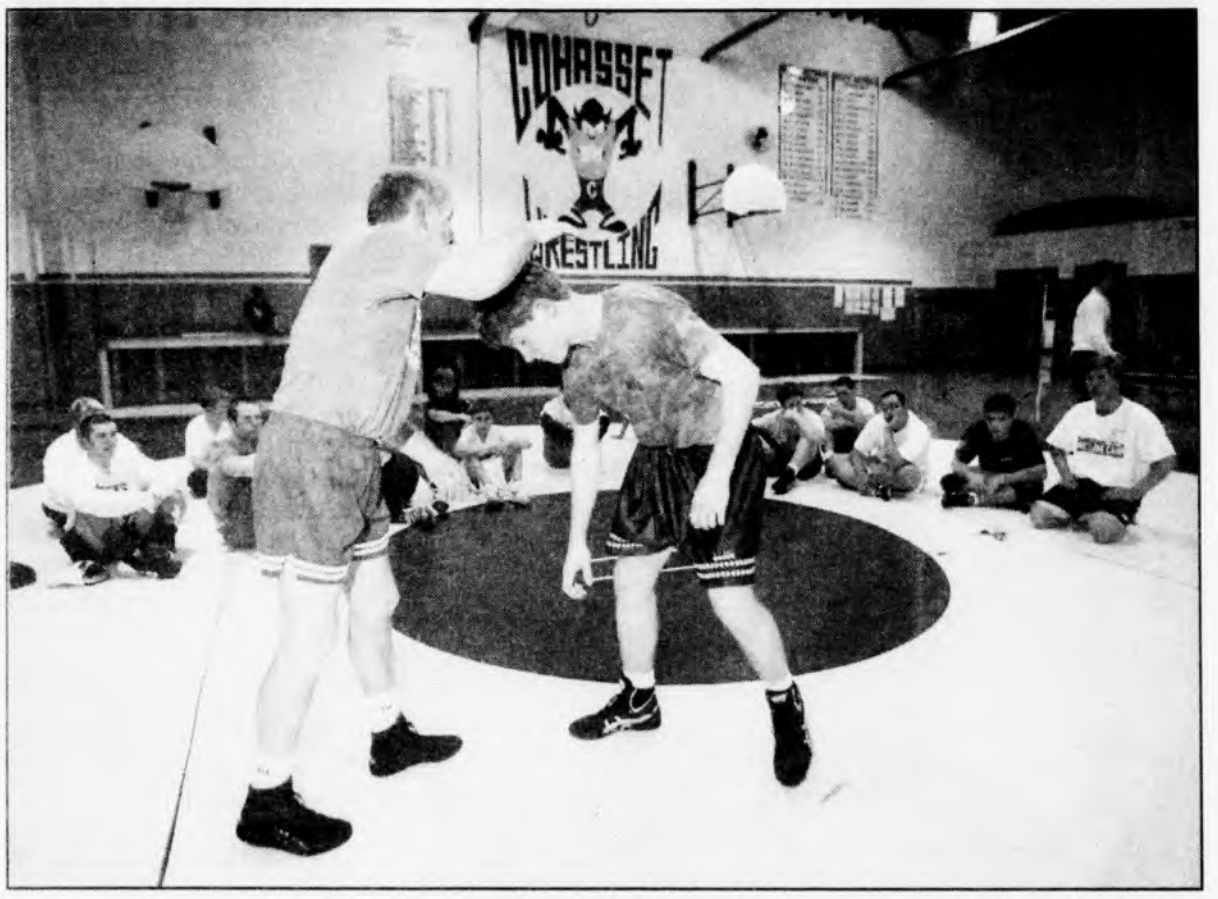
Free sports websites available

The Cohasset Mariner and Town Online, the online service of the Community Newspaper Company (CNC), are offering free web sites to all high school, youth and recreation sports organizations and teams.

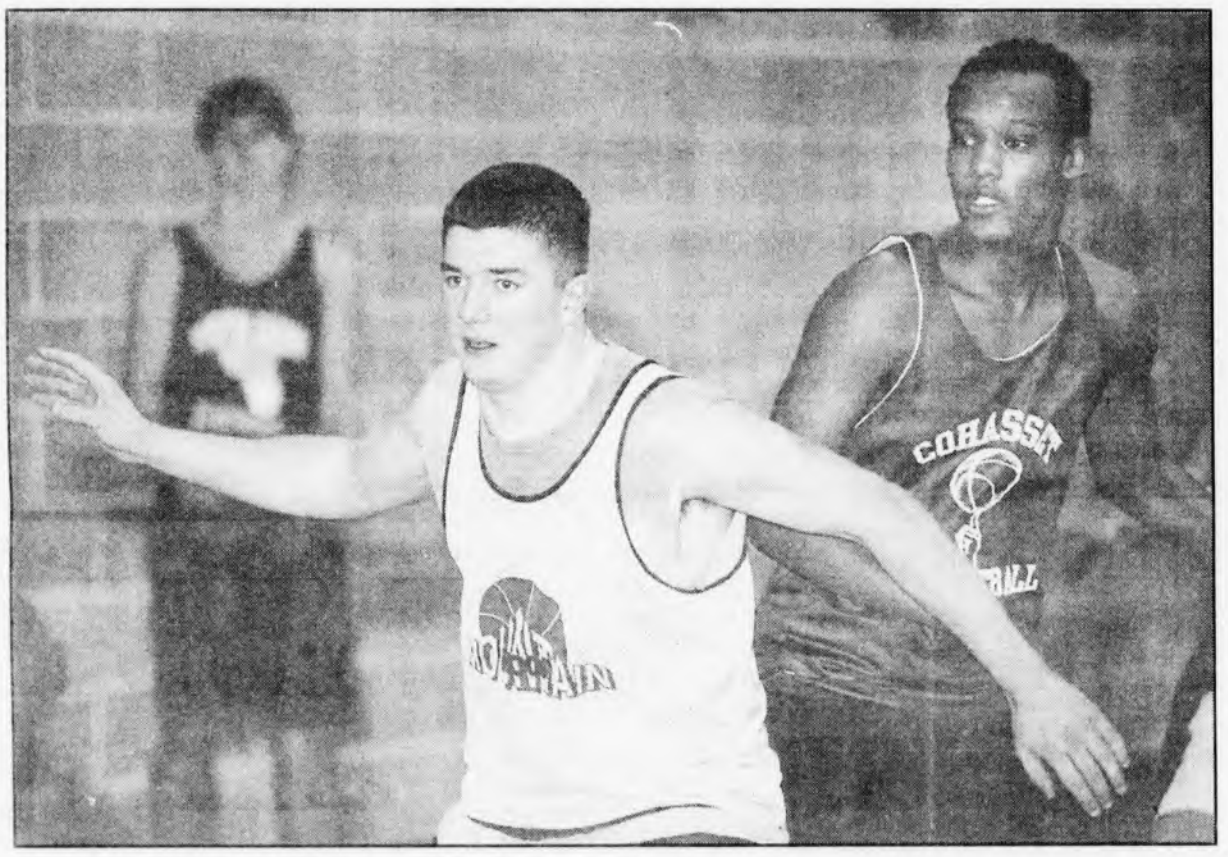
CNC will provide the web site and train organization representatives in web page design and building, using self-publishing internet software that is acessible from any computer. Most people only need one 2 1/2-hour training session to get the hang of it. There are no hidden fees and no catches.



Each group and team will build and maintain its own site. Post game results, schedules, a calendar of events, bulletin board, lists of officials and team rosters, photos and/or directions to fields. Coming very soon - each group will have the capability of holding its own online chats.

This is a great way for sports teams and organizations to get their results and message to the public using the web through Town Online.

The program is available to all youth, adult, recreational and high school sports teams and organizations. Even groups who already have websites are invited to join in and be a part of a growing web network that receives over 1.5 million hits a month...and growing.



For more information on this exciting new program, contact Wayne Braverman at (781) 433-7842, or email wbraverman@cnc.com.

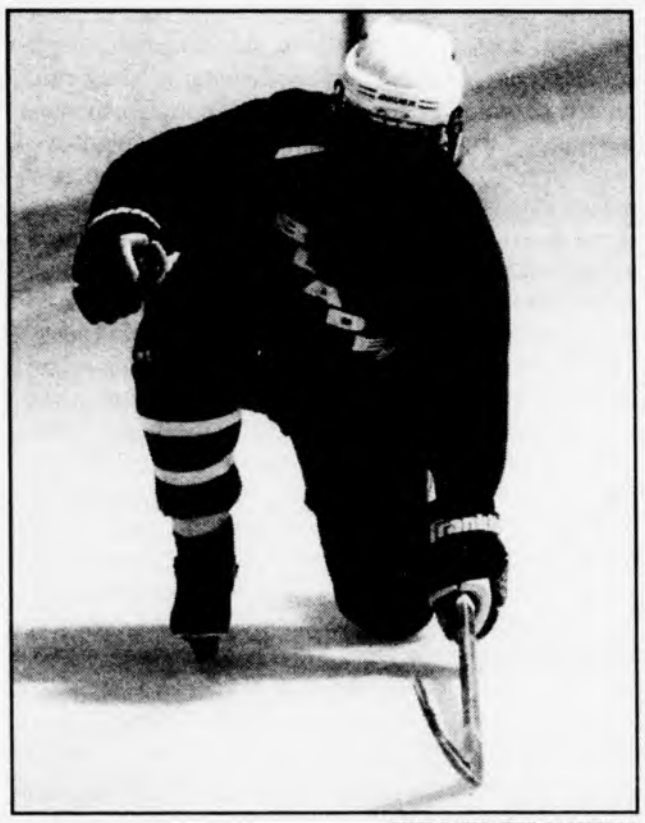
Hockey fans enjoying a league of their own



Women's hockey team formed at Hobomock Arena

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

When you talk about dedication to a cause, you're not going to find a more dedicated group than hockey parents.

After schlepping their kids to freezing arenas in God knows where at all hours of the night as well as early in the morning while watching the young ones skate around circles while learning the basics of the game, one group out of the Hobomock Arena in Pembroke finally decided they wanted to have a little bit of their own fun.

So a little bit before 10 p.m. every Wednesday evening you'll see them back at the arena. But this time the mittens have turned into hockey gloves and the heavy winter coats has been replaced by shoulder pads and an oversized hockey shirt.

STAFF PHOTO/FRED ROBERTSON

Paula Clapp, shown here warming up during a recent hockey practice, is one of the lead recruiters for a new women's hockey team that has been formed out of the Hobomock Arena. The non-checking league is looking for players of all ages and all abilities to play with the local team, which practices each Wednesday evening at 9:50 p.m. at the Pembroke rink.

Move over soccer moms, there's a new breed in town. These ladies are no longer just watching hockey, they're playing it.

"It's something that I always wanted to do," said Pembroke's Paula Clapp, who with fellow town resident Mary Caramanica is one of the lead organizers of the team and the official talent recruiter. "We just put the word out through the newspapers and a put a couple of flyers around the rink that we were going to be getting a team together and people just showed up wanting to play. We've had a real favorable response so far.

"My dad was a coach when I was a kid so it seems I've always been around the hockey rink in one way or another," she added. "I guess I'm just rebelling in my 30s because my dad wouldn't play when I was younger."

More than 20 people showed up at a recent practice coming from varying skill levels and all walks of life.

Some had talent forged over many years of participation in the sport while some others were just trying the game for the first time.

Some were old enough to have children playing the game at the youth level while some were just young enough to be the children of those same players.

That said, they all seemed to have a couple things in common. They all love the game of hockey and were happy to have a night out with the girls filled with fun on the ice and then muffins and a glass of milk in the locker room after practice.

The Pembroke group is one of the few teams in the area. Other than a recreational team out of the Rockland Rink, you'd have to cross the bridge to Cape Cod before you would find another team such as this one.

Clapp's sister-in-law, Marshfield resident Jen Clapp, had a step up on the rest of the crew. She was a figure skater as a youngster so she already knew the basics of skating.

Now the tough part is learning what to do with the stick, she said, admitting that the hand-eye coordination needed to handle the puck was still coming along.

"This is a great thing because it really the only time we get to see one another during the week," said Jen. "Both of us have kids who play the sport and it's a great way to spend to spend time together."

Although they admit this is all for fun, don't think there's not some competition involved. A game between the moms and their children is in the offering down the line. And the moms say that their child had better not rag the puck through the center ice area with their head down and not expect to pay for it.

"My son says he's always going to be the better hockey player, but I'm bound and determined to catch up to him," said Paula. "They're very supportive of us and then probably win if we played right now, but just wait until the end of the season."

Kingston's Emily Braddock will not have to worry about playing against her children for many years to come. The Silver Lake Regional High School freshman said she's always enjoyed watching the game of hockey and was really enjoying her chance to take a couple of shifts out on the ice.

Braddock said she's skated before with friends out on the local pond, but never played anything organized before. She's got the basics down and knows the game because she's a fan, but she's come up with one problem on the ice.

Stopping.

"I haven't quite mastered the art of stopping quite yet," she said with a laugh. "Other than that, everything has been going just fine."

"I grew up watching the game and my best friend was a player so I always wanted to give it a try," said another Laker, Hailfax's Jennifer Clark. "I was always begging my parents to let me give it a try and I finally taught myself how to skate so I could give this a try. My dream is to play at the college level."

"My parents signed me up for figure skating when I was younger, but what I really always wanted to do was playing on the hockey team," said Carolyn Ambrose. "I love hockey and this is the first chance that I've had to be able to play. I love it."

The team is coached by Andy Papadopolous and Don Joyce.

The league is non-checking and players of any and all levels are invited to take part in the fun.

For more information, call Paula Clapp at (781) 293-7628.

Perimenopause: It's About Change

By Esther Csapo Rastegari
CORRESPONDENT

If we're female, alive, and with uterus and ovaries intact, we'll experience perimenopause. Yet many women have never even heard the word.

It is the transition into menopause — those 10 to 15 years before our menstrual periods end.

We are often so unprepared for it, that we don't even realize it has begun. When we are 35 to 45 years old we are focused, often overwhelmed, with career and family issues. We may be juggling care for our children as well as for our parents. Menopause is on the back burner - we'll deal with that after we turn 50.

But then, out of left field, it hits us and we start scrambling to understand what's going on. We might not even be able to pinpoint when it started - periods that are further apart or lighter than usual seem like a gift - we finally got a break. What we didn't realize at the time was that the "lighter" period might not have been a true period, but rather an "anovulatory" cycle in which we did not ovulate. The next period may seem unusually heavy. This is because during the previous cycle the lining of the uterus, the "endometrium" was not shed. The current period is heavier because the endometrium was thicker, and there is more lining to shed.

In addition to menstrual cycles that are shorter, longer, lighter or heavier, we may also have been experiencing hot flashes and night sweats. At first we think the heat is on too high, or there are too many blankets, or we are reacting to a food that is causing our face to get red. Our lives are busy, it's easy to push aside what are wider swings in our mood. With such hectic lives, who wouldn't put the keys in the refrigerator and the milk on the counter?

For some women, these changes are manageable enough that their lives are barely disrupted. Dressing in layers that are easily removed when needed, or sleeping under light covers are adequate interventions. But for others, the changes can be significant. Irregular cycles can lead to thickened endometrium which sloughs off at random, "flooding"- or gushes of blood, and passing large clots that can lead to visits to the emergency department. Months of heavy bleeding can result in anemia, which may often go undiagnosed and be experienced as fatigue or episodes of dizziness or lightheadedness. Mood swings may be experienced as periods of depression and anxiety. Night sweats may mean waking up five times a night in soaking pajamas and crawling out of bed in the morning exhausted from insufficient sleep. Hot flashes may rattle you as start sweating profusely in the midst of a business presentation. Severe symptoms can lead a woman to lose faith in her body, feeling uncertain about what is coming next. How do you schedule important events if you can't count on your body behaving in a predictable way?

To regain a sense of control over your body take the following steps: become an informed consumer, consider experimenting with lifestyle changes, and connect with a qualified physician who shares your view that perimenopause is not a disease, but a transition from one phase of our lives to another. Each woman experiences this time in her own way. It is interesting how differently women in other cultures experience these times.

For example, Japanese women report fewer menopausal symptoms, and have no word for "hot flashes". It is suspected that this may in part be related to their high consumption of soy-containing foods.

Becoming an informed consumer. While information on perimenopause is often scanty, or buried in chapters on menopause and aging (even though the experience happens primarily in our 40's!), here are two new books written by female physicians: Dr. Judith Reichman's I'm Too Young to Get Old and Dr. Susan Love's Hormone Book. Love addresses lifestyle approaches, alternative treatments such as acupuncture and herbal remedies, and medications and surgeries. Both emphasize the importance of exercise and the use of soy products. Registered Dietician Debra Waterhouse has written Outsmarting the Midlife Fat Cell.

In a style that is both humorous and informational she addresses the issue of weight gain during this time period. She outlines how changes such as weight gain assist the body in producing additional estrogen at a time when the ovaries are producing less. Soy is brought up as a tool you can use to "outsmart" the fat cells, provide phytoestrogens (plant-based estrogens), reduce disagreeable perimenopausal symptoms and lose weight. The previous books also have lists of resources - national organizations, newsletters, etc. for more information. Earl Mindell's Soy Miracle discusses how soy is helpful for women, men and children at all stages of life, and includes recipes.

Dolores Riccio's Superfoods For Women contains over 300 recipes for the special nutritional needs of women, throughout the life span. The American Yoga Association Wellness Book discusses special yoga exercises to help women during this transitional time. For more information, investigate the health education programs offered by local hospitals.

Making lifestyle changes. If this part were easier, we would all be a great deal healthier. While making changes when we feel fine to ensure abstract good health in the future is rather difficult, making changes when you feel lousy can be somewhat easier. Dietary changes, such as increasing your intake of soy, regular exercise, and stress-reduction techniques, such as meditation, yoga, and laughter (rent lots of funny movies) can make a significant reduction in hot flashes and night sweats, and may regulate irregular bleeding.

For example, Japanese women report fewer menopausal symptoms, and have no word for "hot flashes". It is suspected that this may in part be related to their high consumption of soy-containing foods.

When I first checked it out almost 30 years ago as a teenage vegetarian it was pretty dreadful. Well, that ancient bean has collided with technology and improved considerably. Soy milk can replace or be mixed with cow milk in cereal or cooked in oatmeal and muffins. You can blend chocolate soy powder (Nature's Plus Spiru-tein is good) with chocolate soy milk (try "Silk") and frozen strawberries for a rather delicious smoothie for breakfast. "Boca" burgers can be found in the frozen section of the grocery store and can be served on a hamburger bun with all the usual fixings.

Make a taco salad: for the topping replace half of the lean ground beef with tofu (freeze the tofu, then thaw and crumble it). Add the usual taco seasonings and tomato sauce. Or instead of the tofu use soy "ground beef" substitutes. Most large grocery stores carry several brands. Use soy milk in pancakes or in "cream" sauces or soups. Start experimenting with different brands, and at first use just half of the regular ingredient and half of the soy product. With just a few modifications, you can substantially increase your soy intake. New soy cookbooks are coming out to meet the demand.

Your doctor is your partner in healthcare. While changes in diet, exercise and the use of stress-reduction techniques may help with perimenopausal symptoms, they may not alleviate them altogether.(Nor do they replace regular physicals with your doctor, mammograms, and other screenings important at this time such as for colon cancer, high blood pressure, diabetes and cholesterol.) When lifestyle changes aren't enough, the next phase may include accupuncture, herbal treatments (by a trained practitioner), or temporary progesterone supplementation prescribed by your physician to perhaps get heavy bleeding under control. Be wary of over-the-counter medications claiming to "balance" your hormones. While vitamins, minerals, and herbs can definitely play a significant role in improving your health, they should not be taken lightly. Without adequate information, one can create a greater imbalance.

To regain a sense of control over your body take the following steps: become an informed consumer, consider experimenting with lifestyle changes, and connect with a qualified physician who shares your view that perimenopause is not a disease, but a transition from one phase of our lives to another.

During perimenopause, just as in puberty, the production of the hormones estrogen and progesterone fluctuate. In puberty, the production spiral moves upwards over time.

In perimenopause, the production fluctuates, eventually spiraling downwards. Abnormal bleeding may be the result of the imbalance of estrogen and progesterone being produced, or may be due to polyps or fibroids. An ultrasound may be used to determine their presence. If necessary, they can be removed by hysteroscopy (polyps) or myomectomy (fibroids) leaving the uterus intact. Other procedures for heavy bleeding include D&C and uterine "ablation". During the uterine ablation the endometrium in destroyed using a type of heated "balloon". This is only a choice for women no longer considering childbearing.

And perhaps, above all, one's attitude can be a determining factor in putting all this into perspective. Women today are challenging the silence of their mothers' generation. Perimenopause and menopause are not events, but significant time periods in our lives. We want information to give us choices, not a one-size-fits-all treatment plan. And as we talk, ask questions, and do research, we are finding that the majority of women who have crossed the bridge and are past menopause are pleased with the quality of the next stage in their lives. Hopefully, the information we gain will better prepare our daughters for all the changes in their lives.

Police made 15 arrests in November

During the month of November, the department made a total of 15 arrests. Three were for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor, one for Operating Under the Influence of Drugs. Two were for Operating a Motor Vehicle after Suspension of License and two for Assault and Battery (Domestic). Five arrests were for Outstanding Warrants, one for Possession of a Class D Controlled Substance and, finally, one for Protective Custody.

There were two Breaking and Enterings reported during November, both businesses.

During November, the Police Department received a total of 639 calls for service. Of those calls, 97 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

During November, the department also issued 331 traffic citations for fines totaling $17,615 and 32 parking tickets for fines totaling $520.

The State Police have been assisting Cohasset with traffic enforcement on Route 3A. They have written in excess of 100 citations during the past 1-1/2 months.

"I feel this extra assistance has greatly reduced the number of accidents occurring on the highway," Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

OBITUARIES

Benjamin F. Hagan III

Benjamin F. Hagan III, 50, of Phoenix, Ariz., formerly of Cohasset, died Nov. 28 at home after a six-month battle with cancer.

Mr. Hagan was born in Springfield, grew up in Cohasset and graduated from Cohasset High. He then attended Ricker College in Maine, after which he went into the United States Air Force where he served for 22 years, one year of which was spent in Vietnam.

He was an avid sports fan playing baseball for many years, basketball and continued to play golf as he grew older. He worked at the Palo Verde Nuclear Power Plant for the last 10 years.

Mr. Hagan leaves his wife Kathy Lynn (Butler) Hagan of Phoenix; his mother, Elizabeth G. Hagan of Cohasset; two brothers, John G. of Dedham and Joe D. of Morgantown, W.Va.; a nephew and five nieces. He was also the son of the late Benjamin F. Hagan Jr.

A Memorial Service was held at the Valley Rest Chapel in Goodyear, Ariz. A graveside service with full military honors was held at the National Memorial Cemetery of Arizona in Cave Creek, Ariz. Expressions of sympathy may be made in his memory to the American Cancer Society, 654 Beacon St., Boston 02215.

Mary K. Donovan

Mary K. (Cusick) Donovan, 90, of Cohasset, formerly of Brookline, a retired teacher for Cohasset public schools, died Friday, Nov. 20, at the Atrium Nursing Center in Middleboro after a short illness.

Mrs. Donovan was born and raised in Brookline. She attended the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and lived in Cohasset for the past 60 years. She taught second and fourth grades at the Osgood School and Deer Hill School in Cohasset for 23 years before retiring in 1978.

She was past president and treasurer of the 60-Plus Club in Cohasset, a member of the Cohasset Garden Club, the Council on Aging and the Senior Citizens Club of Cohasset.

Wife of the late Charles V. Donovan, she leaves a son, Charles V. Donovan Jr. of Scottsdale, Ariz.; two daughters, Kathleen DeFeo of Norwich, N.Y. and Cynthia Murphy of Lakeville; and three sisters, Elizabeth Murphy of Falmouth, Catherine Cusick of Weston and Jane Handrahan of Plymouth.

A Funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment was in Holyhood Cemetery, Brookline. Arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Linda Wallace

Linda Clarke Wallace, 57, of Cambridge and Cohasset, a Harvard Square real estate broker, died Monday, Nov. 16, at her home in Cambridge.

Mrs. Wallace was a record-setting Realtor in Cambridge.

She enjoyed needlework and fly-fishing and traveled extensively.

She was the first woman to fly the B-29 bomber and at the age of 9 she had a part in "Showboat" at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset.

Mrs. Wallace leaves her husband, Dr. James Woodward Wallace; two sons, James Woodward Hendrickson Wallace of Seattle and Joshua Andrew Bligh Wallace of San Francisco; her mother, Mildred (Blye) Clarke of Hingham; a brother, Laurence Litchfield Clarke Jr. of Grandville, Ohio; and four grandchildren, Elliot, Ethan, Cameron and Alexander; and her mother-in-law, Dorothy Colman Wallace of Cambridge. She was also daughter of the late Laurence Litchfield Clarke. A Memorial Service was held at King's Chapel, Boston. Interment was private. J.S. Waterman and Sons Eastman-Waring Funeral Home, Boston, directed the arrangements. In lieu of flowers, remembrances may be made to Drayton Hall, 3380 Ashley River Rd., Charlestown, SC 29414.

Newcomers Club offers friendship and much more

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club is a boon not only to those new to town, but also residents who want to maintain an active circle of friends and variety of social activities.

"Basically, we have interest groups and club-wide social events," said Judy Dickstein, who joined the club when she moved here from the Washington DC area two years ago.

"I was looking for a way to get introduced to people," she said. "My children are grown and gone so I wasn't going to meet other parents through them, which is often how people make friends when they're new to a town. I read a little blurb in the paper and called to find out more. I've had a great time ever since."

So much so that Dickstein now writes the club's news releases along with Kathleen Knight, another Newcomers Club member.

Particularly appealing to Dickstein is that the group encompasses so many ages, interests and backgrounds.

The $25 annual membership fee offers a chance to partake in social events, special interest groups and humanitarian causes.

"You're empowered to do as much or as little as you want," said Dickstein. "I happen to enjoy being involved in things and particularly enjoyed the Lighthouse Ball and the Ladies Coffees throughout the year. The other night I went with a group to Clay Strokes and got to do ceramics. I had never done that before."

According to Newcomers Club president Susan Jaffee, the organization has been around for about 20 years and is still going strong.

"I've been doing this for four years," she said. "I responded to a community news note in the Mariner when I was only two-weeks new to Cohasset. I'd moved quite a bit but had never been involved in a newcomers club before."

"I read a little blurb in the paper and called to find out more. I've had a great time ever since."
— member Judy Dickstein

Jaffee proudly rattles off a number of programs the club offers including annual social events, such as the Fall Wine and Cheese Party, the Chili Cook-Off, Holiday Party and Lightkeeper's Ball and not to mention the club's special interest groups such as Galloping Gourmet, the Book Group, Men's Poker, Moms & Tots Play Groups, Freewheelers Outings for the family, Sip & Stitch and Ladies Night Out. The newcomers club also has also raised money for the Purple Dinosaur Playground in Scituate and equipment for the new Osgood School Playground, Cranberry Hospice and Scituate Recreation.

"There are many things about or club that are spontaneous," said Jaffee. "Baby-sitting, carpooling, cooking dinners for someone who isn't doing well-these things are all spontaneous and rooted in the fast friendships that form among members."

Although most towns seem to have a newcomers club, there is no national "umbrella" organization. Even if there were, the Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club seems to stand apart.

"I was in a group in the Washington DC area, but there was a two-year limit," said Dickstein. "After that, you could join an 'encore' group."

Dickstein joined after leaving a nine-year position at a surgical center. The time spent at work and commuting left her with little time to socialize outside of the office.

"A lot of people join these groups because they've stopped working and these clubs allow them to make new friends," she said.

Dickstein credits the success of the Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club, in part, to core workers - most of whom are too numerous to mention — but include vice president Lee Vicars, treasurer Susan Hernan and communications secretary Martha Benintende who volunteer their time to the club.

Susan Pergola, who serves as Cohasset's membership chairperson, has been a member for almost three years. Like Jaffee, she answered a Mariner notice.

"I was interested in finding out about play groups when I first moved here from Tampa, Florida," she said. "It's a wonderful way to get acquainted with other young families in the town and to meet up with other young women who are at home with small children. When you first move into town with a young child, it's isolating until they enter the school system. Now my youngest is six so I've seen him enjoy friendships that he has enjoyed since he was three."

For Pergola, the most rewarding part of her experience with the Newcomers Club was the friendships.

"I've met several friends that I'm still acquainted with, even though they've left Cohasset," she said. "We keep in touch with each other and ask after each others' children. Moving from Florida, I found the winters here so isolating but this gave me a great excuse to get out of the house when it's dark and miserable outside."

Jaffee said the club is all encompassing.

"This isn't a group of 30-something urban professionals," said Jaffee. "We have empty-nesters, new mothers-you name it."

Membership is "broadening," according to Dickstein. "I've had a great time with this group. We don't have a formal once-a-month type meeting but we have groups for any interest. Really, it's been great."

School trip hi-jinx raises parents concerns

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

After a month's wait with several verbal and e-mailed messages to school committee chairman Rick Shea, school committee member Joseph McElroy put his concerns on the table about the rumored smoking, substance abuse and rough-housing that occurred during a ninth-grade field trip to Boston in October.

McElroy's inquiry was met by a scolding from school superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey.

"I think that this is an inappropriate issue for a school committee member to bring up in a public forum," said Malvey.

McElroy defending his position, stating that he had waited a month without a detailed account despite his attempt to gain information from Shea and Malvey.

"Ted, I used the proper channels," said McElroy. "I was advised about the field trip in October and I asked Ted to investigate and return to me. I'm concerned about this, as this is only one of many such alleged incidents. I have followed up three times in the past month. I was a participant in drawing up the field trip policy and I've heard nothing. I've been inquiring for a month."

According to second-hand accounts, McElroy heard that the teens had inadequate chaperones; unauthorized participants; unacceptable conduct of students on public transportation including smoking and possible substance abuse; a general disregard for the provisions of the school committee's field trip policy; and that one parent withdraw her ninth-grader from Cohasset High School as a result of the incident.

"I think it's presumptuous of you to think I can stop and investigate every issue," responded Malvey, who went on to say that the incident had been nothing more than rough-housing on the T.

Shea explained that Malvey had returned to him with a response the night before the meeting last Thursday and that he would have told McElroy this after the committee meeting.

"Joe, you make a lot of requests for follow-up and information," said Shea, who then explained that he was involved in preparation of teacher's contracts.

"If the trip policy is inadequate because of a situation that happened and was reported, then it is taken care of in accordance with the policy," said Shea. "You have reported second-hand information so you have no idea whether administration appropriately responded to that."

According to committee member Pat Martin, the information came to McElroy, in part, from information that came to her attention when she received a complaint from a parent. "It wasn't a second-hand complaint really, but a 'I think you should know' compliant," said Martin.

Committee vice chairman Kathy Ofsthun wondered if the committee might need to reconsider their trip policy.

Shea asked superintendent Malvey to make one more inquiry into the matter.

"Based on my report from the superintendent, there was no cigarette smoking or any other substance abuse," said Shea. "I heard about horseplay which sounded like it got carried away and was inappropriate but Ted felt it had been dealt with appropriately. I will ask Ted to make sure it didn't go beyond that."

Reached for comment this week, middle-high school principal Curtis Collins refused to discuss the matter.

"I'm not discussing that," said principal Curtis Collins. "That's over. It's nothing."

Martin said that she received a call from a parent whose daughter's friends "painted a picture in her mind that a sort of culture along the lines of what supposedly went on during the trip existed at the school and so she pulled her daughter from the school."

PSO president Jane Pescatore said that there were some photography students on a field trip, so it was not just a ninth-grade trip.

"The problem with bringing this up in a school committee meeting is the confidentiality factor," explained Malvey this week. "Parents are always welcome to come to the meeting and discuss their concerns with us but we need it to be done in that way. We are not at liberty to discuss the alleged behavior of students in a public forum."

New North candlelight service

New North Church continues one of Hingham's most cherished holiday traditions with its community Christmas candlelight service Sunday, Dec. 20, at 4 p.m. in the historic 1806 meeting house at 1 Lincoln Street in Hingham Square.

The New North Christmas service features special holiday music provided by the United Brass Quintet, a South Shore based group with a long association with New North, and the Chamber Ringers handbell choir of South Harpswell, Maine, who are returning to the Hingham church for the seventh consecutive year. Organist Joel Davidson will also play, accompanying the congregation in favorite Christmas carols.

The Rev. Thomas F. Kepler will lead the service of Christmas music and readings. Rev. Kepler, an ordained Presbyterian minister, has been pastor since 1995 at New North, a non-denominational community church which welcomes people from a variety of faiths and religious backgrounds.

As in prior years, collection boxes will be provided in the church vestibule to receive gifts for residents of two South Shore shelters, the Quincy Interfaith Sheltering Coalition's "Father Bill's Place" and the Mary Martha Learning Center in Hingham. Those attending the service are asked to bring items of warm clothing (such as gloves, knit hats and warm underwear) and personal gifts (such as toiletries, new books and stationery). Gifts should be wrapped and labeled as to gender and size, where appropriate.

The public is invited to a Wassail bowl reception which will be held in the church parlor following the service.

New North's regular 10:30 a.m. church service and Sunday school program will not be held on the 21st, but childcare for smaller children will be provided in the parish house nursery during the 4 p.m. service.

The Memory Tree at the South Shore Community Center

This holiday season will be enriched by remembering, in a tangible way, the joy our loved ones have shared with us in seasons past.

Commemorative lights will shine on the Memory Tree on the lawn of South Shore Community Center, as well as a star placed on the tree in the lobby with the name(s) of your loved one(s). As contributions are received, bulbs will be illuminated throughout the season, and the names of the donors and those remembered will be published in the Cohasset Mariner. Your tax deductible contribution will help continue quality programs at South Shore Community Center.

The star atop the 1998 Memory Tree will shine in honor of departed loved ones whom you wish to honor. Participation options are: Individual: Forget-me-not white lights for a gift of $5; Angel: Individuals, businesses or professionals giving $15 or more, forget-me-not white lights; Archangel: Individuals, businesses or professionals giving $50 or more, forget-me-not white lights.

Generosity will be acknowledged by white lights on the Memory Tree, and on the scroll published weekly.

Please make checks payable to South Shore Community Center, P.O. Box 631, 3 North Main St., Cohasset, 02025.

The following is a list of contributors to the 1998 Memory Tree for the week of Nov. 30:

Justice hopes wedding bells ring at new Town Hall

A great place to get married

By Liz Derby
CORRESPONDENT

It was 11 years ago when then Hingham Town Clerk Thomas P. Hall told a visitor who sought a wedding venue that, while there was no justice of the peace in place at town hall at the time, there soon would be. Hall nodded jokingly toward his new assistant, Lyn Gordon Baxter.

Little did Hall know how his playful remark would nudge Baxter into the post, a direction that she had already been considering.

A single parent at the time raising two young boys, Baxter had owned and operated a Hallmark store where she gained valuable knowledge and insight into all the bits and pieces that go into planning weddings and parties. This experience launched her into bridal consulting, so becoming a justice of the peace seemed like a natural step.

Baxter, who is a Cohasset resident, never encouraged weddings to be held in the old town hall, which closed this fall, and performed only two ceremonies there in her12 years as justice of the peace.

"It [the old town hall) was dark, hall during cold and municipal. Even considering all the warm hearts within, the building itself was austere," said Baxter.

However, she is very enthusiastic about holding weddings in the new town hall.

"The staircase is made for it," she says, enthusiastically.

Baxter said there are a myriad of reasons why couples opt to be married by a justice of the peace.

"Many churches, ministers and wedding halls are booked over a year in advance," she says. "For some, religious differences or inactivity in church lead couples to choose an alternative. Some couples marry for the second or third time and wish to avoid the formality of a church wedding. Others seek out the simplicity of a civil ceremony. Some, for one reason or another, desire that their marriage be kept private. Elopement is common."

Baxter hopes that couples seeking an alternative to the stress, the time constraints and the expense of a formal wedding will begin to recognize the new Hingham Town Hall as a warm, friendly and beautiful venue.

Baxter individualizes each ceremony around the personalities and experiences of each couple she marries. Meeting with each couple two or three times, together and individually, to ensure a meaningful ceremony, Baxter refuses to perform a "quickie" marriage. From these meetings, she writes a fitting recitation in which the couple, family and friends, can participate. She has educated herself considerably in religion and doctrines, so that her ceremonies embrace elements of the traditional as it may apply to the couple, but with a contemporary flair.

The town hall is not the only venue where Baxter conducts marriage ceremonies. She presided over ceremonies at aquariums, restaurants, gazebos, a party of eight in a Jacuzzi, Plymouth Plantation, at Nantucket beach, church chapels, hospitals, boats, lighthouses, and mansions in Newport and even in a prison.

The most unusual are those ceremonies where costuming signifies the lifestyle of the wedding pair. Baxter relates one memorable ceremony.

"In the frigid winter at a duck pond, the bride brought ducks wearing necklaces containing inscriptions about the wedding. She wore a short Easter type dress with a black leather jacket. The groom wore black jeans with a tux shirt under his leather jacket, and studded riding boots—depicting their first date and first kiss."

Laughing, Baxter shares another experience.

"The stork arrived as rings were being exchanged in the new home of one couple. Everyone hopped into a car and drove to the hospital, where the baby arrived and the vows were complete," she recalled.

The new Hingham Town Hall lends itself well to marriage ceremonies, and several locations within the beautifully restored structure are available to be used for such events. There are no restrictions, within reason, on the time of day that a marriage may be performed in the Hingham Town Hall.

However, Baxter prefers to hold a ceremony after hours so that the words and their significance to the couple remain uninterrupted and, hopefully, cherished throughout a long and harmonious marriage.

There are 1,360 justices of the peace in Massachusetts. While most people know justices of the peace perform marriages that's not all they do.

Justices of the peace are in place to fulfill certain other requirements of Commonwealth and municipal law, such as acknowledgment of deeds and taking depositions in civil cases. A justice of the peace may also be called upon to issue a search warrant.

But presiding over marriages clearly keeps a justice in demand.

Of the 149 marriage intentions posted recently at the Hingham Town Hall, justices of the peace performed 31 ceremonies.

STAFF PHOTO/ALAN CHAPMAN

Hingham assistant town clerk Lyn Gordon Baxter, a Cohasset resident, is also a justice of the peace. Baxter says the new Hingham Town Hall is a super site for weddings.

$660K override anticipated this spring

Would maintain current services

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Voters will be asked to dig into their pockets this spring to support a general override to cover an anticipated $660K shortfall in the town's proposed $20.8 million operating budget.

An override is needed because the proposed Fiscal Year 2000 budget increase cannot be absorbed within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, the state law which caps the amount a town's tax levy can go up in any given year without a positive vote at the polls.

If passed the override will cost the owner of the average Cohasset house valued at $341,000 about $371.83 more a year for a total tax bill of $5,471.63, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Haddad described the proposed budget as a "maintenance budget" because it contains no new initiatives and would maintain services at the current level.

If the override fails at the polls, Haddad said the larger town departments including the schools, fire, police and DPW would face "major cuts in personnel."

Figures discussed with selectmen Tuesday allow for a jump of 6 percent the school department's budget, which has been the schools' average increase over the past three years.

Haddad explained the town faces an override

RTF sticker fees could increase

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Everything has its price, and trash is no exception. Federal data indicates that Americans generate more trash at Christmas than at any other time of the year. Cohasset residents who use the recycling and transfer station (RTF) are no different. But RTF users beware. The selectmen are pondering whether to raise the cost of RTF sticker fees to offset increases in trash disposal costs. SEMASS has informed town officials that it will increase trash disposal costs by $2-$3 per ton beginning July 1, 1999, and again Jan. 1, 2001, by a whopping $13-$17 per ton. SEMASS needs the additional money to comply with state Department of Environmental Protection regulations mandating a decrease in emissions at its disposal facilities.

For residents who use the RTF, the additional

Point dispute may land town in court

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The town will go to court if necessary to protect about an acre of open space it doesn't own.

The parcel in question is part of Gammons Point, a small peninsula of land that juts into Little Harbor.

About 20 residents jammed selectmen's quarters Tuesday to persuade the board to affirm the town's rights as a beneficiary to a development restriction placed on the land more than 75 years ago.

Dan and Jean Cotton, an elderly couple who have owned what is called "Lot O" — the land in question since the mid 1960s — are proposing to have the development restriction lifted to remove "a cloud" from the title for their heirs.

The town was deeded a parcel of "beneficiary" property to Lot O by Charles Gammons in 1926 who placed the open space restriction on that property to benefit his remaining land. The restriction was to remain in effect for 999 years. The neighboring owners of a number of other

Moving moorings isn't cheap

Harbormaster John Winters told selectmen moving the moorings for the commercial fleet several times to facilitate the dredging of the harbor will cost an additional $8K to $9K. This is on top of the $38K for moving recreational moorings that were taken out of the harbor and will be put back in the spring.

It costs about $1,400 a day to move the moorings, he said. Marine Tech Inc. of Yarmouth is the contractor on the job.

Winters explained the moorings for the 29 lobster boats had to follow the sequence of the dredging to ensure there is enough room for the dredging equipment and for the fishing fleet.

Selectman Nan Roth wondered if the town was being fair.

"There is a great deal of accommodation for the fishermen. Have we done anything for the recreational boaters?" she said.

The cost of moving the moorings is being paid for through boat excises taxes, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Winters said the harbor-dredging project is moving along as planned. The original contract date was extended from Dec. 12 to Feb. 15. Winters said the equipment was upgraded and the contractor was making great strides.

"It's 60 percent completed and the Army Corps feels we're in great shape and we should be done by the end of January," he said.

No 'no turn' signs at crosswalks

Selectman Merle Brown, who also sits on the traffic study committee, said, "no-turn on red" signs are not allowed at intersections where there are crosswalks.

His comments were in response to a resident's request asking that turns on red be allowed at the intersection of Ripley and Sohier streets because the Osgood School is closed down.

Fee waiver by-law confusing

Selectmen decided to table action on a warrant article establishing a by-law allowing them to waive fees because they are confused about the matter.

As it stands now, the board is not allowed to waive any fees without town meeting approval. The issue surfaced recently when St. Anthony's requested a waiver for a $18,000 building permit fee for its new $1.8 million parish hall under construction. Selectmen denied the request over protests from parishioners. Town counsel subsequently alerted selectmen that they didn't have the right to waive fees anyway.

The by-law would give selectmen that right but they could choose to exercise it or not as the case may be.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris favors putting the proposed by-law before town meeting. But Selectman Tom Callahan said it is better to leave well enough alone.

"With no by-law, we can't waive fees," he said. "I don't know if every decision we make has to go to a plebiscite."

Town buildings are exempt f[illegible] town fees, selectmen said.

Selectmen Nan Roth and Merle Brown continue to support authorizing selectmen to waive any building permit fees for non-profit organizations.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said there is a problem with selectmen having that authority.

"What happens is once you waive one fee, you establish a policy," she said. "...It should be all or none, so there is no confusion."

Fire overtime projection sought

Selectmen asked Fire Chief Roger Lincoln for a projection on overtime through the end of the fiscal year, June 30.

Selectmen monitor the fire department's weekly overtime reports which show a balance of $42,387.23 through the end of November.

"The board is concerned this amount may not be enough money to get through the end of fiscal year 1999," Town Manager Mark Haddad wrote in a memo to Lincoln.

The town appropriated $118,602 for fire department overtime at the beginning of FY'99 and added $40,000 to that at October's special town meeting for a total of $158,602.

Haddad recently hired a paramedic to fill a vacancy in the department that should reduce the need for callbacks, which add to overtime. He said six of the seven injured firefighters are back on the job.

Lincoln told Haddad this week he projects an additional $27,000 will be needed to cover overtime through the end of the fiscal year. Selectmen balked at the request Tuesday night.

Haddad said he would ask Lincoln to refine the number.

"We want it more than refined," Selectman Nan Roth said. "We want it chopped."

Interest in Independence Building grows

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

In its 149 years, the Independence Building has housed the town's fire department, police department, Historical Society's Gown Museum, a law office and town teens. Now, another interested party besides the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce is negotiating with Town Manager Mark Haddad to become the next occupant of the unassuming landmark.

Haddad has met with two parties interested in the structure, which is as rooted in town history as the ledge in which it is built on South Main Street and just below St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

"The Chamber of Commerce and somebody else came forward to inquire about it, but I'm not at liberty to say who the other party is at this time," said Haddad. "It would have to go out to bid under the requirements of Chapter 30B, the uniform procurement act and under that law you have to go through a bidding procedure to dispose of real property and then ultimately, the town meeting would have to approve any disposition of that building."

Selectmen went into executive session two weeks ago to discuss the possible sale or lease of the building.

Haddad said the replacement cost of the building is $110,000, according to the insurance company. It is assessed at $16,000.

Selectmen said then that they would consider all options before making a recommendation on disposition of the building.

A request for proposal would then be brought up and brought to town meeting, Haddad said.

"The Chamber of Commerce is interested in getting it and rehabbing it, renting it upstairs and using it for public toilets," he explained.

Haddad originally proposed razing the building because of concerns about the building remaining vacant.

"The board of selectmen didn't agree and so the building remains," he said.

Dean Rizzo, vice president of the Cohasset Chamber and chairman of the Village Revitalization Task Force, is representing the chamber on this issue. The chamber would like to see the building converted into a public restroom/tourist stop with office spaces rented to help generate interest to help offset the cost to maintain and renovate the building.

"Hopefully, that could make it a self sufficient operation," Rizzo said. "From our understanding, it's really up to the town officials to decide whether they want to sell the building outright to anybody that is willing to buy it or make an arrangement with the us so that we can take it over at no cost."

Thomas Bates, town's first police chief, with the police department at the Independence Building which was converted to from a fire station to a police station in 1912-13.

The task force has already received a grant for a new sidewalk along South Main Street in front of the Independence Building which would include making the building's entrance handicap accessible.

Rizzo sees this as an opportunity to "really dress up that corner, make it easier for pedestrians and make it more inviting for people to come to the village, for visitors as well as residents. I know there are many times that I'm down in the village and there is no place for people to go (to the bathroom). That's a problem when you have town functions and there is no facility down there unless town hall happens to be open."

"It certainly is a historic building, with the fire station having been there and the police station," he said. "It's been a piece of the town character for quite a long time and it would be a shame to have that removed for demolition purposes or being turned into a residential house or something different."

Town's first fire engine

A century and a half ago, the spanking-new building housed the town's first fire engine, a hand-pumped model that was the pride of Independence Fire Company No. 1, from which the building got its name.

"The second floor of the building was called Engine Hall," said David Wadsworth, historical society curator. "That was their meeting hall. I don't think they lived there. The pumper was on the first floor downstairs. It was a small one.

"In 1913, the town built its first Central Fire Station down at the Cove where Veterans Park is today. By that time, the Independence 1 was probably not very active, since water pressure in the public water system hydrants became available. That's when it was converted into the town's first police station where it remained headquarters until the town opened a joint police and fire department in 1962."

A century and a half ago, the spanking-new building housed the town's first fire engine, a hand-pumped model that was the pride of Independence Fire Company No. 1, from which the building got its name.

Teen Center members may have viewed the two cells with metal bunks as part of the building's decor, but for generations of adolescent pranksters, the cells once loomed ominously as backdrop for the "talking-to" they received from stern police.

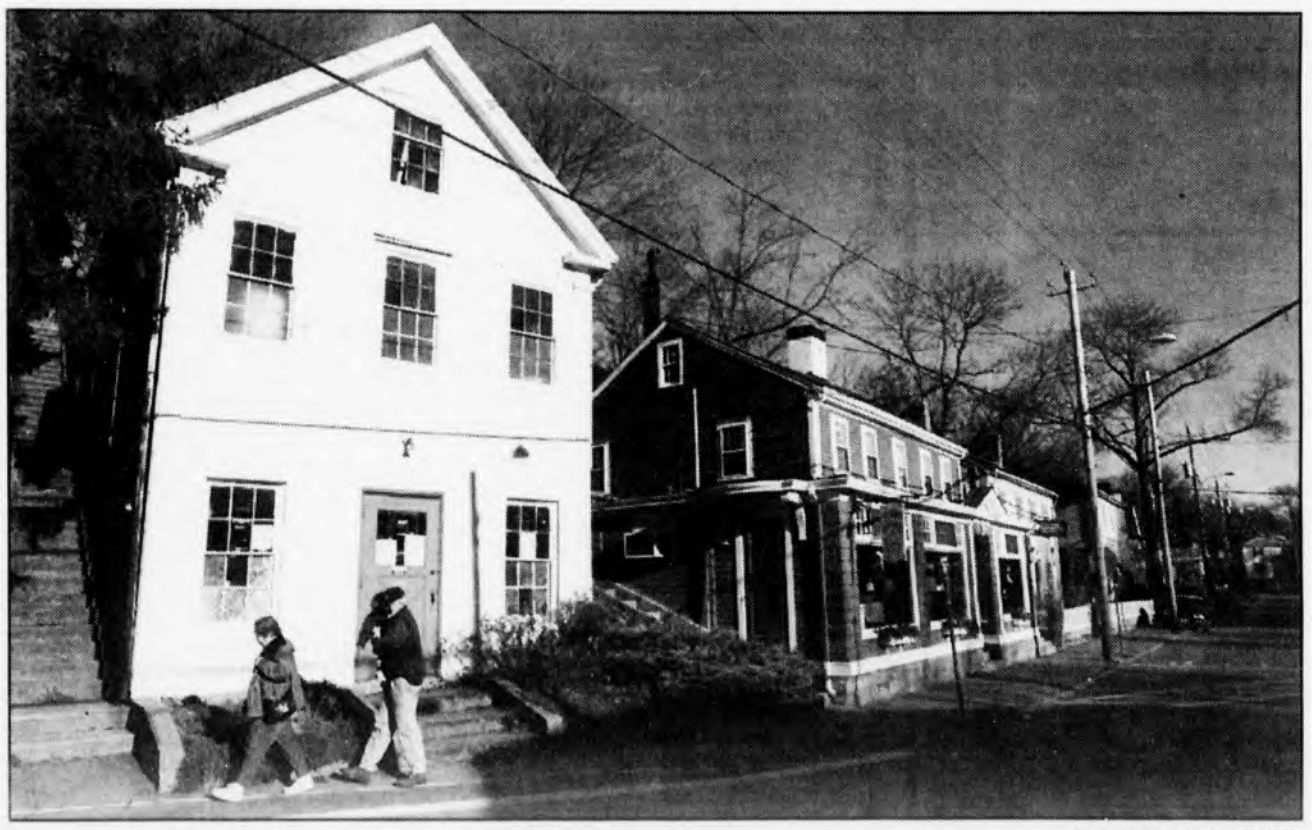
Surely, more lighthearted times were had in the station house though, as evidenced by the pre- and prohibition era wine bottles found in a hidden room.

Cohasset resident Noel Collins who operated his law office in the building from 1987 to 1990 found the empty "hooch" bottles while putting down flooring.

"We placed some flooring and when we opened up the floor we found a back room," said Collins. "Inside, we found pre-Prohibition era and Prohibition era bottles, which I turned over to the historical society."

Collins recalled other remains from the town's history is a third floor loft area with a wooden spindle from which the firemen would hand hoses to dry and then roll them up again.

"The hoses used to hang through the whole three-floor length of the building but otherwise there wasn't too much of the history left," said Collins. "Of course, the jail cells were still there, two on the first floor, which made for an interesting conversation piece with my clients."



The Cohasset Historical Society leased the building from the town for about 20 years to use for its Gown Museum, but had to close shop around 1983 because of structural problems.

"Basically, there were getting to be some structural problems in the building which have since been remedied and so we left just 20 years after we had established the museum," said Wadsworth.

The building used to have a bell tower on it. "A cupola, right near the front of the building," said Wadsworth. "That bell, The Independence Fire Bell, is now down on Government Island after it was given to the Historical Society years ago."

With its varied history so steeped in town memory, many are hoping that the building remains.

"We've expressed our interest to the selectmen and we understand they are considering the alternatives with the town manager," said Rizzo. "Ultimately, it's the town meeting that will decide in spring. So people will get to take a vote on this."

Christmas tree business is a family affair

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Real Christmas trees with their pleasant, natural scent are once again the tradition in many South Shore homes.

No one knows that better than Jim Barry, who sells 2,000 evergreens annually to Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate residents from a roadside stand at Cohasset Plaza on Route 3A. While many families have switched to artificial trees in past years, Barry said a large number are back to buying "the real thing."

"I have a following of people who return year after year," he said. "I remember everyone."

This year, sales are better than ever.

About 50 percent of his customers come from Scituate and the rest are almost evenly divided among Hingham and Cohasset residents.

Besides the lush Christmas trees themselves, Barry also offers delivery service and puts up roping for customers for decorative purposes. He'll even put a tree in a stand, which he also sells, along with wreaths and wooden reindeer made by two Marshfield lobstermen.

"People go nuts over those," he said. "I even place lights in tall trees at customers' homes."

Prices start at $9.95 for a tree three feet high. Some of the evergreens are as tall as 16 feet. Ninety percent of the trees are balsam firs from Canada, which he buys through Lambert's Rainbow Fruit, a business owned by his wife, Bernadette's, family.

One of the Barrys' sons is named after Fernand Lambert, who started the business with his brothers.

Since it rains a lot in Canada, the trees tend to be particularly fresh.

"The business is quite lucrative," Barry said, although it keeps him busy from 7 a.m.-11 p.m.

A construction worker by trade, Barry has filled in the off-season gaps by selling Christmas trees for the past nine years, eight of them at Cohasset Plaza. He also works on construction projects during the winter, weather permitting.

Barry, who grew up in Cohasset, spent many hours in Hingham as a child boating and fishing in Hingham Harbor with his father, the late James Barry Sr., who was a member of the Hingham Lions Club.

His father, after whom one of his grandsons is named, used to work for the telephone company located near Hingham Rotary.

"My dad always kept an eye on his boat in the harbor from his office," Barry said. "Some of the guys went fishing during their lunch hours."

His mother, Maria Barry-McClellan, lives in Cohasset.

Barry, now a Hull resident, sells "premium Christmas trees." His wife joins him on the weekends at the stand, along with other helpers.

"The trees have such a wonderful aroma," he said.

During his first years, Barry enjoyed the assistance and camaraderie of his father.

In 1990, Barry recalls his father's tactful intervention during an argument between a couple, both doctors, over which Christmas tree they should buy.

Barry Sr. convinced them to flip a coin, but before it hit the ground, the couple was arguing about who called "heads" and who called "tails."

"In the end, they drove off with both trees," Barry said with a laugh.

A year later, his first at Cohasset Plaza, Barry panicked.

"There were other people within three miles of me also selling trees," he said. "I remember sitting here with hundreds of them and wondering if mine would sell — but they did," he recalled.

Jim Barry with his new son, Ferninand, on his lap and another young helper among all the Christmas trees at Cohasset Plaza.

Barry, the father of six children ranging in age from four months to 19-years-old, sold 800 trees the first year, and the business has been booming ever since.

He likes the way Christmas trees make kids happy, including his own.

"I tell them I work for Santa Claus because if you don't have a tree, there's nowhere to put the presents," he said. "So that's why I have so many trees."

Barry's children pick out their own and help decorate it.

"In the past, I'd bring back one they didn't particularly like, and they'd send me back with it," he said with a laugh.

He encourages his wife to take the children to buy a tree "down the street, because she always picks my best one!" Barry joked.

But in the end, the family always chooses its tree from his lot.

"Picking out a tree together is a return to family values," he said.

Why do customers keep coming back year after year?

"I give them a fresh cut on the tree, tie it on their car and tell them if they have a problem they can return it," he said. "I'm here every year, so I'm not a fly-by-night operation. High-quality trees sell themselves."

He particularly enjoys seeing babies who used to run around the lot grow up and come back to the stand to pick a tree for their family. Some of the teenagers who worked for him on the tree lot in the past are now returning with their own families to se-

Tips on keeping tree fresh through the season

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

A Christmas tree is an investment in enjoyment, says Jim Barry, who sells 2,000 of them a year.

To keep trees fresh and to prolong their life, Barry offers the following tips:

•Since all trees are cut at the same time of year, buy one early in the season, soon after Thanksgiving.

"The tree won't dry out as quickly and there's a better selection early on," he said.

•Choose a tree whose branches don't break when gently bent backwards.

•After selecting a tree, have the attendant take a fresh cut off the bottom of the trunk — at least an inch.

"It's 'good luck' to burn the cut-off piece in your fireplace and make a wish," Barry said.

•Buy a good tree stand that hold's a large supply of water. (Fresh trees can "drink" a gallon a day.) Immediately place the tree in a pail of water in a protected area where it won't freeze to prevent sap from sealing the bottom of the tree, thus preventing it from "drinking" water. If the branches of a tree become frozen, don't push them back because they can break.

If the water dries up, give the trunk another fresh cut to ensure it will be able to absorb enough water. If the tree is already decorated, a fresh cut is difficult to make. In that case, pour hot water into the tree holder to soften the sap.

•Check the water level regularly and replenish it often.

•Keep trees away from forced hot air heating vents and fireplaces and draw the shades if a tree is in front of a window to prevent it from drying out. Once up, the average tree should last four to five weeks if cared for properly.

Some families use tree preserver, while others place aspirin or 7-Up in the water, which they feel has the same effect of helping to prolong the evergreen's life.

"Everyone has their own little trick," Barry said.

It takes seven years to grow the average Christmas tree. The ones Barry sells come from a tree farm, where the evergreens are planted to be enjoyed as Christmas trees when they have matured

Traditionally the busiest weekends are the two before Christmas.

"It's a busy time, and people come out in the spirit of Christmas," said Barry.

The busiest hours are Sunday after church.

"The customers hit all at once and then go home to watch the Patriots game," he said.

One year Barry set up a color TV set at the tree stand during a Patriots/Pittsburgh Stealers game. There was even a decorated reindeer wearing a "Go Pats!" sign.

Brisk weather really gets customers in the spirit. Barry recalls one man selecting a tree when a light dusting of snow was falling.

He had trouble fitting the tree inside his convertible, so the gentleman put down the top of his car to make room, then drove away.

"It was the funniest thing," Barry said.

lect an evergreen.

While Barry enjoys the fresh air and helping customers select the perfect tree, there are some challenges.

Snow creates an ambiance, but it also causes some problems, including weighing down tree branches so they sometimes break.

When it does snow, Barry has to take down all the trees to prevent this from happening and replace them in their stands when the danger is past.

What's it's like celebrating Christmas with six children?

Gifts are opened Christmas Eve in the Barry family. Christmas Day is hectic, but fun.

"We have a good time, with a fire in the fireplace," Barry said.

$660K override anticipated this spring

to fund the operating budget about every three years. The town escaped an override last year by funding the deficit from free cash.

The proposed budget includes an increase in the town's debt service to pay for the new elementary school, the DPW garage, the James Brook flood control project, school technology plan and an increase in the tipping fee for the town's trash.

Cohasset is largely residential with a limited commercial base and limited state aid, Haddad said. Only about 8 percent of the town's budget is offset by state aid.

"We are in a cycle where we need an override to fund services every three years," he said.

Also, the town can't count on receiving $65 per student from the state under Education Reform, which will be in its sixth year. The state promised towns it would offset the cost of ed. reform for five years.

In the future the town is looking at major repairs to the Deer Hill and middle/high schools and possibly a new library. If approved, improvements to the schools are expected to impact the tax rate in 2001 and the new library in 2002.

Advisory Committee Chairman Dick Avery said the intent of Prop. 2-1/2 was to find a better way of providing services through "regionalizing, outsourcing and combining with other towns for purchasing."

"We need to find creative solutions to do more with the same money," Avery said.

Selectman Nan Roth pointed out that it's impossible to live within Prop. 2-1/2 when salaries are going up at three percent annually.

Selectmen will consider only one of four initiatives Haddad put forth for next year.

They will investigate creating a building maintenance division in the DPW that would be in charge of maintaining all town buildings, eventually including the schools. The annual cost would be about $32,000 which is not included in FY2000 budget projections and therefore, would add to the amount of the suggested override. Currently while the town has janitorial service, there is no one charged with maintaining the buildings. The money would pay for 1-1/2 positions to be added to the existing 1-1/2 janitorial positions so there is sufficient manpower for maintenance as well as cleaning, Haddad said.

Selectmen tabled Haddad's other initiatives to add four firefighter positions, a DPW engineering division and a town planner due to lack of funds and a sense taxpayers would not be supportive due to the town's fiscal outlook.

RTF sticker fees could increase in town cost per ton may result in higher sticker fees. The selectmen have asked the recycling committee to analyze the additional costs and recommend whether the town should increase sticker fees, said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

"We're talking about a sticker increase because we had to add some money to the RTF budget," said selectman Merle Brown who also serves on the recycling committee. "But using tax money is not fair to all, because not everyone uses the transfer station. Taxpayers are subsidizing RTF users."

Brown pointed out that the reason selectmen had to supplement the RTF budget this year was because of a sharp decrease in patronage by residents. Typically, 2,400-2,500 people purchase stickers for the RTF. Currently, only about 1,700-1,800 residents have stickers.

"It may be that the economy is good and people are using private haulers," Brown said. "We also get some people who use the RTF without a sticker. In some of those cases, people are new to town. Other people have a sticker, but don't want it on their car."

Cohasset's municipal landfill has been closed for many years, but still serves as a transfer station. A transfer station is a collection point for municipal trash and recyclables. Residents bring their trash and recyclables to the RTF, and a contractor transfers the material to a disposal/recycling facility.

In Cohasset, residents currently pay $65 for a one-year RTF sticker that allows them legal access to the RTF. Other residents hire private haulers to remove their trash rather than drive their garbage to the RTF. The town pays about $64 per ton for trash removal, plus a hauling fee that increases the price to $85 per ton. The proposed increases will increase the cost of trash disposal to close to $100 per ton.

But there is an easy way to offset increased trash disposal fees: recycling. What many residents who use the RTF don't know is that recycling is mandatory at the facility, Brown said. In an effort to keep costs low, regulations require RTF users to recycle as much as possible. Brown said it costs the town only about $10-$15 per ton to send recyclables to SEMASS. Because almost everything is recyclable, residents could offset the increased trash disposal costs by recycling more, Brown said.

Residents who don't recycle properly or who use the RTF without a sticker, may be in for a shock soon. The town has money in the budget to pay for an RTF security guard for three months to ensure that recyclables do not end up with the trash. The guard would look for things like people dumping without stickers, or residents discarding corrugated paper, paper bags and other recyclables with the regular trash. Brown said the guard would not inspect closed trash bags.

Discarding recyclables at $10-$15 per ton is a lot cheaper than mixing the material in with the regular trash, which costs $85 per ton to remove.

"The big money savings is in recycling," Brown said. "If we send less trash to SEMASS, it will reduce our costs. It's very simple when you look at the costs and figures."

One of the most effective methods of encouraging recycling is implementing a "pay and throw" system, which requires residents to pay for each bag discarded in an RTF. Recycling reduces the amount of trash a person brings to the dump, which reduces the number of bags that have to be purchased. Town officials tried to implement a "pay and throw" system last year, but town meeting rejected the idea. The plan would have forced residents to purchase easily identifiable 30 gallon bags for $1 from the town. Residents would have been forced to use only the special bags at the RTF. Brown said other towns have lowered their trash disposal costs dramatically with "pay and throw" programs. He added that the town may try to present the plan again at a future town meeting.

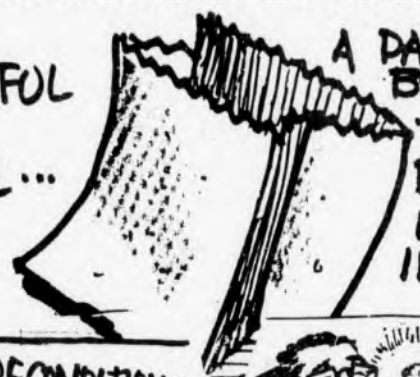
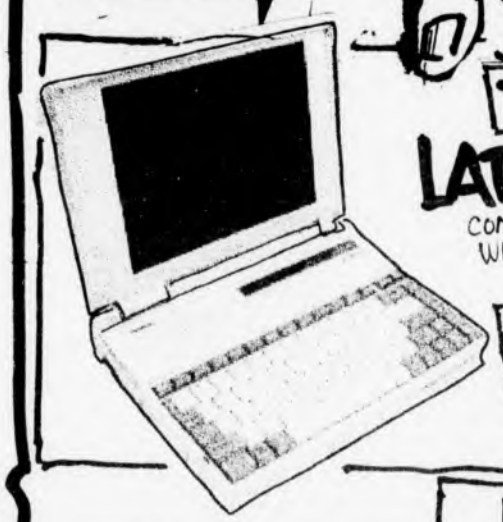
IN MY DAY, IF CHILDREN DIDN'T BEHAVE... ALL THEY GOT IN THEIR CHRISTMAS STOCKING WAS A LUMP OF COAL!

But do today's 'Sensitive' parents teach their selfish spawn to respect the precepts of responsible society by punishing their anti-social behavior?



Of Course Not! instead, they stand in line for hours so that they can shower the selfish ingrates with expensive gifts! Rock-and-Roll music and violent video games! Dangerous skateboards and spooky little hairy robots! No wonder salvage store moguls like me don't get the respect they deserve!

On top of that, thanks to this newfangled gas and oil home heating, many of the right kind of parents cant even FIND a piece of coal with which to discipline their out-of-control offspring!



I'm mighty proud to say that Building #19 is one store that's gone the extra mile to meet the needs of right-thinking Moms and Dads in the New England area.

The CHS soccer team poses for the camera at their breakup dinner. Front row from left are: Andrew Laney, Jake Motley, Mike Baird and Hunt Pile. In the back row are: Mike Equi, Dennis Rooney, Devin Buick, Justin Maitland, Ben Littauer, Noel Grinnell, Steve Sceery and Coach Jeff Martell.

NEW ARRIVAL

Lance and Amy Norris have wonderful news to share with all — Dec. 3, they became the proud parents of Raymond Richard Norris! Raymond weighed nine pounds, 14 ounces, a big boy, indeed! And, guess who welcomed him home? None other than his big sister, Savanna! Savanna is so excited to have a little brother and will undoubtedly be a big help to Mom and Dad! What a wonderful Christmas that family will have this year!

SENIOR CITIZEN DAY

Kathi Yeager wants you to start your new calendar for next year right now — mark the date, okay? You are all invited to Senior Citizen Day at the New Osgood School Wednesday, Jan. 13, from 10 to 11 a.m. There will be tours of the new building, coffee, snacks and some entertainment, all put on by grades K-3. RSVP to Kathi at 383-9820. If you need transportation, call 383-9112. There will be tons of fun, and you will be able to see our little ones "in action," don't miss it. Oh, the snowdate is Wednesday, Jan. 20, same time.

VENISON DONATED

Did you hear about Pat Plante? Oh, wow — he was hunting in the woods in Maine and shot a 16 point deer! Pat must just have been so excited! What did he do with it? Well, some family in Maine will not go hungry this winter. Pat heard about a needy family and donated it to them. True Christmas spirit, from a truly giving person! Congratulations, Pat!

WHO'S WHO IN COLLEGE

The following is a list of students who are featured in the 32nd Annual Edition of WHO'S WHO AMONG AMERICAN HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS, 1997-1998. They are, Alia Afshor, Allison M. Berg, Ivan Chang, Megan Connolly, Dan P. Duffy, Mark B. Equi, Noel Grinnell, Elizabeth R. Ingber, Meagan K. Leahy, Julia A. Lovallo, Jamey A. Watts and Kelly Tufts. This is the largest recognition program and publication in the nation honoring high achieving high school students, and we are proud of all of you!

Ken Maitland of Forest Avenue launches his 19-foot Chamberlain dory.

SHOP AT ART CENTER

If you are still looking for that unique Christmas present for that special person on your list, consider going to the South Shore Art Center, specifically the exhibit in the Dillion Gallery! There you will be able to find beautiful art — an unframed picture is under $100, a framed one is under $200! There is also a table located in the back of the gallery that has items at 50 percent off. The exhibit will be open until Dec. 23. There, now you can scratch another gift off of your list!

MIDDLEBURY NEWS

Received news from Middlebury College stating that John J. Flanagan III, son of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Flanagan Jr. and Aaron D. Sawchuk, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Sawchuk, have both begun their first year at Middlebury College in Vermont. They join 582 other first-year students, and we know that they will "do themselves proud;" we are sure to hear more about them in the future!

HANDMADE DORY LAUNCHED

On Nov. 22, Ken Maitland of Forest Ave. launched this 19-foot Chamberlain dory he built from plans drafted by Tom Sleeper of Marblehead. Ken spent 10 months building it in his basement, of marine plywood trimmed with mahogany. Ken and a small group of friends and family were fortunate to have warm weather this late in the fall for the launching. He used the Parker Avenue launching ramp to put the boat into Cohasset Harbor. This is the second rowing boat built by Ken!

SOCCER BANQUET

The CHS soccer team held its breakup banquet recently, we thought you might like to take a peek at all of the senior stars, so we have a photograph for you to view! This way, when you read about them in the future as stars in various colleges, you will be able to picture them perfectly!

CONSIGNMENT SHOP

Polly Logan has a way for you to avoid holiday traffic and overwhelming crowds — she suggests that you head to the Cohasset Consignment shop to do your holiday shopping!

Some examples : beautiful furs (including Kakas Furs), shirts and sweaters from L.L. Bean, Eddie Bauer, Lands End, The Gap, Brooks Brothers and Ralph Lauren for both men and women; all kinds of holiday dresses and accessories; for the collector, there are Hummels, dolls, ornaments, china — the list goes on! Not only will you find something nifty at a great price, the proceeds go to the Social Service League! A win-win situation!

Christmas schedule at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church

Christmas worship at Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., features a variety of worship celebrating Christ's birth. The Christmas Eve Family Holy Communion service will be held Thursday, Dec. 24, at 5 p.m. The Jubilate Children's Choir will sing. The star of Bethlehem will be lit on the church tower.

The Festal Holy Communion Service of Christmas Eve will begin at 11 p.m. preceded by a special program of Christmas music to start at 10:30 p.m. The Saint Stephen's adult choir with music director Dr. G. Fredrick Guzasky will offer music such as "For Christ is Born," by Kenneth Aiken and Mary Elizabeth Crawford, and "Quem Vidistis Pastores," by Francis Poulenc. The traditional nativity story of the Gospel of Luke is read from the King James Version of the Bible. Candlelight illuminates the singing of "Silent Night." The beautiful bells of the church carillon will ring out the music of Christmas into the night sky.

Worship on Christmas Day, Friday, Dec. 25, will be at 10 a.m. Sunday morning worship is as usual at 8 and 10 a.m.

The church school is busy preparing an Epiphany Pageant to take place Sunday, Jan.11, at 10 a.m. celebrating the appearance of Jesus to the three magi representing all the world. Children will portray angels, shepherds hurrying to Bethlehem, Joseph and Mary with baby, and of course, the three magi.

Christmas at First Parish

First Parish in Cohasset is busily preparing for several joyous celebrations of the Christmas season.

On Sunday, Dec. 20, at 10:30 a.m., a special service of "Lessons and Carols" will be held in the Meeting House on Cohasset Common. The Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox and acting minister Colin Leitch will share a collection of holiday stories, and the choir will entertain and delight us with a glorious selection of carols.

On Thursday, Dec. 24, there will be two special Christmas services. At 5 p.m. a traditional Christmas pageant will be presented in the Meeting House by the children of the religious education program. This is a yearly tradition that is sure to stir up some holiday sentiment and bring a smile to all who attend.

At 8 p.m. the traditional Christmas Eve candlelight service will be held in the Meeting House, ministered by both The Rev. Tarbox and The Rev. Leitch.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Mail-dominated season

"Neither rain nor sleet nor snow nor dark of night shall stay these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds."

"Mails from the North — the East — the West — the South — comes the magical word NEWS," said 19th century essayist and critic Thomas De Quincey.

Where do you get your news from the north, east, west and south?

From the mail carriers of course.

During their careers of sorting, stamping and lugging our letters, they go through hundreds of pairs of shoes and carry tons of letters to our doors.

They are out in rain, snow and sleet.

They are out in sun, wind and heat.

They carry a sack on their backs that weighs 25 pounds or more.

They walk from seven to ten miles a day and go through two to three pairs of shoes a year.

They have to be ever on the alert for unleashed dogs. Sometimes they are chased. Sometimes they are actually bitten.

The volume of mail throughout the nation this holiday season is expected to rise to 16.7 billion pieces overall, with a one percent increase in cards and letters and a ten percent increase in priority mail and regular package delivery over last year.

Here are some tips that will make it easier for our mail carriers this season:

- Keep dogs restrained at all times.
- Write, type or print the complete address neatly.
- Always use a return address.
- Don't let an in correct ZIP code delay deliver of cards and letters.
- When packaging a gift, select a box that is strong enough to protect the contents. Leave space for cushioning material inside the carton. Convenient packaging materials including boxes and padding materials can be purchased at the post office. Express Mail and Priority Mail boxes, envelopes and tubes are free.
- Cushion package contents with shredded or rolled newspaper, bubble wrap or Styrofoam peanuts. Plain-air-popped popcorn is also good for cushioning, as well as being inexpensive and environmentally friendly. Left over popcorn ca be strung for holiday decorations.
- Always use tape designed for shipping, such as pressure-sensitive tape, nylon-reinforced craft paper tape, or glass-reinforced pressure sensitive tape.
- The only addresses on packages for mailing should be the delivery and return addresses. Special tip: place a return address label inside the package.
- Carefully pack glass and fragile hollow items, like vases, with newspaper or packing material to avoid damage due to shock. When mailing framed photographs, take the glass out of the frame and wrap it separately.
- Remove batteries from toys. Wrap them and place them next to the toys in the mailing box.
- Packages that weigh at least one pound must be taken to the post office for mailing.
- When writing Santa, be sure to use a return address. Santa may write back!
- Avoid waiting in line for stamps by buying holidays tamps by phone (1-800-STAMP-24), stamps by mail, or stamps from postal vending machines.

Holiday stamps available this seasons are Florentine Madonna and Children, wreathes, Kwanzaa and Hanukkah.

Here's a special delivery message to all our mail carriers - Happy Holidays. We appreciate your hard work, especially during this busiest of seasons.

Tax, sewer deferment offered

TO THE EDITOR:

"Tax squeeze threatens to put elderly out of their homes."

This statement was headlines in a recent addition of a local newspaper.

However it need not apply to Cohasset senior taxpayers if you are 65 years or older by July 1, 1998, if your income is $40,000 or less, and have owned and occupied your home for the past five years, you can defer your real estate tax until you sell your home. Massachusetts must have been your domicile for the preceding 10 years.

In the next few years sewer betterments will be starting and they can also be deferred. You can defer all or any part of your taxes or betterments.

The residents of Cohasset have voted for these benefits to help seniors to stay in their homes. But it is up to the seniors to take advantage of these benefits. You must apply each year in December at the assessor's office.

There is an 8 percent interest charge added to the amount you defer each year and there's also a lien placed on the property. Many seniors shy away from the program because of the lien, but the lien is no big deal. It is like a mortgage that is paid off when the home is sold.

Some seniors also feel they are taking something away from their children leaving them with the taxes to pay. Remember the taxes are paid from the proceeds from the sale of the property and with property values increasing like they are, the kids will not be doing too bad. If they had the money to help you now they would be glad to do it, so you could look at the deferment as if they are giving you a few thousand each year and paying for it later.

If you have any questions, please give me a call at 383-4104.

Library parking: converting a silk purse into a sow's ear

TO THE EDITOR:

Legend has it that, many years ago, the famous Cambridge research and development firm Arthur D. Little Inc. accepted a challenge to make a silk purse from a sow's ear, and successfully converted that uninspiring material into synthetic silk from which a purse was woven for display.

Not to be outdone, our Selectmen are busy with the equivalent of turning a silk purse into a sow's ear! The plan for the library at the Osgood School included a correction to a major defect of the Paul Pratt Library, inadequate parking, by removing a relatively recent addition to the school so as to provide street level parking. One of the reasons that the library proposal received such a strong vote of approval at town meeting, and the alternate dismissed, was the common sense and well-developed rationality of the proposal. Supporters were well aware that the proposal addressed the parking issue by removing a wing of the building. Opponents would have been opponents whether or not they understood that the wing was to be removed, but they did not carry the day.

Now some selectmen seek to degrade a first rate plan by finding "some other use" for the wing, thus forcing parking provision to the lower level behind the school. Handicap access being mandatory, an elevator would have to be provided and some staff presence advisable on the lower floor.

If "some other use" for the space is identified, equivalent space probably could be provided by new construction elsewhere on the property for little more than the cost of converting the wing in question. Best to stay with the library committee's pragmatic plan that well serves the public, and refrain from tinkering that degrades it from silk plan to a sow's ear debacle.

Post office delivers this holiday season

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

As the Christmas crunch reaches its peak this weekend, the Cohasset Post Office is up for the challenge.

"We're seeing lots of last-minute people. So we've got three windows open rather than the usual two, "said Postmaster Francine Winters about how the post office handles the increased volume.

Cohasset is by no means alone. The volume of mail throughout the nation this holiday season is expected to rise to 16.7 billion, a jump of three percent overall, with a one percent increase in cards and letters and a ten percent increase in priority mail and regular package delivery.

Winters said if you see postal trucks on Sunday, don't be surprised. The post office will deliver packages and fruit on Sunday but there will be no letter delivery that day.

The Cohasset Post Office also provides a parcel run in addition to its daily letter run to homes and businesses around town.

Postman Mickey Patrolia delivers the mail near Beechwood Street.

Residents are asked to put their Christmas cards in a special bin inside the post office to facilitate handling so they are not in tubs all mixed up with other mail. Winters explained the postal workers put the cards face forward in trays which helps cut down on the processing time during cancellations.

She asks that people who are using boxes to mail gifts marked with liquor or chemical names, such as Dewars or bleach, wrap the box in brown paper. Winters said FAA regulations prohibits boxes with liquor or chemicals on airlines so the unmarked package could end up going surface.

"And always put a return address on a letter or package," she said.

The post office recommends everyone have their local Christmas cards in the mail by Tuesday at the latest. Those being sent across country should be mailed by tomorrow (Friday). For mail procrastinators to ensure delivery, any packages sent Friday or Saturday should go Priority Mail which gets packages to their destinations in two days to most major cities. After that, a customer should probably opt for Express Mail which gets mail to most cities overnight.

Packages, Priority and Express Mail will be delivered on Christmas Day.

Local post offices offering extended hours until 2 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 19 include the Hingham Post Office on North Street in Hingham Square and the Accord Post Office on Whiting Street.

Christmas stamps are always popular, the post office said. Those available this year include Florentine Madonna and Child, wreaths, Kwanzaa and Hanukkah.

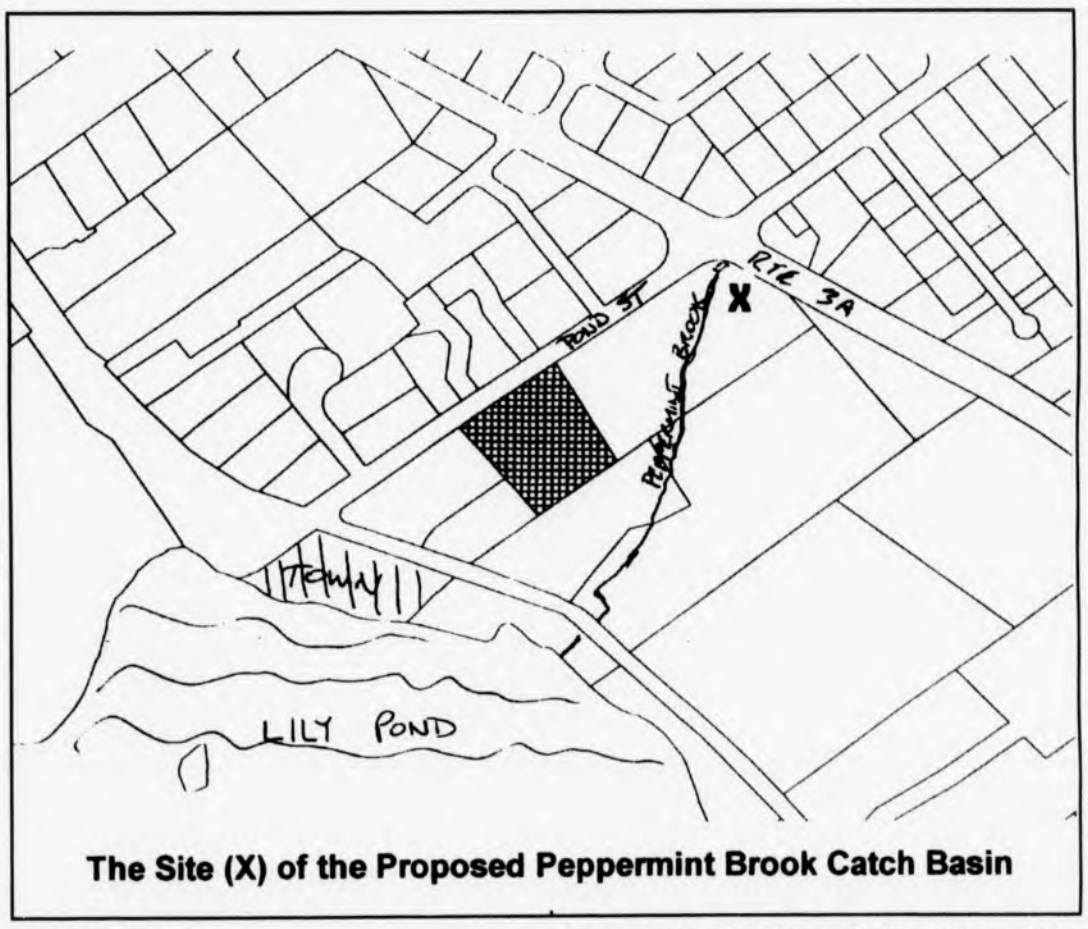
Winters said so far the weather has been a blessing.

"With mail in vehicles, we worry most about weather," she said. "Weather can affect the airlines also."

HEALTH NOTES

Protecting Lily Pond from oil spills

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health



Catch Basin Project

We've discussed the threat from oil spills on Rte 3-A fouling our water supply at Lily Pond. The Board of Health has just begun a plan for improving our defenses against such a threat.

The problem is that a spill near the intersection of Pond Street and 3-A would arrive at Lily Pond almost immediately. The storm drain at that intersection empties into Peppermint Brook which is one tributary to Lily Pond. The Board has begun taking steps to retard any flow from this storm drain by developing a catch basin to collect the flow until appropriate measures can be put in place.

The idea is to place retarding chambers which will delay the flow of water from the storm drain until the Fire Department can place barriers and the town begin cleanup of the oil spill. A spill of the new reformulated gasoline (see Health Notes No. 13, Cohasset Mariner, December 3, Page 11) would probably raise the level of MTBE and render the water unsafe to drink.

Along with the new catch basin and retarding chambers, the Board of Health is reviewing the emergency response plans for both the fire Department, and the Massachusetts Emergency Response Administration mandated emergency response plan for the town.

The Site (X) of the Proposed Peppermint Brook Catch Basin

Coastal Survey of Cohasset

The Massachusetts Division of Marine fisheries has just completed a survey report covering both Cohasset and Scituate, and despite strenuous efforts of the Board of Health, and the Conservation Commission, we are losing ground to pollution.

There is both good news and bad in the report. The bad news is the clam flats are still closed in Little Harbor, and on the left side of the channel going out of Cohasset Harbor. The good news is that almost everywhere else outside of the Harbor, the water quality is adequate for taking shellfish; mussels at Brush Island, for instance, and off the Glades. The report identifies many open pipes into the water with fecal coliform counts at dangerous levels, some of which are being addressed by ongoing septic upgrades, and others awaiting sewering of Jerusalem Road.

There is no question that the Little Harbor study, which the town voted at the last Town Meeting, will give us a direction for further improvement. Contractor's bids for this work are scheduled to be received on December 17. Work will begin in the spring. More about this in future issues.

'Numero tres, por favor'

TWENTY SOMETHING

KIM MCGRATH

Immediately upon graduating from college, I moved to Spain. Moving was neither an inspired nor carefully heeded scheme. Basically, I moved on account of lack of knowing what else to do.

It all started senior year. While all my peers and classmates seemed to have jobs, interns, graduate schools and fellowships arranged for post graduation life, I had zilch planned. Evidently I had missed the "how-to-prepare-for-life-after-college" class because come May, I still did not even know how to even create a proper resume.

I felt despondent and forlorn.

One day while in class, my professor asked the girl sitting next to me what she planned to do after graduation. The girl brightly stated she was moving to France. She continued, saying she wanted to immerse herself in the French culture and learn the language.

The professor's reaction was amazing. He raved. He gushed. He praised her decision, enthusiastically rattling on, telling her that moving to another country was a wise and wonderful plan.

I was stunned. Was it that easy? Is that all it took? Could I, too, say that I was going to live overseas? Would that prevent everyone from giving me those disapproving looks when posed with the same question, I answered pathetically "I don't know"?

I decided to give it a try.

The next time I was asked the pestilent question, I held my breath, substituted Spain for France, and muttered something about traveling. My answer was met with approval! I could not believe my good fortune. I had a solution.

The year progressed and I continued to repeat the same answer every time I was posed with the question. (Which when you are a college senior, is approximately every four seconds.)

As May approached I had successfully told everyone I knew that I was planning to move to Spain. The only problem now, I slowly realized, was that I actually had to move to Spain.

I began to become anxious about my capricious decision. First of all, I did not speak Spanish. Yes, having studied Spanish for about seven years, I could successfully inquire how Isabella was feeling ("Hola, Isabella. Como estas?") but that was the full exact of my knowledge of the language.

(In a true bout of irony, during all my time in Spain, I never met anyone named Isabella.)

For some reason though, I figured I would be okay. It may have been the plethora of people that kept reassuring me that once I was in the country, I would pick up the language up quickly.

As one friend eloquently put it, "A month spent in the country is like equivalent to like six years of language labs."

How wrong she was!

There is an expression, "Wherever you go, there you are". I had never truly appreciated the expression until I got to Spain. I could not speak Spanish in the States, and I'll be darned, I could not speak Spanish when I was in Spain.

An extreme low point was ordering lunch at McDonald's one day. I had learned weeks earlier that my limited Spanish knowledge, coupled with my Boston accent, made me basically incomprehensible and so I tried to stick with the bare basics whenever possible. At McDonald's, I ordered a very basic and easily pronounceable number three - Numero tres, por favor. I figured it was a safe bet.

Until the McDonald's employee brought me three Big Mac's. Nothing else. Just three Big Mac's.

I stood there for a moment. I figured if I was not even able to get across the basic sentiment of "A number three, please" the chances of me being able to stumble through "Excuse me, but I didn't order three Big Mac's. I ordered a number three the cheeseburger, small fry and Pepsi combo" were slim.

So I took my three Big Mac's to my table.

And although my listening skills were only about as proficient as my speaking skills, I am fairly certain that I heard one of the teenagers behind me in line remark, "Who's the cool kid who just ordered three Big Mac's?"

It was unfortunately one of many humiliating episodes and while I was never able to communicate with many of the non English speaking natives, I will never regret moving to Spain. It taught me a lot about myself. Mostly that I cannot speak Spanish.

Drug & Alcohol Hotline awaits calls

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The Drug & Alcohol Hotline is in its sixth week and to date, counselor Bob Harold has received only one call. Still, he's optimistic that once the word gets around, callers will find that the hotline is a place to go for anonymous referral.

Harold is a certified drug and alcoholism counselor who works for Faxon in Quincy.

Prior to helping people conquer substance abuse habits, Harold worked 25 years for the MBTA.

"I retired from the T and then decided to enter Jack Shea's program at U. Mass-Boston for Drug and Alcohol counseling," said Harold. "Now I'm working on my licensing for my CDAC (Certified Drug Alcohol Counselor) and you have to have 6,000 hours in the field."

Though he is an experienced counselor, his role on the hotline will be solely to provide information and referrals to callers.

"It's really not for counseling," explained the Reverend Cliff Cutler, chairman of Cohasset's Drug & Alcohol Committee. "This is really for people who want information on the effects of drugs and alcohol and where to go if they have or know someone who has a problem."

Harold hopes to do just that, staffing the phone line from 6 to 10, every Tuesday evening.

Local schools have posted the number, fliers have been passed about and social workers in neighboring towns have also been contacted about the service.

"I spoke with Sue Cronin who works for the Tobacco Control Program for the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative," said Cutler. "She mentioned that she was at a meeting of caregivers in Hull and she shared the number there. They were very enthusiastic. I'll meet with the social service worker from the Council on Aging on Monday and will pass the information along to her."

While substance abuse and adolescents is the first image that comes to mind, the hotline is actually to serve those most likely to have some contact with the problem, personally or indirectly—and that is just about anyone.

"It's important for people who have a problem or know someone who does to have an awareness of this service and a phone number to call if they need it," said Cutler. "Social workers in the community will also receive the information from us. Bob, too, has passed the information around groups he works with at Faxon."

The hotline got its start thanks to a push from state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray whose calls nudged Bell Atlantic into a $2,000 grant.

Cutler explained that the Drug & Alcohol Committee is using that money to provide this telephone service.

"We were fortunate that Mary Jeanette Murray was able to get the money for us," said Harold.

Harold isn't discouraged with the lack of response yet. He has kept busy with his share of raising publicity, handing out fliers at Faxon in Quincy and also getting the information aired on Cohasset's public access Cable-TV station.

"It's kind of hard for folks to call up," he said. "We try to tell them it's confidential. But we haven't had much response yet but we will probably get some calls with the holidays coming up. People—kids, in particular—might not know where to go to get help for a friend or family member. If this line saves one person's life, that's all I care about."

Tuesday evenings, Harold can be found waiting with a good book in hand, prepared for the hours-long wait.

"People say to me, 'Aren't you discouraged?,'" he said. "I say, 'No, why should I be?' I made a commitment. I know people who have suffered through this and I've been here at Faxon for going on six years so I've seen what the disease can do. It's just something I want to do."

Anyone interested in information or referrals about drug or alcohol abuse can call the Drug & Alcohol Hotline at 383-4120 from 6 to 10 p.m., Tuesdays.

Point dispute may land town in court

Gammons parcels say the unrestricted view from their beneficiary properties would be negatively impacted by any development of the lot.

These properties initially had "rights" — like an easement — over Lot O to restrict what is developed there.

But a law that passed in 1960 put a "sunset provision" on deed restrictions like the one on Gammons Point making those restrictions obsolete after 50 years if not renewed, said Michael H. Sullivan, 21 Gammons Road. Sullivan and Keith Moskow Jr., 98 Gammons Road, are fighting Cotton's petition in land court.

"None were aware, so no one acted on it," he said.

Towns, however, are exempt from the legislation and therefore can act to stop Cotton's petition to the state land court to remove the restriction.

"Dan Cotton is attempting to take something away from the town to benefit himself," Michael Sullivan said.

But Cotton said he was taken by surprise by his neighbors and others who are upset about the issue.

He explained when Gammons put the restriction in place there was no zoning, Title V and no conservation commission.

Cotton, who is 85, said the purpose of lifting the restriction is to simplify his daughters' settling of his estate.

Nevertheless, he said he has gotten on well with his neighbors and the town over the years and would be willing to withdraw his petition in land court without prejudice. That means things would return to "square one," he said.

"If it goes to court, it could turn into a rancorous affair," Cotton said.

But regardless, selectmen intend to enforce the restriction with "this owner or a future owner," Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said.

So the board voted 4-1 to affirm they are enforcing the restriction and will intervene in any court action now and in the future to enforce that.

Cotton said the deed restriction could stay as far as he's concerned if it remains "without prejudice."

"But your action will prejudice it," he told selectmen. "I feel in the interest of my estate, I'll have no other choice (but to go forward in land court) if you do."

Selectman Diane Sullivan cast the sole dissenting vote.

"I don't want to commit a future board (to a particular action)," she said.

Although Selectman Nan Roth voted with the majority she said would "feel better" if the town owned the land.

"The principal beneficiaries are those who live around Little Harbor," she said. "I would feel better if the townspeople could use the land."

McMorris disagreed saying that open space is not necessarily recreation land.

Post-MCAS plans are in the works

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

What's in store for Cohasset schools now that the MCAS results have been digested by faculty?

"It's an evolutionary process," said Ruth Fennessey, curriculum coordinator for Cohasset public schools. "We're in the process of changing several things as part of an ongoing process of curriculum changes."

On the agenda is a mathematics program that is more heavily language based and therefore more in keeping with the MCAS mathematics test.

Actually, all subjects will be taught in a format that more closely matches the returned MCAS exams.

Science topics, for example, will be more in alignment with the types of topics found on MCAS tests, beginning as early as the first grade, Fennessey said.

"As we look at the scores, we'll be doing some work in the writing area," she said. "That's where the scores were not the type of scores we'd hoped for."

The schools will also be using the same scoring system that the state uses for MCAS, now that the scoring guide has been made available to the schools. Teachers will receive training on the new methods.

"This is baseline data for the first year and we'll be using it as suggested, to improve instruction and to make sure that we are on target for the frameworks that we've been working on diligently all along."
— Ruth Fennessey, curriculum coordinator

"We're also working on social studies," said Fennessey. "The topics have changed for what different grade levels need so you have to match those topics."

Last week, schools superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said that a good sized percentage of the students who failed the MCAS were special education students.

"The state allows for the conditions to change for the SPED students and we followed those guidelines when they were tested," said Fennessey.

"There are several options under discussion now and we'll have to look at our budget for an after-school or summer program for the children that failed," she added. "We'll be discussing that at our administrator's meeting, which we have every two weeks. I think that it has been widely publicized. This is baseline data for the first year and we'll be using it as suggested, to improve instruction and to make sure that we are on target for the frameworks that we've been working on diligently all along."

If the MCAS isn't enough to keep Fennessey busy, the state's Board of Education has agreed that all second grade students will now have to pass a standardized reading test.

"I don't have too much information on the second grade yet, but I'm assuming that it will be similar to the one given to third graders," she said. "I guess this will give the state some earlier information for earlier intervention, but that's all I know about it. The state hasn't shared anything with us yet."

Sidewalk, walkway slated for King Street

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield wrote to town conservation agent Paul Shea for comments and recommendations about a proposed asphalt sidewalk and wooden walkway along part of King Street near Peppermint Brook. The town plans to install guardrails to replace the concrete posts on King Street where it crosses Peppermint Brook as a safety measure along the narrow roadway which has been the site of several accidents. The guardrails will be installed one foot from the edge of King Street.

Litchfield said an asphalt sidewalk has to be constructed inside the guardrail fencing to allow pedestrians safe passage.

"We are proposing a heavy-duty wooden walkway be built over the end of the existing culvert," he said. "This walkway will have to bear the weight of a sidewalk plow."

The proposed sidewalk will be 165 feet long and seven feet wide (five feet of asphalt with one foot of gravel on each side). Other work to be done will include removing three trees.

Demographic study is sought

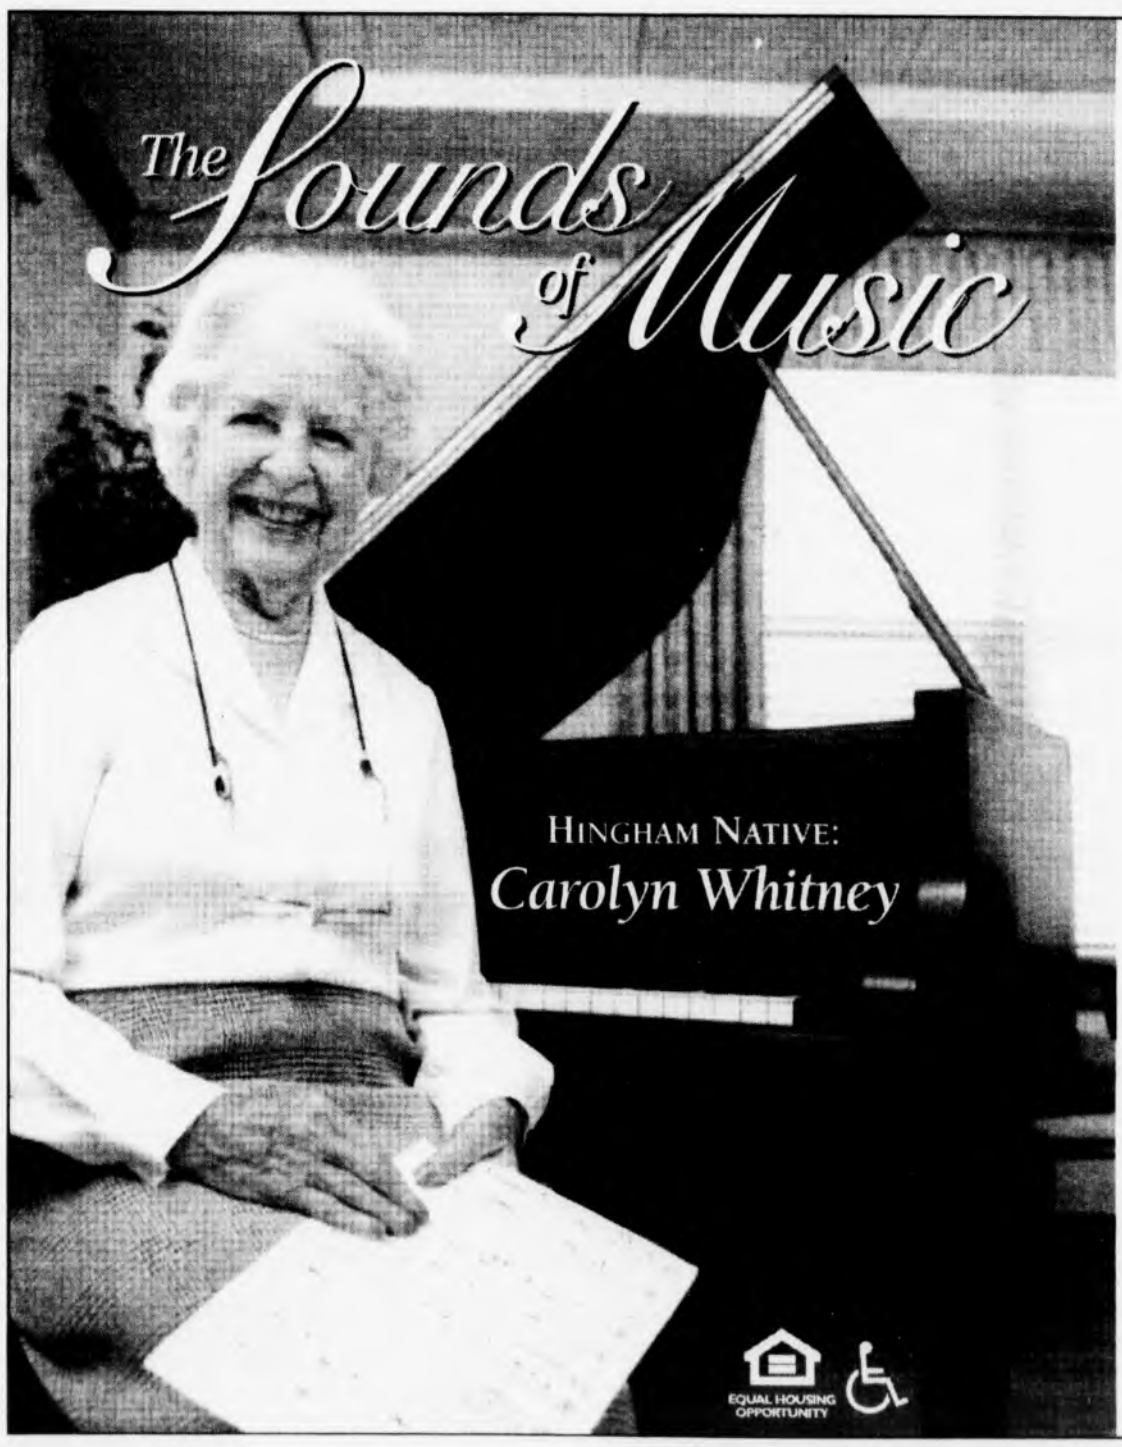
Town Manager Mark Haddad wrote to the Cohasset Housing Authority and Council on Elder Affairs asking them to work jointly in conducting a demographic study of the town's senior citizen population.

"The board of selectmen is extremely interested and committed to pursuing housing for seniors in town," Haddad wrote.

Growth committee task force members

At the request of selectmen, Town Manager Mark Haddad asked the planning board and conservation commission to each designate a member to serve on the new Growth and Development Task Force which will come up with a new master plan for the town.

Also serving will be two selectmen and three citizens at large. Interested citizens should call Haddad at 383-4105.



Sharing 'thoughts while shaving'

Hamilton Tewksbury, 81 Elm St., wrote to selectmen because he is "puzzled" about traffic control in town.

Tewksbury mentioned the considerations for King Street which included making it one way, widening it and restricting it to nothing over 2-1/2 tons. Then he discussed enhancing the village area that included proposals to narrowing Elm Street and the intersection of Elm and South Main streets. The four-way stops at Cushing & Pleasant and North Main & Forest streets are also puzzling, he wrote.

Cushing & Pleasant, which he described as an open intersection, do not need stops all around. At N. Main & Forest, Tewksbury recommended a yellow caution blinker on N. Main and a red stop blinker on Forest or traffic lights.

"Enough, I'm through shaving," he wrote. "You get the idea, I'm bothered...puzzled by our attitude towards traffic. Basically when the automobile was invented, the 'accident' came along with it."

A cymbal of success

Zildjian family marks 375 years in business

By Alison Cohen
STAFF WRITER

In 1623, Timothy Hatherly arrived in Plimoth Plantation and began to explore the area around Scituate and Norwell. The Dutch were establishing a trading stronghold known as New Amsterdam on what is now known as Manhattan island. In Europe, James I was on the thrones of both England and Scotland, James IV rule the roost in the Holy Roman Empire, Louis XIII ran the show in France and the Thirty Years War was fragmenting the German principalities even further.

In Constantinople, now known as Istanbul, Turkey, an alchemist named Avedis invented a secret formula that revolutionized the art and craft of making cymbals. An appreciative sultan gave him the honorific title "zildjian" or cymbalsmith in recognition of the power and clarity of sound his formula made possible.

One way or another, a descendant of that first Avedis Zildjian has been in charge of the family business and the secret formula.

The business moved to the shores of America in 1927 and was incorporated here in 1929. The corporate headquarters moved to Norwell in 1973.

Today, the company remains firmly in the hands of the Zildjian family, but in a break with former tradition, two of the top executives are women.

"Neither one of us expected to be in the business," Craigie Zildjian said of herself and her sister, Debbie Zildjian. "It was very traditional, very male."

According to Craigie, it came as a surprise and an honor when their grandfather, Avedis Zildjian, invited first her and then her sister, Debbie, to join the business. But, she hastens to add, it was not out-of-keeping with Avedis Zildjian's personality or character judgment.

"He was just so open-minded," she says.

Today, Craigie and Debbie work directly under Avedis Zildjian's successor, their father, Armand.

Craigie joined the business in 1976. She has been designated Armand's successor and named vice chairman and general manager of the North American operations.

"Debbie came into the business a little differently," Craigie said. "She started a family and worked part-time."

In 1980, Debbie Zildjian was named director of human resources and clerk of the corporation.

Although the family is absorbed in the business, they reach outside the circle for a chief executive officer, hiring Dave Bryan three years ago.

The American roots of the business came about in a very roundabout way. Avedis Zildjian emigrated to the United States in 1908 with no intention of becoming a part of the cymbal business.

"He was as successful candy maker married to an American lass," Craigie relates.

In 1927, all that changed with a letter from his Uncle Aram in the old country.

"He wrote that as he had no heirs, it was time for our grandfather to return and take over the family business as it was his destiny," Craigie explains.

Now thoroughly Americanized, Avedis Zildjian engaged in a little market research before responding.

"He discovered that it may be a family tradition, but it was not lucrative," Craigie said. But instead of rejecting the business out of hand, Avedis Zildjian thought about ways of making it profitable.

"He visited music stores, talked to musicians," Craigie said. "He saw the birth, the flourishing of the new music. He sensed at that point a new market for cymbals."

The key to the new music was also the key to Zildjian's success: creation of the modern drum set.

"Up to that point there was no such thing as a drum set," Craigie explains. "The cymbals were played by hand and they were a smaller, stiffer instrument."

Avedis intentionally decided to work with the leading drummers of the day, musicians like Chick Webb, Poppa Joe Jones and Gene Krupa, encouraging them to push the medium farther by telling him what kind of sound they wanted to produce.

Avedis started by creating a thinner, more flexible cymbal. Other cymbals joined it, designed to produce a multitude of cymbal sounds. The modern drum set pushed the envelope on the developing jazz, swing and bebop music of the 30s and 40s.

"The collaboration with musicians became a central core and company value," Craigie says. "Research and design has always valued its closeness with the drummers. The input comes at the top and keeps us on the cutting edge of the industry."

The Zildjians treasure that ongoing relationship with drummers, adding the new generations of rock musicians to the creative spirit of the business.

That collaboration reveals both the art and science behind the company's innovations and improvements. Someone has to translate a drummer's desire for an instrument with a "dark," "bright" or "trashy" sound into reality.

"The building is always full of drummers," Craigie says.

If Craigie and Debbie are the first women officially "in the business," they aren't the first businesswomen in the family. Their grandmother, Alice Frances "Sally" Zildjian was an integral part of the candy business which bankrolled the cymbal business in the early days.

Craigie got some of her business training the old fashioned, family way:

"I watched my grandfather and my father and I saw different styles," Craigie says. Then she added business school education and on-the-job training to the regimen.

Debbie, too, came up through the ranks, learning the family business from the melting room up. Some of Craigie's favorite memories are of her sister "covered in soot."

"It's very physical work," Debbie explains.

Debbie's introduction to the business is very much in line with the way her father, Armand Zildjian, the current president of the company, learned the ropes from his father.

"He would work during the days making cymbals and pay the bills at night," she explained. "Father did every job."

While the business is very much hands-on and inspired by musical creativity, it is also a very modern industry with mechanization and new technology

Craigie Zildjian of Cohasset and her sister, Debbie Zildjian of Hingham, outside the company's Norwell headquarters.

"It's a very forward-thinking company," Debbie explains. "Armand was also fascinated by innovation."

If Zildjian's modern success began with jazz, swing and bebop, it didn't end there.

"Our cymbals are used in every style of music. They're used by the Allman Brothers, Pearl Jam and Aerosmith's Joey Kramer," Craigie said. "Wherever there is music, you'll find Zildjian. We make products for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They test them out in Symphony Hall."

Symphony Hall isn't the only place Zildjian needs to prove itself.

"We are field-tested on the road and in the studio, too," says Debbie. "Musicians are eager to give us their input."

Cymbals aren't the only things made by Zildjian these days. The company added a line of drumsticks, marimbas and special effects percussion instruments to the line. They got involved in making drumsticks the old-fashioned way.

"Drummers were asking us, 'Why don't you make sticks?'" Craigie said. "We thought, if we make cymbals, why not make the things they are hit with."

Initially, Zildjian contracted with another company to make the drumsticks, but ultimately acquired a company that made wooden dowels and moved into manufacturing its own sticks out of tried and true hickory. The company is located in Tuscaloosa, Alabama.

Later Malletech, a company that made concert percussion instruments approached Zildjian about a collaborative effort.

"It was founded by Lee Howard Stevens, the world's foremost solo marimbist," said Debbie. Together, Malletech and Zildjian make marimbas and mallets of premium quality. Stevens remained intimately involved in the company.

"He gets to be the creative genius," Debbie quips, then she gets serious. "It seemed to make so much sense."

Debbie and Craigie define the Zildjian difference as a matter of hewing to core values in an evolving business.

"We want to be pre-eminent in quality and craftsmanship," they say in unison. The business is both an art and a science involving a complex understanding of metalsmithing and how that affects the quality of sound a musician wants.

"You can't go to college and learn it," Debbie explains.

To keep the family business going means keeping the family in it. Both Debbie and Craigie are grooming their daughters to take a place either in the day-to-day operations or on the board of directors and developing their love and appreciation of music. Craigie's daughter Samantha Zildjian, 11, already is carving out an intimate knowledge of the product by being a percussionist herself. Debbie's daughters, Cady, 18, and Emily, 16, love music as well.

Keeping the family in business for another 375 years could be a tricky thing. The two sisters hope to increase the odds by being part of the Center for Family Business at Northeastern University.

The family got involved because they learned first-hand how easy it is for bitterness and personal issues to get in the way of family-owned businesses. When Avedis died in 1979, Armand and his brother, Robert, couldn't resolve their differences. Eventually, Robert formed a rival company, taking with him the family secret.

The remaining family members don't neglect the importance of having healthy outside perspectives. The company's board of directors includes non-family members.

Debbie and Craigie continue to turn to Avedis' and Armand's example for inspiration as they head into the new millennium. The close relationship between the musicians and the instrument makers is one essential that has enriched the company and the Zildjian's lives, not just in the usual sense of success.

"There is a genuine joy in the relationship," Craigie explains. "Buddy Rich played at Debbie's childhood birthday party and we have fostered a real sense of musical and ethnic diversity in our business."

At a recent celebration of the company's anniversary, Zildjian threw a party for music lovers. The guests of honor were four of the living legends of music: Louie Bellson, Roy Haynes, Elvin Jones and Max Roach. The party was hosted by music lover Bill Cosby, and musical tributes were paid by Terri Lynne Carrington Peter Erskine, Steve Gadd and Marvin "Smitty" Smith. All proceeds went to fund new percussion scholarships at Berklee College of Music in the names of the honorees. It was a night Avedis — all three of them — would have loved.

Best of all, Craigie and Debbie saw the future. And it is good. Three generations of Zildjian's took the stage that night with the promise of many more generations of Zildjians yet to come.

"I looked up there and all I could see was Zildjian women," Craigie said. "It was great.

Look for Zildjian to remain on the cutting edge of the music world for at least the next 375 years, the sisters promise. You ain't seen — or heard — nothin' yet.

COHASSET SPORTS

Back to the varsity ranks

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

It will be a full varsity schedule for the Cohasset High hockey team this year.

Fifteen varsity games are on the schedule, unlike last year when the junior varsity team played just two varsity games.

Because of a lack of players last year, Cohasset was limited to a junior varsity schedule with two varsity games added as the season moved along.

This year's schedule is completely non-league. According to Coach Dennis Walsh, the team may move into the South Shore League next year.

The junior varsity team that will now be playing varsity hockey, had a winning season last year, and Walsh is looking for a nice start this year.

"It looks promising," he stated. "We had 21 kids turn out and they have all been skating well. They're a bunch of hard workers."

For the most part, this year's team will be made up mainly of sophomores and freshmen. There are at least seven freshmen on this year's team.

The team will be led by captains Andy Curry and Teddy Geoff, both seniors. Curry is a forward, while Geoff plays on defense.

Two juniors will also help make up the team. Ryan Hubley, a forward and Billy Good, a defenseman.

This season's goalie will be Chris Carone, a freshman, who played junior high hockey last year.

Other freshmen who will probably be seeing plenty of action this season include Tim Straungn, Will Prendergast, both defensemen, and Pete Whorisky, a forward.

A sophomore who is scheduled to see plenty of playing time is Ken Portanova, a forward.

"Ken has been looking really good," said Walsh. "He played a lot of hockey last year and we have high expectations of him."

Other sophomores who have been looking good are Jay Rasmussen, and Heath Heinze.

"There's no question the team is young," said Walsh, who will be starting his 30th year as a hockey coach at Cohasset. "The kids are working very hard and there's some pretty good players among the youngsters. I'm certain we will be well-represented once the season gets under way.

"We will have a pretty good idea of just what we have before Christmas. We have three games scheduled in that time period.

Gymnasts deliver combined effort

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The only thing the newly-formed Cohasset/Norwell girls gymnastics team will be lacking this winter is a nickname.

But ask any one of the eight girls, four from Cohasset and four from Norwell, and she'll tell you a squad nickname is hardly important to this group.

What truly matters is the athletes have joined together and will be on the bars, vault and beam this winter, competing against the likes of Randolph, Scituate, Hingham, Carver and Duxbury.

So far, the alliance between the girls from neighboring towns couldn't be better.

"We hit it off right away," said captain Tara Hettstrom, Cohasset's veteran gymnast. "We think of ourselves coming from two towns but one team. We want to have a fun time and just enjoy it. We're happy we have a team. We're looking at a third or fourth place finish."

The season will be markedly different than last year. Cohasset, which had built a semi-dynasty by winning the Pilgrim Conference four out of the last five years, always struggled with to maintain a solid roster. That didn't stop them from finishing as co-champion with Hanover last year

Norwell had to disband last win as a poor turnout was further hut when several upperclassmen left the team.

"We had enough girls," said co-captain Pattie LaCroix of Norwell, "but the older girls lost interest and that lowered our numbers down to four or five."

This winter looked better in Norwell when 13 girls expressed an interest in competing for the Clippers. Slowly, however, that number dwindled down the closer it came to the start of the season.

Only LaCroix, Beth Jackson, Julie Calahan and Allison Dufney remained on the Norwell team. For Cohasset, Hettstrom, Carlie Carter,

After last year's season, arguably the most disappointing since coach Ron Ford took over in 1992, the Cohasset Skippers' boys basketball team hopes to rebound with a vengeance.

In both senses of the word.

With a quick, talented team that can run the floor, Ford figures that the scoring and defense will take care of themselves, but that rebounding might be a weakness.

Led by senior captains Jamie DeMichele, in his third year on varsity, and Alex Russell, in his second, the Skippers have plenty of senior leadership.

DeMichele is a standout on the gridiron and the lacrosse field as well and his intense style of play and ability to find the bottom of the net have served Cohasset well.

Russell, another football player, missed most of last season with leg injuries but played through them during football and hopes to do so for basketball. His physical style of play and all-out hustle brings to the team some much needed hard-nosed play.

Cohasset's secret weapon this year will be senior forward Raheem Shepard. Shepard, who started at defensive back and saw some running back time this fall, hasn't played since his sophomore year, when he made a big splash in tournament play. Shepard's athleticism and knowledge of the game will be a major factor in the Skippers' success

Paul Hussey is another senior who will figure in the team's plans this year. After coming over from North Quincy last year, Hussey fit into the Cohasset brand of basketball right away. After nine solid months hitting the weights, Hussey, the poster boy for the new weight room at CHS, brings a new physique to this season.

Coming off the bench, Ivan Cosme rounds out the quintet of seniors. Cosme will see time at forward after returning to the team.

With a sugary outside shot and an arsenal of moves at his disposal, Cosme will be a key addition to the squad.

Lauren Genovese and Kristin Sheerin are competing.

LaCroix went to Norwell High athletic director Bill Gerety and explained the situation to him and she suggested talking to some local schools who may be experiencing the same problem. Hingham and Scituate had enough gymnasts, but Cohasset coach Ruthann Ardizzoni liked the idea and the teams combined.

"It's kind of like a little family," said Ardizzoni. "We want it to be a team. The parental support from both sides has been good and carpooling is not a big issue."

Skipper football players honored by WATD

By Mike Hardman
STAFF WRITER

When they played against each other, Duxbury's Mike George and Whitman-Hanson's Chris Colclough were anything but friends.

Over the years, the Green Dragons and the Panthers have been everything but friendly.

Today, though, the two work together in the business world and they were both guest speakers at the WATD football awards banquet on Sunday at the Plymouth Sheraton.

"I remember when I went to UMass, Steve Olson, who had played at Whitman-Hanson, looked me up," said Colclough. "I wanted to do the same thing. He (George) was from Duxbury and I was from Whitman-Hanson and I had killed him on the field.

"I went for a job interview and the person interviewing me noticed I had my UMass championship ring on. He said that he had a guy working there that played at UMass. He rang him up, and Mike asked if it was this big, bald guy. Three years later, we were sitting face to face every day."

George talked about the importance of getting his college degree. He suffered a back injury in his senior year at summer camp and wasn't able to play again.

"Go to college and get your degree," said George. "No one take that away from you."

All of the speeches, from the guest speakers, to the coaches and the players, will be aired during the Sports Exchange on WATD on Dec. 27.

WATD sports director Bill Wilhelm named the station's players of the year for the Old Colony, Atlantic Coastal, Patriot and South Shore Leagues.

Marshfield's Lou Silva was named as the coach of the year in the ACL, while Rockland's Ken Owen was honored in the Patriot League. Norwell's Jim Sullivan was picked as the top coach in the South Shore League, while Bridgewater-Raynham's Dan Buron and Taunton's Brian Clemmey shared the honors in the OCL.

Head coach Tony Rolfe presented player of the week awards to Justin Golden, JP Laugelle, Dan Trowers, Jamie DeMichele and Ryan Shephard.

The juniors include Kevin Andrews, Khalil Madyun, newcomer Matt O'Reilly, and Craig Parker. Andrews is a sweet-shooting off guard with good quickness, while Madyun is a tall, smooth center with good potential. Both have a smattering of varsity experience which should help.

O'Reilly comes from Duxbury and has showed some promise as a newcomer. Parker played on varsity last year and his speed and strength give him excellent flexibility at the center position. He and Madyun should compliment each other nicely in the paint.

The sophomore class has presented Ford with a talented trio of youngsters who will play big minutes for Cohasset this year. Daniel Trowers, also an outstanding running back, showed flashes of brilliance last year as a freshman and this year could be his break out year.

T.J. Bilodeau will spell Trowers at the point guard position, bringing his ball handling skills and marksmanship of the bench.

Eric Shea is another beneficiary of the weight room and his sudden growth spurt didn't hurt either. He will play the off guard position but don't be surprised to see him at small forward as well.

With this squad comprised of speedy and talented ball handlers, Ford expects to play "a lot of up tempo. The name of the game for us is to run.

"We're very quick and very aggressive defensively. We're very athletic, and we're going to have to try to take advantage of that."

"Offensively, we have three big guns: Daniel, Raheem, and Jamie should all play really well for us this year.

"But we only have two guys who have a lot of varsity experience: Jamie and Daniel. That's a lot to make up for. We have some good seniors this year and hopefully they can lead us."

Cohasset's season began last night with a game against the Harwich Roughriders.

"The first game was scheduled for Dec. 14 against Cape Cod Tech, followed by South Boston yesterday.

"The final game before Christmas will be against Avon-Holbrook Monday, Dec. 21, at Pilgrim Arena in Hingham. That game should start at 3:50 p.m."

As for the future, Walsh added, "It will be nice to get back into a league, but first we have to make sure we have the players to do that.

"Last year was not a nice year. Not having a varsity team left us with an empty feeling. We hope that's all behind us now, and we look forward to the future."

Soccer club awaits applications

The Cohasset Soccer Club is still awaiting applications for spring travel soccer. If you have not already returned your application, please do so as soon as possible so they can coordinate the teams and coaches. This is open to all individuals in public or private schools.

The U-12 and U-14 will be playing Saturdays and the U-16 and 18-and-Under will be playing Sundays.

If you do not have an application, call the Cohasset Recreation Dept. at 383-4109.

Gymnastics clinic set for Dec. 23

The Cohasset/Norwell High varsity gymnastics team will hold a clinic for girls ages 6- to 12-year-old of all levels and experience.

The clinic will be held on Dec. 23 from 3:15 p.m. to 4:45 p.m. in the upstairs gym at the high school.

The cost is $10 (make checks payable to Ruthann Ardizzoni) and all proceeds will go to the annual Cohasset/Norwell Awards Dinner banquet at the end of the season.

For more information call Ruthann at (781) 871-6586. You must be preregistered to participate and spots are limited so register early.

Registration forms are also available at the South Shore Community Center.

Christmas tree pickup to benefit drug & alcohol committee

Cohasset area teens will once again offer a Christmas tree removal service to benefit programs of the Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee. Volunteers will remove and dispose of trees Saturdays, Jan. 2, and Jan. 9. To order service, call 383-2552 (24 hours) and specify which day is preferred. Trees should be placed by the base of the driveway.

The fee for the service is $10 per tree, $5 for senior citizens. Please make checks payable to the Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee and place on the front door. Funds raised by this volunteer teen effort will support the publication and distribution of a parent/teen handbook currently under development. The handbook is an informative compilation of facts on specific drugs available in the community; laws on use and possession; statistics on local use; helpful advice on talking with children on substance abuse; and a list of resources for further information and support.

All teens are welcomed to join in this service project. To volunteer, or for more information, call Jami Butman 383-9435 or Wallace St. John 383-2627.

The Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee is a non-profit volunteer organization comprised of parents and teens, as well as representatives from the PSO, board of selectmen, school committee, school council, police and clergy. Programs focus on the education and prevention of substance abuse community-wide, as well as the support of "substance-free" teen activities. It also maintains a confidential hotline for substance abuse (383-4120).

Any interested adult or teen is welcome to join the committee. The next scheduled meeting is Wednesday, Jan. 13 at 7:30 p.m. at the town hall.

Dept. 56 collectors sought

We would like to start a group of people, that collect "Dept. 56" miniature buildings and figures, in the local South Shore area. If anyone is interested, please contact Ray or Nancy BerBerick at 925-2242.

Youth Resources clothing drive

Please help children of all ages stay warm this winter! Donations of new clothing, hats, scarves, sweaters, pants, mittens ...will be divided and given to homeless shelters. The Cohasset Youth Resources will hold drop off spots, one at the recreation department and the other at the Shoe Market (in the Stop & Shop Plaza), and if necessary, they will pick up. For more information, call the recreation department at 383-4109.

A step more for Cabaret '99

For the first time in Cabaret history (37 years), the morning ladies will have a stage to practice on. Thanks to the generosity of the Selectmen and the Town Administrator, the "morning" rehearsals will be held in the auditorium of the new Town Hall. In the past years it has been necessary to rent space, and it wasn't always convenient. Now "morning rehearsals" will be at either noon to three or one to four, depending on wishes of participants.

In the meantime, patron invitations have been mailed for the privilege of buying tables in advance. If you are interested in having your name in the program as a Patron of the Community Center, call Judy Volungis at (781) 749-9786 and you will receive an application to be a Patron.

People are also encouraged to solicit advertisements for the program. This is really the only way revenues can be increased without increasing the price of tickets. If you have a business or know anyone who does and would like to advertise, call Judy Volungis at (781) 749-9786.

The "Meet the Director Party" is just around the corner! Sunday, Jan. 3, at 1 p.m. at the Community Center, 70 South St.

Marcia Wey is welcomed as morning talent director.

Still looking for that name to end the 20 Century. Keep those cards coming!

Dwyer's Cleaning Spot supports mentoring

Dwyer's Cleaning Spot, a member of the Northeast Fabricare Association, announces its plans to help raise funds for mentoring during its "Share the Warmth" program through Jan. 31. During this period, Dwyer's Cleaning Spot will accept donations of recyclable men's, women's and children's clothing on behalf of the Big Brother/Big Sister Foundation. The foundation collects and sells used clothes and household items to raise money to support mentoring.

Customers who want to contribute to the program may leave their recyclable clothing and other items at Dwyer's Cleaning Spot. All donations are tax deductible.

The Big Brother/Big Sister Foundation was formed in August of 1996 to raise money to support the mentoring programs of the Big Brother and Big Sister Associations, which serve thousands of children, their parents and extended family members each year. The primary service of the two associations is to provide adult mentors for children between the ages of 7 and 19.

While all Big Brothers and Big Sisters serve as unpaid volunteers, it costs between $1,000 to $1,500 per year to support a mentoring relationship with the necessary social worker services, background checks, administrative support, etc. Both associations receive generous individual and corporate contributions, but these funds are not enough to address the needs of all the children who have requested mentors.

For information on participating dry cleaners, call Michelle Stephan at (800) 442-6848. For more information on the foundation, call (617) 773-2222.

LIBRARY CORNER

Tree trimmed with gift suggestions

The Christmas tree in the Children's Room of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is trimmed with cards suggesting good books to give to children. Among the recommended titles are all-time classics such as "Make Way for Ducklings," by Robert McCloskey, as well as some less familiar titles, for instance, "The Napping House," by Audrey Wood, "Martha Speaks," by Susan Meddaugh, and "Officer Buckle and Gloria," by Peggy Rathman.

This list of 52 recommended children's books was compiled by librarians at the New York Public Library. Brief descriptions of each book will help you choose just the right title for your child. So if you need suggestions about what to buy for the children on your holiday shopping list, stop by and "read" the library's unique Christmas tree.

Investment service at library

"Value Line Investment Survey Expanded Edition" is available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. This service reports on 1,800 additional stocks, beyond the 1,700 stocks covered in the basic Value Line Investment Survey, also available at the library. These two services publish each week, giving summaries, ratings and various "screens" on a group of stocks. These two services are paid for by the Mercie Vinal Nichols Fund, a library trust fund.

Other investment services at the library include :

• Morningstar Mutual Funds, a weekly service that evaluates and ranks more than 1,400 mutual funds.

• A good selection of books including "Handbook for No-Load Fund Investors," "Directory of Mutual Funds," "Mutual Funds for Dummies," and "Investment Guide to Low-Cost Mutual Funds," and "Wall Street City," "Your Guide to Investing on the Web."

• A selection of magazines (current issue may be borrowed for one day, back issues for a week) including: Kiplinger's Personal Finance Magazine, Money Magazine, Mutual Funds Magazine, Fortune and Worth.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

WHEN SCIATICA STRIKES
Annually, about 10% of the adult population experience the shooting nerve pain of sciatica. While the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research points out that such commonly used remedies as biofeedback, TENS, massage, acupuncture, and spinal injections are not helpful in treating the condition, it should be remembered that the well-being of the sciatic nerves is closely connected with the structure and function of the spine. When pressure is exerted on these nerves, which emerge from nerve roots located between vertebrae in the lower spine, pain and numbness can run their entire lengths, rendering some sciatica sufferers unable to walk. Chiropractic's goal is to relieve the pressure that causes the pain by restoring the lumbar joints to their proper alignment.
Do you suffer with sciatica? At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we are trained to restore the health of your spine and joints. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we work to restore your health and guide you in a personalized approach to overall wellness. Special chiropractic methods, called adjustments, can help reduce swelling and irritation, relieve pain and slow degeneration. Please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. Let us help you live life without pain. Have you heard about our "Mothers Morning Out" program? We recommend raising a healthy, drug free family. We provide all the latest scientific research combined with holistic and chiropractic philosophy.
P.S. Sciatica can produce numbness in the buttock, leg or foot on the affected side.

Reprieve for children's hearing impaired program

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The South Shore Educational Collaborative's Deaf and Hard of Hearing program students can finish out their school year in Hingham, thanks to an unanimous vote of approval by its board of directors last week.

The board is made up of eight school superintendents from the South Shore, including Hingham's Dr. Gary Baker and Dr. Edward Malvey of Cohasset, whose towns will foot the extra $5,000 anticipated to cover the students' tuition through June.

The Collaborative's program for deaf and hard of hearing students in grades pre-kindergarten through eighth has been in existence for 17 years but began to suffer when its program was split in two, with half of the students attending a South Weymouth facility and the rest attending the Cole Elementary School in Norwell. Since that time, the school has settled in several different locations, the last of which is at Industrial Park Road in Hingham.

The program there began in September with an expectation of 17 students attending but only 14 enrolled. Worse, two students will leave the program in the next month.

A fixed tuition rate that was voted on by last year's board of directors proved devastating to the program because it forced each town to come up with a higher yearly rate per attending student to make up the difference.

It now costs approximately $29,900 per student for a year's enrollment in the collaborative's Deaf and Hard of Hearing program.

Betsy Orlando, whose multi-needs daughter Jennifer attends the school, organized a protest after she and other parents received a call from a staff member two weeks ago advising them that the program might close as early as Jan. 29. Despite the current reprieve, she will continue her efforts to communicate the need for such a program to remain in the community.

Alternative programs that have been presented to the parents are not viewed favorably by them. They say that The Learning Center in Randolph and The Reeds Collaborative in Middleboro use methods of communication other than the ASL (American Sign Language) the children use at the collaborative. Parents argue that placing them in a setting like the one in Randolph, where signed English is used, or in Middleboro, where a combination of sign and oral communication is used, would set the children back educationally and psychologically.

B.J. Woode, Commissioner for the Massachusetts Commission for Deaf and Hard of Hearing, agrees.

In a phone interview this week, the commissioner expressed concern about the children being uprooted from their program to attend another school where different means of communication are used.

"The children are being taught to integrate ASL as their means of communication and it would be difficult for them to begin at a school where other children have been going through the same process, only in a different language," she said.

Different languages

Woode explained that signed English and ASL are different languages with different syntax and grammar.

After sitting in on a meeting with the board of directors last week, she toured the school and was welcomed by teachers with "Umbraco," Spanish for embrace, which is an accepted form of greeting in the deaf community.

Woode, hearing impaired herself, knelt to sign with the younger children, who were all smiles.

Too often, she explained to parents and instructors there, she meets up with such children years down the road after emotional problems have set in after years of poorly considered educational needs.

Woode is enthusiastic about the collaborative's program which provides adult modeling for the children through hearing-impaired instructors who use ASL as their means of communication. She also had words of praise for the board for their quickness to take the cap off the fixed tuition placed last year, which will now allow the students to continue through June.

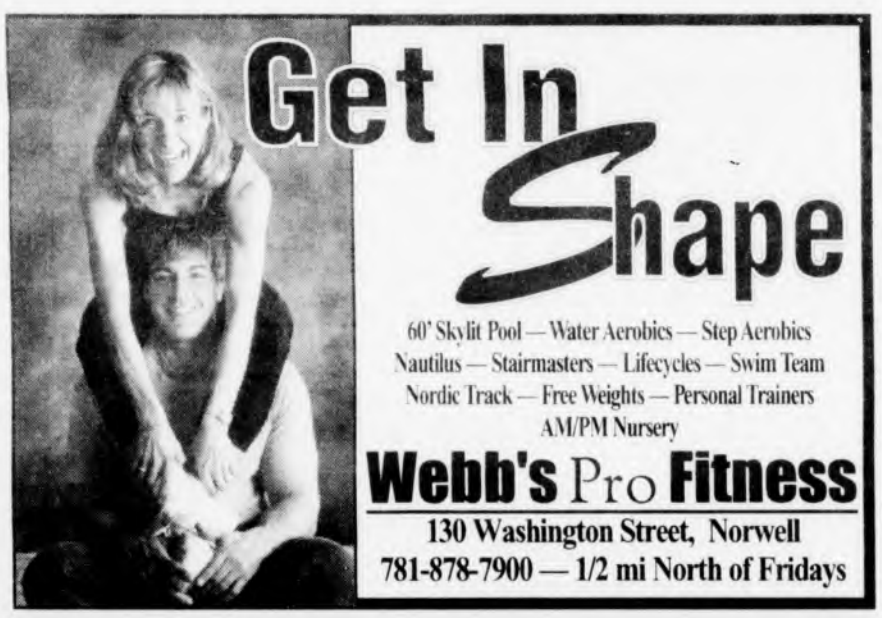
Adam Leach signs a reply during class work at the collaborative.

But the commissioner is equally vocal about the children's needs being met for their educational future when cost is sometimes taken more into consideration than the child's best interest.

For one child, cost seems to have been a determinate in the decision for her suggested future placement.

"We had an alternative program that our one Hingham child could attend in Randolph," Hingham Supt. Baker said. "Our director of Special Education looked into it and checked it out and felt it would be a very effective program that would also be more cost effective. The reason I abstained (from voting) is because I took seriously that other school districts in the collaborative did not necessarily have other educational alternatives open to them so I tried to take that into consideration."

Baker explained that only certain grade levels in the Randolph school uses signed English, but that ASL would be used in Orlando's class.



Dr. Wynne Janis, program director for the collaborative's Deaf and Hard of Hearing program, disagrees.

"So far as I know, the class Jennifer would enter at the Learning Center will not use ASL," she said. "Also, Jennifer is a multi-needs student who will find it even more difficult than other students to deal with that language change. My understanding is that the SPED director only saw Jennifer once in class and a handful of times outside. Either way, the main point is that children need time to internalize a language with its own grammar and structure before moving on, if they must, to another type of communication style. This all seems to come down to cost and the children's rights get squeezed out."

Woode explained that the Boston School for the Deaf closed about two or three years ago, which is when the Learning Center in Randolph assumed its program to provide a replacement for those students. She is

Collaborative program to continue through June

Teacher's aid Robin D'Agostino reads a story to students in the Deaf and Hard of Hearing program at the South Shore Collaborative in Hingham.

concerned that once more, financial concerns will continue to narrow choices for deaf and hard of hearing children such as the one in the collaborative's program.

"It's all about numbers," said Dr. Michael Savage, executive director of the South Shore Educational Collaborative. "We don't have enough students in attendance and therefore, we don't have the money to keep the program afloat."

At this time, there are only 12 students in the Deaf and Hard of Hearing program, whose education is covered under a provision in the state's Chapter 766 program.

"A number of the school districts have made referrals to the Learning Center in Randolph and they were willing to take kids," said Savage. "The Learning Center said that to do so, they would need more staff. We, too, need one more teacher, but I think we can use a student teacher we've had working here who just finished her master's work."

Savage pointed out that even with flexible tuition, the program would need another eight to 10 students to keep afloat.

Savage acknowledged last week that he had known that the school opened in September with a $10,000 deficit but explained, "That's how all these programs function and we just hope for more referrals to carry us along."

But referrals have not been forthcoming, first because of the school's many moves and also because the children go through public education SPED counselors who traditionally refer hearing-impaired children to public schools where they can be "mainstreamed."

Referrals

Some of the referrals to the collaborative's program comes only after years of a child enduring inappropriate placement.

"We got a referral last year from a school with a fifth-grader who had been 'mainstreamed' to his detriment," said Janis. "A lot of those mainstreamed kids grow up and only learn to sign after high school. Or some are seen as autistic."

Parents have argued that the alternative schools cannot meet their children's multiple needs that the collaborative already has in place through their other programs, which deal with issues ranging from learning disabilities to physical impairment to behavior management.

Based on Orlando's research, The Reeds Collaborative in Middleboro would cost $30,000, which is a bit more than the $29,900 it costs to send her daughter now. But Savage maintains that the program is $22,000 and $25,000 if the child's other needs are counted in.

Woode had asked at last week's board meeting if there was no one on the board with training in deaf or hard of hearing issues. "I don't believe I received an answer," she said.

Janis does not believe that there is anyone on the board with expertise in deaf or hard of hearing issues. "The board is made up of superintendents and I believe that their background is in administration," she said. "Even if they have some background in special education, that wouldn't focus primarily on issues of the deaf community."

To Somerville Rep. Patricia Jehlen, who has recently filed a bill "Concerning the Education of Children Who Are Deaf or Hard of Hearing" with the State House, the situation is "outrageous."

"It seems like there are a lot of legal rights issues here," she said. "The SPED directors have the right to say what they will, but the parents have the right to appeal. There are some poor programs around that children can end up in. For example, if the child has a poor interpreter, he will not receive an appropriate education. It was for this type of reason that the Braille Bill for the Blind was enforced because it used to be that people who couldn't read Braille themselves were teaching it to the blind."

"If the schools are willing to close this program, then what does this mean for the state's commitment to provide education to the deaf?" asked Janis. "What this means is that the towns want the collaborative to be there in case they need them, but they aren't willing to pay the money to make sure that the collaborative is there when they need them. Maybe it's just a lack of foresight."

THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET NO. 98P2857EP
ESTATE OF
DOROTHY F. BOOTH
LATE OF COHASSET
IN THE COUNTY OF NORFOLK
NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will of said decedent be proved and allowed and that SUSAN WEST of FALMOUTH in the County of BARNSTABLE be appointed executrix named in the will without surety on the bond.

If your desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney must file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before ten o'clock in the forenoon on January 20, 1999.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

WITNESS, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham this day, 02 December, 1998.

OBITUARIES

Domenic M. Baccari

Domenic M. Baccari, 75, of Cohasset, a retired nuclear engineer, died Dec. 9 at Massachusetts General Hospital after a brief illness.

Mr. Baccari worked for Bethlehem Steel for 19 years, then General Dynamics for 21 years, retiring in 1985. He was head of the nuclear propulsion design engineering team. He was involved with the building of the USS Longbeach and the USS Bainbridge.

He was born in San Donato, Italy, and had lived in Cohasset for 39 years.

He graduated from Quincy High School in 1941 and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1947.

Mr. Baccari was a member of the Long Service Club, the Cohasset Harbor Study Committee and the Cohasset Sailing Club.

He served in the Army Air Corps during World War II as lead navigator in the Eighth Air Force, 91st Bomb Group. He flew on 30 missions in a B-17 from Dover, England.

He was the husband of the late Yolanda (Cincotta) Baccari.

Mr. Baccari leaves to sons, Paul L. Baccari of Hingham and Gregory J. Baccari of Wilmington, N.C.; a daughter, Jean M. Evans of Scituate; a brother, Edward Baccari of Quincy; two sisters, Rita Cuneo of Braintree and Elba DelGrosso of Scituate; and four grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Dec. 14 at St. Anthony's Church. Burial was in Mount Wollaston Cemetery in Quincy.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., handled the arrangements.

Donations may be made to Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St., Hingham 02043.

Carroll brings wealth of experience to new roll at the rec

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

It was an especially busy summer for Cohasset's Ted Carroll, who was hired as the Hingham Recreation Department's new assistant director.

Director Jill Drohan, recreation director, is thrilled to have Ted on board.

"He has a total knowledge of the organization," she said of Carroll, who has served as director of the summer playground camp in Hingham for the past several years.

Drohan and Carroll balance each other well — Drohan likes structure and Carroll flexibility.

"At the same time, he's very organized," Drohan said.

Carroll has a wide range of experience in working with children, dating back to 1983.

Growing up in Cohasset, he started working with the recreation department's youth soccer, basketball and street hockey programs when he was in high school. For ten years, he also worked in the Cohasset recreation department's summer camps, serving as counselor and eventually director. Carroll held a seat on that town's recreation commission for four years.

"We're not really losing him. We still look forward to working with Ted — after all, he lives in town."

— Cohasset Recreation Director Jack Worley.

Not long ago, he filled in for Cohasset's recreation department director Jack Worley, from whom Carroll said he will continue to seek ideas.

"I've worn many hats," he said. "My years with the Cohasset recreation department helped me be prepared for my new job in Hingham."

Carroll knew early on when he was a camper in Cohasset that he would like to stay with the recreation department in one way or another.

"When I was 10 or 12, I knew I wanted to eventually be a counselor," said Carroll.

According to Drohan, her new assistant has a gift for remembering names and faces.

"He knows every single youngster enrolled in our activities," she said. "He also relates well to the staff and recreation commissioners."

STAFF PHOTO/ALAN CHAPMAN
Ted Carroll of Cohasset likes his job as assistant recreation director in Hingham.

Perhaps Carroll is so at ease around young people because he grew up in a family of five children.

The new position is self-supporting — the recreation department is required to return $30,000 to the town at the end of the year, and the assistant position falls under that amount.

Half of that has already been "raised" from camp tuition income.

"The nature of the job has changed to one of a community fund-raising nature," Drohan said, "and the recreation programs don't pose a burden on the towns."

According to Drohan, the Town of Hingham has one of the lowest recreation budgets in the state.

William Ramsey, a member of the recreation commission, thinks Carroll will be a "tremendous" asset.

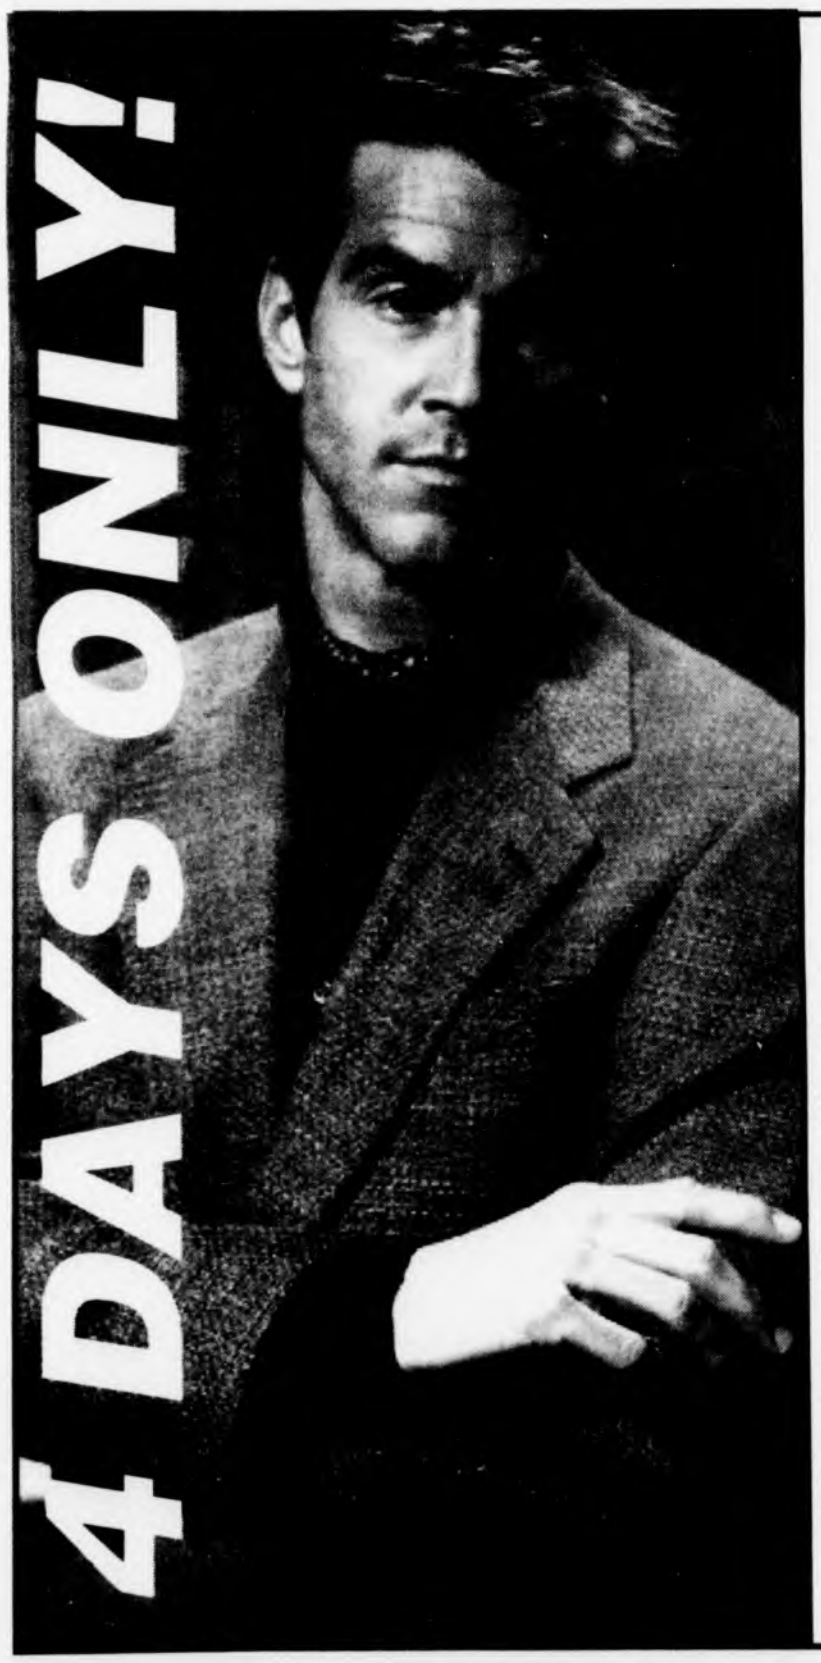
"His presence will only strengthen the program, especially with his background in both Hingham and Cohasset," he said.

Worley recalls "plugging" Carroll into the town's Saturday sports programs years ago.

"You'd have to be three places at once," he said, "and Ted learned the ropes."

Carroll's broad spectrum of experience with Cohasset will serve him well in his new position in Hingham.

"We're not really losing him," Worley said. "We still look forward to working with Ted — after all, he lives in town — when time permits."



In order to accept his new position with the Hingham recreation department, Carroll also had to resign from his job at South Shore Sports Center in Hingham, where he worked since 1985, holding a number of positions.

"Resigning from the sports center is one of the toughest things I've had to do," he said.

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Christmas tree disposal

Christmas trees may be brought to the DPW parking area, 91 Cedar St., from Dec. 26 through Jan. 6. Please remove all wires and decorations.

The RTF will be closed on Dec. 25 and Jan. 1 in observance of Christmas and New Years Day. For more information, call 383-0273.

Citizens sought for growth committee

At the request of selectmen, Town Manager Mark Haddad asked the planning board and conservation commission to each designate a member to serve on the new Growth and Development Task Force which will come up with a new master plan for the town.

Also serving will be two selectmen and three citizens at large. Interested citizens should call Haddad at 383-4105.

Winter guidelines for Cohasset residents

The D.P.W. has issued the following winter guidelines:

1. Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15.

2. Do not plow or shovel snow, water or any other debris from private property onto roadways or sidewalks.

3. Uncover storm drains when possible.

4. Sand for resident use only will be available behind the former highway garage at 55R South Main St.

5. The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mail boxes within the town layout.

Town meeting warrant deadlines

Selectmen voted to open the warrant for the March 27 annual town meeting. The warrant will close on Jan. 14. The deadline for citizen petition articles is Jan. 11.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Jan. 5.

Christmas tree pickup

Cohasset area teens will once again offer a Christmas tree removal service to benefit programs of the Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee. Volunteers will remove and dispose of trees Saturdays, Jan. 2, and Jan. 9. To order service, call 383-2552 (24 hours) and specify which day is preferred. Trees should be placed by the base of the driveway.

The fee for the service is $10 per tree, $5 for senior citizens. Please make checks payable to the Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee and place on the front door. Funds raised by this volunteer teen effort will support the publication and distribution of a parent/teen handbook currently under development. The handbook is an informative compilation of facts on specific drugs available in the community; laws on use and possession; statistics on local use; helpful advice on talking with children on substance abuse; and a list of resources for further information and support.

All teens are welcomed to join in this service project. To volunteer, or for more information, call Jami Butman 383-9435 or Wallace St. John 383-2627.

The Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee is a non-profit volunteer organization comprised of parents and teens, as well as representatives from the PSO, board of selectmen, school committee, school council, police and clergy. Programs focus on the education and prevention of substance abuse community-wide, as well as the support of "substance-free" teen activities. It also maintains a confidential hotline for substance abuse (383-4120).

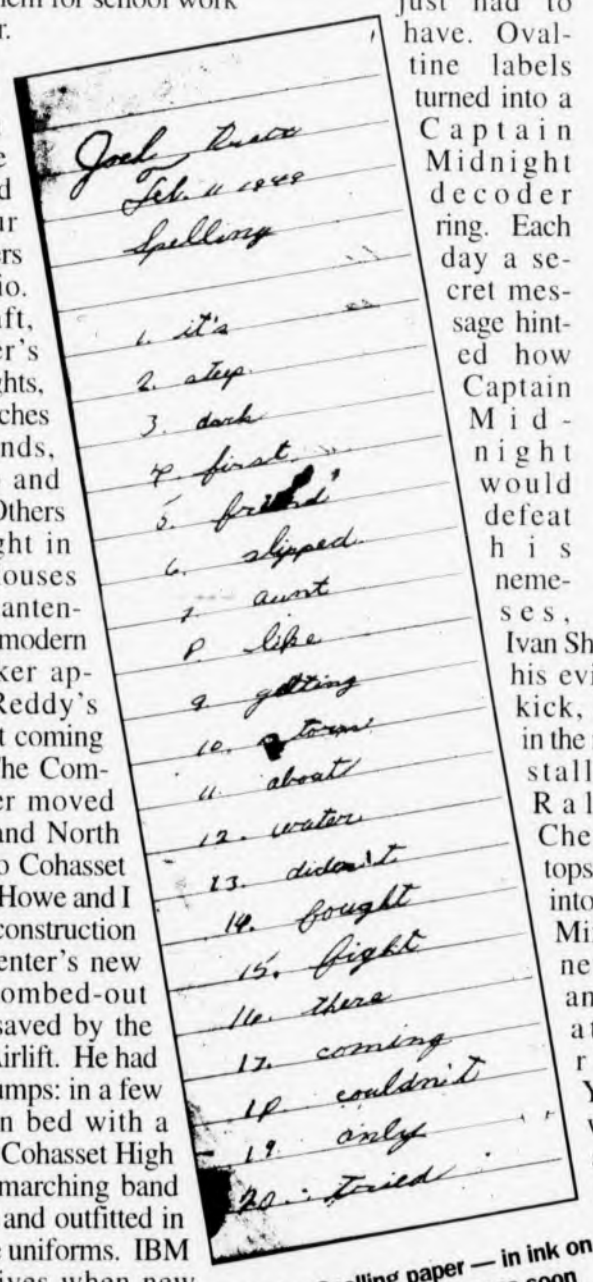
Cohasset Christmas, 50 years ago

1948, a year of changes

By Joel Pratt
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Our Cub Scout Den: Ben Manton, Allen Trueblood, Russell Pratt and Joel Pratt (In Back)

Were you in grade school before 1950? Then you remember inkwells and scratchy pens. Little kids used pencils. By fourth grade, we were trusted with ink. In September, wooden pen holders, steel pen nibs and blotters were given out. A boy (it was always a boy) was chosen to fill the inkwell in each desk. Our teacher, Miss Mary Curley, told us sternly that pen points had to last all year: there would be no replacements. As I listened to her, I tried to see if the point would penetrate the desktop. It didn't.



Ink was special. Only Friday spelling tests and final copies of compositions were done in ink on white lined paper. Boys' papers were always messy. Blobs of ink would appear mysteriously: the blotter made them into smears. Girls' had beautiful handwriting and never made smears — or so we boys thought.

In 1948, I finished fourth grade and started fifth. Popular Science, my favorite magazine, said ball point pens would make inkwells and pens disappear! When my breakfast cereal box promised a ball point pen, I ate extra KIX or PEP (I can't remember which) to get enough box tops. Soon the pen arrived. It was small and skipped frequently. But it didn't make blobs! I put it in my shirt pocket to take to school — and arrived with a big purple stain on my shirt. Ball points got better but we were not allowed to use them for school work until years later.

This was one of many changes in 1948. Some we learned about in our Weekly Readers or on the radio. Jet aircraft, Chuck Yeager's supersonic flights, V2 rocket launches in White Sands, New Mexico and helicopters. Others happened right in Cohasset. Houses sprouted TV antennas. The ultra modern '48 Studebaker appeared at Reddy's Garage (Was it coming or going?). The Community Center moved from Sohier and North Main Streets to Cohasset center. Walter Howe and I pretended the construction site for the Center's new wing was bombed-out Berlin being saved by the heroic Berlin Airlift. He had just had the mumps: in a few days, I was in bed with a swollen neck. Cohasset High School's first marching band was organized and outfitted in blue-and-white uniforms. IBM entered our lives when new clocks appeared in our Ripley Road School classrooms. A master clock in Mrs. Hudson's office rang the bells and controlled the classroom clocks, which clicked each time the minute hand advanced. And Mom became our Cub Scout Den Mother, so weekly den meetings moved to our house.

I was a radio addict. Tom Mix!. Jack Armstrong! Captain Midnight! The Lone Ranger! Each offered things a boy just had to have. Ovaltine labels turned into a Captain Midnight decoder ring. Each day a secret message hinted how Captain Midnight would defeat his nemeses, Ivan Shark and his evil sidekick, Gardo in the next installment. Ralston Chex box tops turned into a Tom Mix magnet ring and an atomic ring. You were supposed to see atomic flashes by peering into the little bomb on top: I never saw anything. A Lone Ranger arrowhead came from Quaker Puffed Wheat (Shot from guns!). It was the first thing I ever owned made of plastic. It had a compass so you wouldn't get lost and a magnifying glass to start a fire if you did. Best of all, it glowed in the dark! The glow didn't last long but light recharged it. Figuring more light was better, I put it on the wire frame of my lampshade. When I went up to bed, there was a terrible smell. The arrow had melted and drizzled onto the light bulb, making an awful mess!

Popular Science, my favorite magazine, said ball point pens would make inkwells and pens disappear! When my breakfast cereal box promised a ball point pen, I ate extra KIX or PEP (I can't remember which) to get enough box tops.

A Friday Spelling paper — in ink on white paper. Ball point pens soon made ink blobs a thing of the past.

Finally, I tried to stay awake until midnight, but drifted off to sleep before 1949 arrived.

After years of saying no to pets, Mom and Pop relented. Our neighbor's son, Jack Bates, was courting Ann Hallowell whose cat had had kittens. So Jonathan Bates Hallowell Pratt, a gray tom with white mittens, came to live with us. One night Johnny left a present in one of Pop's bedroom slippers: only our teary pleas saved him from banishment. In the early hours of Christmas day, a crashing noise woke me up. We all rushed downstairs to find the Christmas tree sprawled on the floor surrounded by broken ornaments. A terrified Johnny was clinging to the wreckage. He had climbed to the top of the tree and toppled it!

When morning came, I thought I could see the chemistry set I had asked for under the resurrected tree. It turned out to be an AC Gilbert Microscope set instead. Mother feared that chemistry sets were too dangerous. A whole new universe opened up under the microscope! You could actually see dust mites and the hair on a flea's leg and all sorts of neat things.

An RCA radio phonograph was also under the tree. Records had been around for fifty years – but not in our house. Among the presents were three albums: 'Oklahoma!', 'Showboat' and 'Oscar Levant plays Chopin'. We played the shows endlessly - Chopin stayed in the box. The set played only 78 RPM records – it was years later that 33 RPM 'Long Play' came along. Oklahoma! filled four 10 inch disks. Between sides, the music would stop and the automatic stacker would clunk down the next disk. When four sides had played, you had to flip the stack. But we thought it was wonderful.

As we now had two radios, I asked to have the old one for my room. Pop said OK, and I carried it upstairs, plugged it in and turned it on. As I went down the stairs, wonderful, deep resonant Christmas music filled my head. The new radio and the old were both set to the same station. Unwittingly, I had discovered stereo sound! It sounded so good that I sat on the steps to listen.

Our neighbors, the Eatons, gave themselves a Television. On the last day of 1948, they invited us over to see it. As it was daytime, all we saw was a test pattern. Knowing that Mom and Pop were going out for New Years Eve, they asked if I wanted to stay at their house. The Eatons went out too, leaving me in front of the TV with David Matheson, their Irish man-of-all work. The screen was no bigger than two postcards, but it was wonderful. We watched and listened to Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians "From the Roosevelt Hotel Ballroom in New York City." I tried valiantly to stay awake until midnight, but drifted off to sleep before 1949 arrived.

Today, Joel Pratt lives in Roque Bluffs, Maine with his wife Hope.

Rec. weekend use of schools is topic

Hiring custodian and site manager on the table

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Although the school committee unanimously agreed to cover weekend basketball games at school facilities with a custodian and a site manager for each facility, some details still need to be ironed out with the recreation department.

It's also not clear how much the school department and recreation department will each pay to provide the service.

Basketball players started their 10-week program two weekends ago and concerns about the opening and closing of the facilities, safety issues there and who would foot the bill, have been a concern.

Recreation department director Jack Worley went before the school committee last week to discuss hiring a full-time custodian and/or site manager so that the school facilities could be available and safe for weekend activities.

It was estimated that it would cost $300 per day to have a custodian open and close the facilities and work there throughout the day so that he could be on hand should an emergency arise.

A separate fee of $200 to also hire a site manager didn't make sense to school committee vice chairman Kathy Ofsthun, who suggested that the site manager could rotate between the schools where games were ongoing. "It doesn't seem necessary to pay someone $200 to watch the kids play," she said.

School committee member Mark DeGiacomo suggested that a beeper be used for one custodian who, like the site manager, could divide his time between the schools for the day.

School committee member Joe McElroy agreed.

"Maybe custodial work could be done during that time," he said. "I don't feel comfortable with someone watching a game for 12 hours."

The Deer Hill School has gates in place to prevent children from straying off to unsupervised areas of the building, which raised the question of whether a full-time janitor was even needed in attendance for the entire day.

Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan recounted a recent incident involving a burst water pipe that was handled by a custodian, as a type of situation where it pays to have someone who knows the ins and outs of the building on hand.

School committee member Mark DeGiacomo suggested that a beeper be used for one custodian who, like the site manager, could divide his time between the schools for the day.

Site supervisors at this time receive $15 an hour, middle-high school principal Curtis Collins explained. Teachers usually take on the task, which works well because of the familiarity between students and instructors.

School committee chairman Rick Shea suggested that the cost be covered at least partly through recreation department fees, such as a $10 to $12 user charge.

DeGiacomo recommended that the school and recreation department split the cost, with one paying for the janitor and the other for the site manager.

The schools will continue to cover custodial costs for recreation department weekend activities at the schools until a decision is reached, school superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said.

"It's a tough call because they're already mid-stream," he said. "We'll have to come to some decision on what we'll be able to absorb. We need to know what our financial picture will be at the end of this fiscal year."

Schools to prepare for future MCAS exams

Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

A 12-paragraphs-long "friendly letter" is just one of the new tricks Cohasset students might want to learn if they plan to score higher on MCAS's essay-type questions.

On the whole, Cohasset students scored well. Cohasset was one of the top 30 districts of the state and 23 percent of Cohasset eighth-graders placed advanced in math.

A weak link in essay writing offered the greatest need for remediation, according to Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan, middle/high school Principal Curtis Collins and curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey.

The three presented an overview of MCAS results and future educational strategies to the school committee last week.

The MCAS tests — which are meant to insure that the Education Reform Act of 1993 and its standardization of public school curriculum is falling into place — covers math, science and technology and English language arts. Students in grades four, eight and ten took their first MCAS last May.

Students and instructors geared up for the exam partially in the dark, since no one yet knew what MCAS scorers would specifically look for while grading.

Newly armed with the scoring system released at a conference two weeks ago, Fennessey will provide that information to school officials to incorporate reviewers' expectations into the curriculum.

Callahan explained that Deer Hill School fourth-graders will learn to expand on their writing style.

An ideal "friendly letter" on the MCAS, it turned out, was a multi-paragraph demonstration of an ability to use complex and compound sentences and more.

"We didn't have the scoring system before the test was given," Fennessey said. "We stressed form in 'friendly letter' but they were looking for a multi-paragraph letter with details and possibly metaphors and similes."

Teachers will be given scoring guides and trained in the use of it come spring.

Open-response questions turned out to be a problem, with students scoring well on multiple-choice but not faring as well when the questions required an essay-form answer.

"If a weakness was found in science, it was in the design and writing up," Callahan said. "It seems to carry over into all their subjects," he added, referring to the students' difficulty with open-ended questions.

Students averaged 74% correct on science multiple choice questions but only 50% in open response questions.

"It was the same in math," Callahan said.

Students were allotted 45 minutes during the 13-day-long examination period, but Deer Hill students were allowed to take longer. Some took up to 1-1/2 hours.

School superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said that he had heard about testing fatigue from other school superintendents.

School committee Chairman Rick Shea wondered if test fatigue was indicated in the scores.

Probably not, according to Vice Chairman Kathy Ofsthun, who pointed out that students actually scored higher in the science section, which came last.

"Science was the best," Callahan agreed.

Asked by Shea about the reported 60-second average for grading each essay, Callahan admitted that was a possibility.

"They were looking for the general idea, but the longer their ideas and the more of them, the better," he said. "Our kids were straight and to the point, which was not what they were looking for."

"They were looking for supportive paragraphs and a conclusion," Fennessey said.

School committee member Patricia Martin asked if the younger grades would receive training on this.

"Yes," Fennessey said. "Ted (Dr. Malvey)has allowed us to hire a trainer."

Eighth- and tenth-graders scored well on the language arts section.

"We're pleased with the results," said Collins, the middle/high school principal. "Clearly, English scores were noteworthy in general. We enjoy looking at those. I like to think that's a direct result of all the input in that department."

Concerns for high school students were narrowed down to trigonometry questions on the tenth-grade exam.

Normally, tenth-grade mathematics instructors might choose to skip over the brief trigonometry section of the students' text, since that subject is covered in 11th grade.

Changes in science curriculum will include three new courses: physical science, investigating energy and biology.

"We'll make sure that by tenth grade, students will have had these three courses," Callahan said. "We'll need to get science realigned and the right topics taught."

Collins explained that students doing well in school essentially did well on the MCAS.

"If my student was in the ninth-grade and didn't do too well, I wouldn't panic," he said. "But I'm concerned with the fourth- and eight-grade students for this May. That's an alarm. We're already thinking about programs but we don't want to take kids out of classes for instruction because they'll be losing time in other classes."

Malvey thanked the administration for hard work dealing with the MCAS and the follow-up on the MCAS.

"I can't say enough that this really is a test of a test," he said. "We need to look at our curriculum and see how well we're matched up with the test. I think there will be a statewide debate on the test itself."

Early admission to top colleges

CHS seniors Benjamin Littauer, R. Steven Sceery and Justin Golden have been accepted for early admission to Harvard. Two other students were accepted, as well, but have opted to defer for now.

Edward F. Goff III and James O'Sullivan received early admission to Boston College and Megan Connolly's first choice of Catholic University has granted her early admission.

"Isn't that terrific?" said Maureen Sullivan of the guidance office. "That's out of a class of only 80. I always wonder why parents would send their kids to a private school. The students really do well here."

AROUND TOWN

CLOTHING DRIVE

It's the time of year to spread cheer, and there is a group of students at Cohasset High School that is leading the charge! They call themselves the Social Awareness Organization of Cohasset High School, and they led the clothing drive for the homeless people (they had a box outside of the door leading into the main office). That went on until Dec. 16, then all of the donations were brought to the Pine Street Inn.

This same group also held a Toys For Tots Collection; once again all toys were brought and dropped at the main entrances of the high school.

Talk about making things happen! To ensure that people will be warm and that youngsters will receive a toy at Christmas is what it is all about! We are very proud of all of you!

GRIDIRON CLUB BREAKFAST

Speaking of pride, and a wonderful group of young men, I had the pleasure of attending the Gridiron Club Breakup Brunch last week (Clark was in Vegas at an Athletic Directors Convention and was unable to attend). To watch those gentlemen in action, both the young and the old, is a real treat — they are a dedicated crew, and they like their team, their school and each other! They were proud of their record, their coaches, their camaraderie and their parents — everything! And the fact that Bob Meers gave them one of the most inspirational talks I have ever heard was the "icing on the cake." We congratulate Coach Tony Rolfe, his assistant coaches and his team!

HATS OFF TO MARY ANN HIGGINS

The US Dept. of Health and Human Services knows a good thing! The HHS Administration for Children and Families (ACF) recently announced that Cohasset's own Mary Ann Higgins will serve as the new Northeast Regional Hub Director, working in a new collaborative relationship among the ACF regional offices in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Mary Ann has more than 20 years experience in the social service and public administration areas. She is a native of Cohasset and is a graduate of UMass Amherst and Boston College Law School.

SMOKEFREE POSTER WINNER

Did you know that the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program's 1 Smokefree Calendar featuring "Growing Up Without Tobacco" poster contest winners is now available, and that a Cohasset student's poster is one of the winning ones featured? Her name is Kelsey Bell, and she is an artist extraordinaire! If you would like a free 1999 Smokefree Calendar, call the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program at (781) 829-4301.

OFF TO SPAIN!

Alissa Sexton has been accepted for a semester of study at the Universidad de Barcelona in Spain, with Brethren Colleges Abroad. She is the daughter of Peter and Anne Sexton. Alissa is a student at Trinity College, where only students maintaining high academic standards are eligible for BCA. Imagine all that she will learn — hope we hear about it!

KUNTZ NAME IN LIGHTS

John Kuntz, son of Dennis and Midge Kuntz, has done it again! He is a STAR! Or, as Terry Byrne of the Boston Herald stated, "John Kuntz is Boston's resident shape-shifter." In the last four months he has played more than 50 characters in six plays. John , who graduated from Emerson College, is emerging as the local master of his own one-man shows — his specialty is gathering a quirky group of characters that range from pompous author to an aspiring starlet, his talent lies in his ability to find humanity in his characters. He writes his own shows! Most recently, John starred in the SpeakEasy Stage Company's production of "The Santaland Diaries," essayist David Sedaris' hilarious account of his on-the-job adventures of an elf at Macy's (Dennis and Midge took the CVS staff to see John perform in this, and they all thought it was wonderful!). Next, John will star in "Sing Me to Sleep," which will be produced by Coyote Theatre at the Boston Center for the Arts Jan. 8 to 31, and co-stars award-winner Paula Pum. "Sleep" traces the way family members remember an incident that had a profound effect on them. Then John has a part in the Lyric Stage's upcoming production of "The Baltimore Waltz." Isn't it all

When in doubt, let's have steak

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

This is the time of year when we are all looking for that very special recipe — something that we don't serve every day, something that is as beautiful to look at as it is to eat. Usually when I want a recipe that is both unique and tasty, elegant to look at but easy to prepare, I call on my friend Jean. She entertains frequently, and adores trying the latest and the best — we both agree that "when in doubt let's have steak," perfect for every occasion! Jean wasn't positive where she found this recipe, but we have both tried it, its quick, easy and delicious! Hope you'll give it a try over the holidays!

For a vegetable dish you might just serve green beans with baby carrots — I cook each separately the day before; then, right before you are ready to serve, sizzle 2 tbsp butter and oil in pan, add vegetables, stir until heated through.

Pretty to look at, soo good!

FILET MIGNON WITH GREEN PEPPERCORN CREAM SAUCE

1-3/4 cups canned beef broth
3 Tbsp. butter
4-6 to 8 oz filet mignon steaks, each about 1 inch thick
1/4 cup chopped shallots
1 cup whipping cream
3 Tbsp. cognac or brandy
2 Tbsp. drained green peppercorns in brine

Boil stock in a small saucepan until reduced to 3/4 of a cup about 7 minutes. Meanwhile, melt butter in a large skillet over medium high heat. Season steaks with salt and pepper; place in fry pan over medium high heat to desired doneness, about 4 minutes per side for medium-rare. Transfer steaks to warm platter (do not clean skillet), add chopped shallots to same skillet and sauté til tender. Remove from heat; add reduced beef stock, one cup whipping cream, 3 tablespoons brandy and the green peppercorns. Boil until mixture thickens to sauce consistency, about 5 minutes. Season to taste with pepper. Spoon sauce over steaks and serve. 4 servings

Serve this with mashed potatoes (I usually add a small package of cream cheese and some sour cream into the mashed potatoes instead of milk) and sprinkle a little nutmeg over the potatoes.

Christmas Eve at First Parish

First Parish in Cohasset is busily preparing for several joyous celebrations of the Christmas season.

On Thursday, Dec. 24, there will be two special Christmas services. At 5 p.m. a traditional Christmas pageant will be presented in the Meeting House by the children of the religious education program. This is a yearly tradition that is sure to stir up some holiday sentiment and bring a smile to all who attend.

At 8 p.m. the traditional Christmas Eve candlelight service will be held in the Meeting House, ministered by both The Rev. Tarbox and The Rev. Leitch.

Season of impeachment

Heap on more wood! - the wind is chill;
But let it whistle as it will,
We'll keep our Christmas merry still.
— Sir Walter Scott

Those who are old enough to remember the original "Candid Camera" TV program of the early 1960s may recall a segment during which about half a dozen or so people on the streets of New York City were stopped at random and asked who Lyndon Johnson was.

Those questioned scratched their heads but couldn't recall where they'd heard the name. While his name sounded familiar, they simply couldn't place Johnson — a once powerful US senator — as vice president of the United States.

The segment was funny at the time. After all, those in the TV audience didn't have the benefit of nearly 40 years of hindsight. The program aired more than a decade before Watergate and just a few years before Vietnam and the assassination of President Kennedy, focused our nation on its government.

Although America is clearly a different country than it was then — in more recent years, we've been concerned that especially our younger citizens have become apathetic about government.

We've seen too many town meetings that don't include any young people and too many "twenty-somethings" who give voting a pass at town and state elections.

So if there is any good at all to come out of the Clinton debacle — it may be that this Christmas, most families can't avoid sharing a discussion about their government and the meaning of big words and phrases such as impeachment, perjury and obstruction of justice.

Walking through the Hanover Mall parking lot on Saturday, we overheard a youngster — who couldn't have been any older than six or seven — say to his Mom, "Is it impeachment or nothing?"

The child's question gave us pause and made us realize that there is no escape from the goings-on in Washington even in the midst of Christmas shopping for toys at the mall.

We can only hope that perhaps these "big words" will lead to further family discussion on values we can all share such as truth and honor, right and wrong, and what constitutes common sense and common decency, and the importance of character.

If so, then there could be a positive outcome from these historic happenings in Washington this Christmas season after all.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A remedy for the soul!

TO THE EDITOR:

In a world so often characterized by frustration and negativity, one sometimes needs to seek refuge in order to maintain their mental stability. Recently, I did seek this refuge when I attended Cohasset High School's performance of the "Music Man." It was truly a remedy for the soul!

The direction, singing, music, dancing, costumes and stage design all made for a very delightful evening. I smiled, laughed and cried, while experiencing a roller coaster of emotional power, combined with an incredible array of talent.

The cast produced a five-star show while proudly displaying their commitment to both community and school. You are a remarkable group, capable of energizing your audience, but most importantly, you brought to light all the good so frequently ignored in our adolescent population.

BRAVO!

DAR is grateful for support

TO THE EDITOR:

The Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR), Colonel Lothrop, Old Colony Chapter, held their annual Christmas Gift Wrapping Party at the Lightkeepers overlooking Cohasset Harbor.

They wrapped hundreds of items for the shut-in veterans at the Brockton Veterans Hospital. The veterans are too often the forgotten soldiers who defended our lives and liberty with their lives and are now more or less stored away.

The DAR Chapter wants to publicly thank merchants Stop and Shop, Fleet Bank and Shaw's Markets who so generously donated gifts to the more than worthy veterans at this time of Christmas when it is more blessed to give. Betty Cole of Hingham is our chapter ring leader for rounding up the merchants. The other members also contributed gifts of all sorts.

The DAR members are a group of gals from Weymouth, Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell and Duxbury. Many of our meetings are combined with the Scituate Chapter.

Our Chapter recently received an award from the National Association as one of the fastest growing Chapters in the country. We consist of a 43 membership who are all descendants of the men and women who were active in the American Revolution. The Chapter also has 31 women working on their family heritage to be acknowledged.

Recent new members are Nancy Snowdale, Tana Kasperowicz, Doris Flint and Anne Sechen. Some of the other gals working on their family tree who are potential members are Martha Gjesteby, Jeanne Astino, Kate Calasanti and Meredith Drummund. The fun thing that sometimes happens is that some members have discovered in their search for their relatives involved in the American Revolution that they too are related to some of our DAR members.

If you think you would like to join, Barbara Dillon, Anne Pompeo and Mary Jane McArthur are very helpful in guiding one in how to start their heritage search.

One of our most important meetings will be April 11 (mark your calendars). Beckie Bates McArthur is the Chair for the DAR High School Essay Contest for Scholarship Awards. Beckie read three of the outstanding essays at the Christmas Party.

We DARs wish everyone a Blessed Christmas, especially veterans.

Again, thanks to the local merchants for their kindness.

God Bless,

Nancy O'Toole,
Regent of the Chapter

Jerusalem Road Estates subdivision moves along

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

A Weymouth developer's proposed 23-home subdivision off Jerusalem Road came before the town's planning board again last week.

Town consulting engineer John Modzelewski of Civil Designs, Inc., discussed "pick-ups," or details that will need working through prior to beginning the actual work at the 43-acre site.

Steven Corey and his attorney Charles Humphreys were on hand for the discussion, which has been an ongoing one, spanning three years and approximately 20 applications by Corey to the board.

A memo from Civil Designs listed updates on Corey's attempts to meet the planning board's set of conditions for approval of his subdivision.

One of these included the building of a two-foot stone wall off the east sideline of Lincoln Lane to help reduce the slope from the Gregory property, which was a planning board requirement but not a Title V requirement. The wall is an answer to concerns about the breakout potential of sewage onto ledge in the area.

An original plan to pave the emergency access road on the site with cobbles or similar material where water flows to Black Rock Road was changed at the meeting last week to grass. The water flow will be collected and taken under the emergency road by means of a culvert and then conducted to a wetland collector.

"Aesthetically, we're trying to keep it as minimalistic as possible," said planning board Chairman Al Moore. "Also, if there is a way out that's seen as a shortcut, people will find a way to go through there. It needs a gate with a lock."

Modzelewski thought that the fire chief might be happier with cobblestone, but Humphreys pointed out that frozen ground could be easily plowed.

"Grass it is," Moore said.

Modzelewski also recommended that the proposed walk along Jerusalem Road be fine tuned. Specifically, the curbing would need to be reworked to keep cars from hitting pedestrians. He also recommends that the intersection of Jerusalem Road and Lincoln Lane be constructed with sloped granite edging, as well as the two cul de sac islands proposed at the site.

"We were mostly discussing pick-ups," Modzelewski. said this week. "There are still some outstanding issues but I believe they will all be resolvable. It just has to be satisfactory to me before I put my approval on paper and recommend it to the planning board for their signature. I'm just making sure that the planning board's conditions are reflected there."

A neighbor has appealed Corey's proposed subdivision and Corey must still get approval from the sewer commission and conservation commission.

The proposed site's history before the planning board has been a contentious one, with neighbors showing up for meetings to express their concerns about proposed land changes exacerbating the area's existing water problems. A possible increase in storm-caused flooding was the main argument heard from residents.

The sewer commission has said in the past that it won't allow the development to connect to the new sewer line that will link North Cohasset to the Hull sewage treatment plant.

Corey may sue if the subdivision is denied access to the sewer according to his attorney, Charles Humphreys of Cohasset.

The town has a contract with Hull for 85,000 gallons per day of treatment capacity and the town cannot tie in more than they've already committed to with Hull.

The development needs the hook-up to sewer because many of its acres are on wetlands and ledge, with little land suitable for on-site septic systems.

Also, Corey will need to meet with the conservation commission because the proposed project is next to state-protected Rattlesnake Run.

Rattlesnake Run is classified as a perennial river and therefore protected under the state's Rivers Protection Act, which deems that development of permanent structures is restricted within 200 feet of its annual high water mark, the conservation commission said.

The planning board approved Corey's plans in October with set conditions that would allow the board to control items such as the road slope and two access roads, one of which would go over a pre-existing well on the adjacent Hunter property.

"It's certainly nothing that will happen quick," Moore said.

The next planning board meeting on the proposed Jerusalem Road Estates site will be Jan 20 in town hall.

Lilac House approved as a retail site

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Lilac House was approved as a retail site by the planning board, which is one of the steps necessary for owner Gerd Ordelheide to take prior to making proposed changes at the 83-85 South Main St. Building.

Ordelheide, who owns the violet-hued Lilac House and nearby Red Lion Inn, will use architects form the Niemitz Design Group of Boston. Niemitz is the same architectural firm that is working on the inn.

Engineer Neil Murphy of Murphy & Wait, P.C., Cohasset, described Ordelheide's plans, which would include removing the building's left wing.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore wanted to know if the village would end up with two oddly juxtaposed buildings.

Murphy explained that the building would not change much in configuration and would basically replace the building's left wing with a similar construction.

A bakery with an open preparation area and retail area would take the place of the wing. A walkway and front porch would be also be added.

"It would be a nice addition to the village," Murphy said.

The old railroad tracks and trees behind the building would not be affected by the alterations.

The old section of Lilac House may be rented to another party for a business.

Because the building is within 400 feet of the town parking lot, Lilac House doesn't have to provide additional parking, which is true of any business in the village, Murphy explained.

The project has been in the works for about two months with the aid of an architect and design group.

"It's supposed to be in character with the building so I think they will do the best they can to keep that look the same," Murphy added.

Planning board okays Hagerty park plans

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The planning board granted site approval to plans to transform the town-owned Hagerty property into a waterfront park.

Engineer John Modzelewsi of Civil Designs Inc., town consultant for the project, presented plans for the proposed park last week.

The site at the north end of Parker Avenue was bought by the town about four years ago and selectmen later appointed a committee to come up with a design that included parking and recreational use.

The park is named for the six old Hagerty buildings on that site which once housed the Cohasset Colonials furniture kit company.

The parking lot will be raised a maximum of two feet to help lighten flooding there so that grass can be grown there.

The current footpath from the Hagerty site to Government Island will be replaced with a walkway, most of which will be loamed and seeded. There will be also be a small deck area near the boat house.

Parking for 32 vehicles, as well as a possible 35 extra feet of parking area near the site's boat area is also planned.

Modzelewski also went before the Zoning Board of Appeals with the proposal.

"They have found that we are allowed to use the site as a public park," Modzelewski said. "I'm going before the Conservation Commission soon and will explain about the width of the deck, which will allow people to sit and eat, and the eight pile anchors that would be placed there."

According to Modzelewski, piles were chosen over anchors because anchors allow "too much sway."

"I don't think an awful lot will change in terms of the functioning of the site," planning board Chairman Al Moore said. Moore also serves as chairman of the Hagerty Committee.

"I think this is one of the projects the town has been waiting for," Moore said.

LIBRARY CORNER

The Children's Room

Registration for the winter preschool story hour at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library are being accepted. Story hours will be held Thursday afternoons at 1 p.m., Jan. 7, 14, 21 and 28 and Feb. 4 and 11. Another session will be held Friday mornings at 10 a.m., Jan. 8, 15, 22 and 29 and Feb. 5 and 12.

Each 45-minute program consists of several picture book stories, songs and crafts. Children must be at least 3-1/2 years of age to participate. To register, call the children's room at 383-1348.

Pinata party for children

There will be a Pinata Party for children of all ages in the children's room at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Thursday, Dec. 31, at 1 p.m. Enjoy this New Year's celebration with your little ones with a story read by Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, and the "cracking" of the Pinata filled with candies and small prizes. Join us for this fun-filled event! !

New in CD ROM

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library has the latest in CD ROM with a Madeline Thinking Game. This is for use in the library only and has some terrific learning ideas for children ages 3 to 7 years. Call Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, for more information. "And now go to sleep!" said Miss Clavel. And she turned out the light — and closed the door — and that's all there is — there isn't any more.

Gardner Museum pass

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Library have donated a free pass to the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum in Boston. The pass is available to any Cohasset Library card holder.

Water board readies for Y2K computer bug

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

There are 373 days remaining until the end. The end of what, you wonder? Depending on who you talk to, either the end of the world or the end of fears sparked by the so-called "millennium bug." In 373 days, computers will record the first day of the year 2000 (Y2K). And there is a growing fear that unless something is done quickly, computers that rely on the correct date to function properly will bring the entire world to a grinding halt. Electrical plants will shut down. Elevators will stop. Gas pumps will fail. Telephones will fall silent. Heating equipment will not be able to function without electricity from outmoded switches. Water plants will not be able to produce water. These are the worst-case scenarios, but they are quite possible. No one knows for certain what will happen at midnight, on Jan. 1, 2000.

Fortunately for Cohasset, the water commissioners are taking no chances. The water commission has made preparations for Y2K its top priority through January, 2000. They have developed a comprehensive plan to keep the water plant functioning if the Y2K computer bug proves to be disastrous.

Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. has researched the subject of Y2K extensively. He said the problem is larger than many people think because the bug could potentially affect billions of embedded microchips buried in machinery and computers.

The problem with the year 2000 for computers is that they read dates in two digits. A computer understands that 12/23/98 is actually December 12, 1998. The problem is that computers have not been prepared for the conversion from the 20th century date system to the 21st century date system. Computers will probably read 1/1/00 as January 1, 1900. That could cause all kinds of problems in everything from lowly home computers to the defense department network or the international banking system. The problem is further compounded by a lack of action by individuals, companies, even entire governments.

Research into the Y2K problem by government and private analysts has shown that there are wide gaps in the way organizations are preparing for the millennium bug. The defense department is making massive preparations, while VISA said it has achieved complete Y2K compliance. The Russian government has decided to do nothing and see what happens, a position the town does not want to be in.

John McNabb said the problem is larger than many people think because the bug could potentially affect billions of embedded microchips buried in machinery and computers.

The water commission lays out the potential problems for the town in its "Year 2000 Action Plan." There are three main problems that could occur: water production could stop completely; water treatment could be incomplete causing the release of untreated water into the distribution system; chemical feeds could release poisonous amounts of chlorine or fluoride into the water supply.

"The threat is very real," according to the water commission's report. "Large companies and governments all over the world have invested hundreds of millions of dollars in ways to deal with the Y2K problem. In addition to the potential adverse consequences to the operation of the water treatment plant itself, the Y2K problem may not be properly addressed in our electric utilities, telephone systems, food distribution networks, gasoline delivery, and other supplies and services that the water department (and everyone else) needs to operate and to survive."

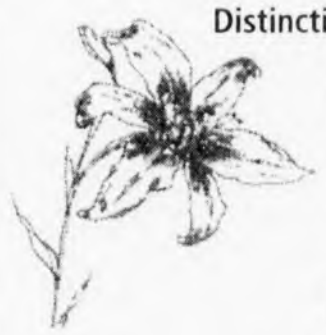
The biggest problem with Y2K is no one knows what will happen or how long it will last if systems begin to fail. Electric utilities are getting ready, but they admit they won't be 100 percent ready by Jan. 1, 2000, McNabb said.

"The most recent estimates from Y2K observers is that while system-wide shutdowns of electricity, telephones and other services are not expected, some outages and system failures are inevitable in many of these critical systems," the water commission's report points out.

The water commission has budgeted $10,000 to prepare for Y2K. Correcting for Y2K complications could be as simple as downloading a software patch from the Microsoft website to make Windows 95 compliant to preparing for the loss of outside utilities.

The plan calls for the examination of all computers, embedded chips, software, hardware, flowmeters, chemical feed systems, alarm systems, valves, lab equipment, telephones, thermostats, and electrical systems in the water plant. Non-compliant software will have to be modified. Embedded microchips can be a problem because they do their own processing and are very tiny. Non-compliant embedded chips will have to be replaced. McNabb said the water commission is making preparations to run the plant even if there is a nation-wide or regional power failure because of Y2K. The commissioners are planning to purchase a new generator and a 30 day supply of fuel to run the plant in case of a massive electricity failure.

"I'm taking the conservative, pessimistic view so we don't wake up in 2000 and find we missed something," McNabb said. "What if our software processes information that contains dates."



The water commission has interviewed two companies for the job of examining the plant, testing equipment, locating non-compliant Y2K components, and recommending ways to make the entire system compliant. Rockwell Automation of Marlborough and Utilistar of Baton Rouge, Louisiana have both applied for the job. Rockwell charges $1,750 per day but did not say how long the job would take. Utilistar said it could do the whole job for $9,725. The water commission estimates it has about $50,000-$100,000 for Y2K upgrades in its current budget, with another $150,000 available next year.

Some of the steps the water commission is considering include installing a wireless communication system to operate the Bear Hill water tank remotely in case of a power failure; purchasing 30-day supplies of generator fuel, water purification chemicals, spare parts and food in case the plant becomes snowbound in winter; installing an above-ground gasoline tank to hold fuel for water commission repair vehicles; placing a 30-60 day supply of cash for salaries and purchases in a safe container in the plant.

McNabb has taken preparations for Y2K a step further by issuing an ominous warning to town officials to take action immediately.

"The town needs to get moving and think of contingency planning," McNabb said. "We need to get civil defense ready for the cold in case we do have massive power and natural gas delays because of Y2K. What happens if traffic lights fail, and 911 stops, and private fire alarms stop working. We have 373 days left and counting for a non-negotiable deadline that is unique to any other kind of natural or man-made disaster because we know it is coming and we know when."

Alex Russell (51) and Khalil Madyon battle under the boards for a rebound in the Skippers 66-62 win Monday night over Harwich. CHS has started strong this season at 2-0 and are preparing to host Scituate, Avon and Dover-Sherborn in the annual Cohasset Converse Holiday Classic.

Hoopsters pick up a pair of wins

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Led by senior captain Jamie DeMichele's 36 points and the performances of a few other key contributors, the Cohasset Skippers scored a comeback victory in the season opener against Harwich in dramatic fashion.

With DeMichele's nearly hypnotic scoring revue at full tilt, Cohasset triumphed 86-82.

Junior center Khalil Madyun opened the scoring with an offensive putback.

This set the tone for the game, as Cohasset's Madyun, Raheem Shepard, and Alex Russell would dominate on the offensive boards and follow up with key buckets.

Fan favorite Paul Hussey provided some defense, stuffing a Roughrider on a misguided lay-up attempt, firing up the Skipper crowd.

Despite DeMichele popping in four quick points, the Skippers fell back early and trailed 16-6 after a few minutes. Russell pulled down an offensive board and put it back for a pair, then T.J. Bilodeau scored his first varsity points with a high-arcing three pointer. DeMichele converted a steal into two points and Daniel Trowers maneuvered in traffic for a pair.

Shepard muscled through defenders for two points before DeMichele cut the Harwich lead to 29-18 with a charity shot from the foul line. Madyun again scored off an offensive board, but Harwich then began to pull away.

DeMichele responded with six straight points, two of them coming off a stolen pass. Hussey netted his first points of the season, getting a shooter's bounce on a three-pointer, much to the delight of the Skipper faithful. After Shepard closed first half-scoring with a nifty pivot move, Cohasset headed to the lockerrom with a 44-32 deficit.

Any halftime motivational speeches worked wonders for the Skippers. Cohasset came out with fire in their eyes and closed the gap on the wings of a 22-13 run.

DeMichele, after posting thirteen points in the first half, then went to work.

His trey opened the second half and was followed by Hussey's drive to the hole for a pair. Again, showing Maxwellian low post moves, Shepard scored two with an up-and-under move, what Johnny Most used to call a "dipsy-do."

DeMichele hit another triple a

EXTRA POINTS

First, a quick quiz. Who do you think would have more of an impact with a group of elementary school athletes? Retired (?) basketball star Michael Jordan or the Marshfield High linebacker who goes by the same name?

Don't answer so fast, because the correct response may surprise you.

When it comes to who younger athletes follow and admire, the latest young prodigy at the high school may be just as much a hero as any currently unemployed/locked-out mega-superstar.

One expert on the issue says high school kids should not only accept their role-model status, but capitalize on it as well to help give back to a community that has helped provide for them.

"We teach kids to excel in the classroom and on the playing fields and we should do the same when it comes to being role models for the children as well as in giving their time to community causes," said Dr. Richard Lapchick, director of Northeastern's Center for the Study of Sport in Society after a recent talk sponsored by the Duxbury PTO. "High school athletes have a great opportunity to relate with the youth in their community and do some great things with them."

Unfortunately, he added, not enough teenagers realize they have the ability to make a difference in a child's life.

"It's a misconception that you have to be a superstar to have an impact on a young life. All that's needed is that one-to-one contact and an effort on the part of someone looking to offer something to the youth of the community," said Lapchick. "It's about making someone feel good about themselves and giving them the confidence they need succeed both in the classroom and in their athletic endeavors."

All the signs are there that today's youth are ready and more than willing to accept any recognition they can get from the older students.

Next time you go to a high school athletic contest, take a look down on the sidelines at some of the younger kids down there helping out the team.

They're out there running the lines at soccer games.

Manning the water bottle patrol for the football team.

Making sure everyone has their proper lumber at the baseball and hockey contests.

And every one of them is doing his or her job with as wide of a smile as you are ever going to see.

Who needs the Patriots, Celtics or the Red Sox when you get to hang out with the local football team? And these guys might even talk to you or engage you in a game of catch.

It's not how much money you make or how many times you appear on the SportsCenter that makes you a hero to these kids. It's the personal contact that will do so.

Fortunately, many teams in our reading area seem to have gotten this point.

The Hingham High tennis team has a great community service effort where the players from the high school team spent time this spring teaching the game to elementary school kids in their town.

In Rockland, many of the kids for the boys hoop team at the high school spoke on numerous occasions to kids in the lower grades as part of a DARE program on avoiding the use of tobacco products and handling the stress of growing older and taking responsibility for your actions.

When the Duxbury girls basketball squad took the Division 2 South title last year at Massasoit Community College in a last-second thriller against King Philip, their biggest supporters in attendance were a youth team from a local church league that had been visited by the state champs throughout the season.

And just a few short years ago, it was the football team at Silver Lake that stepped forward to help out when the local homeless shelter found their shelves bare going into the holiday season.

These groups have shown they understand their role in the community.

Now it's up to others to follow suit.

Cohasset Converse Holiday Classic

Both the boys and girls basketball teams from Cohasset and Scituate High School will be in action at the annual Cohasset Converse Holiday Classic basketball tournament.

On Monday, Dec. 28 Avon vs Dover-Sherborn will square off at 2:30 in the girls game and the boys will follow at 4:15 p.m. Then Scituate vs Cohasset in a girls contest will follow at 6 p.m. and the boys tilt between the Sailors and the Skippers will follow at 7:45.

The next day the girls consolation game starts everything off at 2:30 p.m. with the boys consolation game following at 4:15. The girls championship will then be contested at 6 p.m. and that will be followed by the boys final at 7:45 p.m.

Adults will be admitted for $5 (two day passes for $8) and student tickets is $3, with a two day pass available for $5.

Gymnasts send Blue Devils for a tumble

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Just days before the inaugural meet for the combined Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics team, captain Tara Hettstrom predicted the Randolph meet was a winnable one this year for the Skippers.

But to do so they would have to throw caution to the wins and go with the more familiar moves on the bars, vault, beam and the floor exercise.

"When we go up against a team we know we can beat, we won't take chances," said Hettstrom. "It's better to stick with the moves we are most familiar with."

They did just that against the Blue Devils as they took first place in three events on their way to a 113.5 to 110.9 win to open the season.

Cohasset did make its share of mistakes that usually go along with the first meet of the season, but several personal bests were set as an indication that this squad is on the right track for even high scores this season.

The girls just missed their target mark of 115 points for the event.

Kristen Sheerin was nearly unstoppable as she captured the all-around competition with a personal best score of 33 that included an 8.4 on the beam and an 8.6 on the bars.

"Kristen has put on some incredible performances already this season," said head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni. "She be pushing for scores around the 33 mark all year in the all-around.

Cohasset-Norwell held a 2.3 point lead at the halfway mark of the competition, but Randolph came back with a first and a third place finishes sandwiched around Sheerin's 8.1 in the vault. The Skippers didn't panic, though, and clinched the win in the floor exercise where Sheerin was followed in second place by Hettstrom, who posted a 8.4.

Carlie Carter had a big night with personal best efforts on the bars (8.0), vault (7.6) and floor exercise (7.7). her bar score was good enough for first place and led a Cohasset-Norwell sweep in the event as Sheerin was second (7.9)_and Hettstrom was third with a 7.2.

Carter's scores were good enough for a third place in the all-around.

"She had a great meet and has shown a lot of improvement this season," said Ardizzoni of Carter.

Ardizzoni was pleased with the team's victory, particularly the number of strong scores that her team posted.

"I was very happy," she said. "It wasn't one of our best wins, but with the amount of mistakes we made I see a large area when we can improve as the year goes along. But to see those big scores in the first meet of the year is a big deal."

Allison Duffney, Julie Callahan and co-captain Pattie Lacroix all put in strong performances. Ardizzoni was especially impressed with the work of LaCroix.

"She has a lot of potential," said the coach. "What we have to do know is upgrade her degree of difficulty in some of her events."

Lauren Genovese, back after a three year absence from the sport, recorded solid scores in the floor exercise and on the vault. Genovese, along with LaCroix and Hettstrom, are some of the older girls who Ardizzoni hopes will set the lead for the younger tumblers.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Soccer club applications

The Cohasset Soccer Club is still awaiting applications for spring travel soccer. If you have not already returned your application, please do so as soon as possible so they can coordinate the teams and coaches. This is open to all individuals in public or private schools.

The U-12 and U-14 will be playing Saturdays and the U-16 and 18-and-Under will be playing Sundays.

If you do not have an application, call the Cohasset Recreation Dept. at 383-4109.

Bryant captains Salem State hoop team

Former CHS basketball standout Dorian Bryant has been named a captain this season at Salem State College.

Bryant, a Cohasset High graduate, is a member of the junior class at Salem State.

Ragged Mt. Learn to Ski/Snow Board package

Through the auspices of Buckles and Boards of Marshfield, Cohasset Recreation will make available a 5 week Ski or Snow Board package at Ragged Mt. For Cohasset Youth age 10-and-over.

The 5-week program will be Saturdays, beginning January 9 through February 6, 1999 and costs $199 per for the weeks of skiing/snow boarding and Motor Coach transportation.

Equipment rentals are available at both Buckles and Boards and Ragged Mt. For those requiring equipment.

Motor Coach leaves from Buckles and Boards, Route 139, Marshfield, each of the Saturdays at 6 a.m. and returns at about 7 p.m.

Should you have the interest in this unique opportunity please call the Cohasset Recreation at 383-4109.

Information regarding Blue Hills Ski Lessons starting January 7, 1999, will be forthcoming shortly.

Registration will be Thursday, Dec. 3 only from 2:30-3:30 p.m. and again from 5:30-6:30 p.m. at the Recreation office, 1st floor, Town Hall.

Sports websites available

The Cohasset Mariner and Town Online, the online service of the Community Newspaper Company (CNC), are offering free web sites to all high school, youth and recreation sports organizations and teams.

CNC will provide the web site and train organization representatives in web page design and building, using self-publishing internet software that is acessible from any computer. Most people only need one 2 1/2-hour training session to get the hang of it. There are no hidden fees and no catches.

Each group and team will build and maintain its own site. Post game results, schedules, a calendar of events, bulletin board, lists of officials and team rosters, photos and/or directions to fields. Coming very soon - each group will have the capability of holding its own online chats.

This is a great way for sports teams and organizations to get their results and message to the public using the web through Town Online.

The program is available to all youth, adult, recreational and high school sports teams and organizations. Even groups who already have websites are invited to join in and be a part of a growing web network that receives over 1.5 million hits a month...and growing.

For more information on this exciting new program, contact Wayne Braverman at (781) 433-7842, or email wbraverman@cnc.com.

Hoopsters pick up a pair of wins minute later and Shepard followed with an offensive putback. DeMichele's toss from beyond the arc found the bottom of the net for the third straight time, igniting the Skippers.

Hussey found Trowers on a fast break for two, then tossed in his second three of the night. Cohasset's captain took over then, as DeMichele would score the Skippers' next thirteen points. He presented the crowd, and the Roughriders, with a veritable boutique of scoring techniques: bank shots, three pointers, lay-ups, stumbling prayers which had no business going anywhere near the hoop.

Regardless of appearance, when followed by a Shepard free throw and another lead, the home team had sliced the Roughrider lead to four points.

Newcomer Matt O'Reilly sank two free throws, then Hussy once again brought the student section to its feet with a three. Shepard continued his low post clinic, tearing down an offensive board and giving the Skippers the lead with a putback. Madyun's bucket pushed the lead to two points, 75-73.

Another bucket from the paint by Shepard put Cohasset back on top after Harwich had regained the lead. Trowers netted a clutch trey and DeMichele's three free throws proved to be the winning points. Madyun scored the game's final points, giving CHS an 86-82 victory.

The comeback win showed the Skippers' mettle and opened the season on a promising note. With a 66-62 win over Mashpee on Monday night, Cohasset had jumped out to a 2-0 start. Non-league games over the holiday break should further test Coach Ford's team and provide good tests for mid season play.

Matmen look strong for MHS Tourney

The CHS wrestling squad has hit the ground running to start the 1998-99 campaign with four straight wins.

The victories were an important lead into a big meet at South Shore League rival Carver tonight (Wednesday) and then the annual Marshfield Holiday Wrestling Tournament on December 29 and 30.

The first victim was B.C. High who fell 37-27 in a hard fought match. The Eagles led 27-21 going into the 189 weight class but consecutive pins by Luke Caldwell, Joe Carbone (215 pounds) and heavyweight J.P. Laugelle gave the Skippers the win.

"That was a big win for us," said head coach Torin Sweeney. "B.C. High is an always tough Divison 1 team and we came up big to beat them. Joe Carbone was a star of the meet for us."

Other winner included Mike Rossi (by pin) and Chris Pratt, Dan Littauer, Liam O'Donnell, Ben Littauer as well as Justin Golden all won by decision.

Things were a little easier against Holbrook as the Skippers came away with a 49-24 victory.

Winning by pin were freshman Paul Previt, Laugelle, Pratt, O'Donnell, Rossi, Golden and Caldwell.

The results were the same against Dedham, a 54-18 win that saw winning pins from freshman Peter Kovach in the 112 pound class, as well as Pratt, Dan Littauer, Ben Littauer O'Donnell, Carbone, Rossi, Golden, Caldwell and Laugelle.

The Skippers winning ways continued against Canton as they came away with the 59-15 victory.

Freshman Pat Carbone and Kevin Devito both stepped forward with their first pins of the season. Other winners included Pratt, Dan and Ben Littauer, O'Donnell, Rossi, Golden, Joe Carbone and Laugelle.

In addition to the multiple winners, Sweeney said sophomores John Hertig (103 pounds), Dan Duffy (130 pounds), Justin Langham (135 pounds) and Tim Grassey (145 pounds) have been wrestling well this season but have yet to break into the win column.

Fitness center available

Through the auspices of Cohasset High School and Dr. Mike Gill of the Health Education Department; CHS has a commercial quality fitness center.

CHS is interested in making this facility available to all residents at a nominal fee charge which cannot be determined until we have an idea of how many residents might have interest utilizing the facility. If you feel that you or members of your family might be interested in using the CHS gym, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-4109 right away.

The Rec. Dept. would like to know approximately how many residents would utilize the facility if they were able to keep it open during evening and weekend hours.

State re-opens some shell fishing areas

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

There's good news for local shellfish harvesting. The state has re-opened some areas on the north coast of Cohasset to shellfish harvesting. But the good news is tinged with a touch of irony because there aren't all that many shellfish to harvest in the re-opened areas.

"What's opened is the north coast, which has no shellfish," said Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik. "It's all rock. If you drive along Atlantic Avenue and Jerusalem Road, the sandy areas are excluded beaches. The only places where there might be sand are not opened."

Health board member Steve Bobo viewed the opened areas a little differently. He said it is now possible to take mussels at Brush Point and the Glades, although the clam flats in Little Harbor will remain closed.

Godzik pointed out that from public health point of view, the news is good because it means the water is clean enough in some spots for shellfish harvesting. Pollution has been the main impediment to shellfish harvesting in the area. Pollution from failing septic systems, broken pipes and other unidentified sources have contaminated shellfish beds.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik pointed out that from public health point of view, the news is good because it means the water is clean enough in some spots for shellfish harvesting. Pollution has been the main impediment to shellfish harvesting in the area. Pollution from failing septic systems, broken pipes and other unidentified sources have contaminated shellfish beds.

The Massachusetts Division of Marine Fisheries (DMF) re-opened the north coast areas after completing a sanitary survey over the summer of the shellfish growing area in Cohasset and Scituate. The survey assessed the classification of Cohasset's shellfish areas, tried to identify sources of pollution, examined the effects of weather and hydrography, and updated historical monitoring. According to DMF, this is the first time such an extensive analysis of the area has been performed.

The DMF report states that the shellfish areas along the coast of Cohasset were closed in Sept., 1989 because no agency had ever performed a sanitary survey. Beginning in 1996, DMF and Godzik have conducted an extensive sanitary survey, identifying 48 potential sources of pollution, including homes on Jerusalem Road, Linden Drive and other areas. The DMF has permitted the re-opening of shellfish beds at The Glades-Strawberry Point, but found pollution levels too high to re-open three other areas: the mouth of Little Harbor, Sandy Beach and Black Rock Beach.

Bobo said that on the left side of the harbor going out to Whale Meadows is still heavily polluted with no identifiable source of contamination. In Little Harbor, there are clams all over the place, but the contamination makes the shellfish unfit for human consumption.

Town officials are preparing to conduct a study of Little Harbor to develop a detailed analysis of pollution sources. The study will also offer possible solutions. The town has $45,000 set aside for the study. Four companies have responded to a request for proposals to conduct the study: Camp, Dresser and Magee of Cambridge; Normando Associates of Plymouth; Tutela Engineering of Wilmington; and Stone Environmental of Montpelier, Vermont.

Bobo said the health board will choose one of the firms by Jan. 5, 1999 and work will began soon after that date. The study will attempt to identify the source of bacteria contaminating shellfish beds.

Previously, health board Chairman Kevin Ulmer said the Little Harbor Study came about because of a state court order requiring that the town create a waste water management plan for areas of town without sewer service. The town began a comprehensive plan by creating two priority districts: one on Lily Pond and one around Little Harbor. The town decided to sewer homes on Lily Pond and initiate a study of Little Harbor to identify pollution sources. Shellfish beds have been closed for many years because of pollution from an unknown source, and algae beds have been growing out of control. The study will attempt to identify the types of pollution in the area, possible sources and potential solutions. The study does not guarantee that the town will sewer homes around Little Harbor.

Ulmer said the problems with the algae may all be caused by lawn fertilizer, which seeps into the water in storm runoff and other ways. If fertilizer is the source of nitrogen, the town could be forced to restrict lawn fertilizers.

Bobo said the overgrown algae causes a process called utrification — the removal of oxygen from the water.

"We're fighting the death of that body of water from a lack of oxygen," Bobo said. "Algae grows in the presence of nitrogen. Nitrogen doesn't originate in the water, but there is a lot of it in fertilizer. If people would not use fertilizer on their lawns, we could save that body of water. People fertilize their lawns in spring, which is the beginning of the shellfish growing season."

The problem is further compounded by high fecal coliform levels from human waste originating at failed septic systems.

"The study will identify waste sources and develop a plan to get waste water under control," Bobo said. "The plan may include new septic systems, sewers or decentralized waste water plants."

Bobo said he was particularly excited by a provision in the RFP requiring the engineers to use an infrared survey to identify the breakout of waste water from effluent sources. The infrared survey uses the same equipment that American soldiers employed in The Gulf War to locate underground land mines.

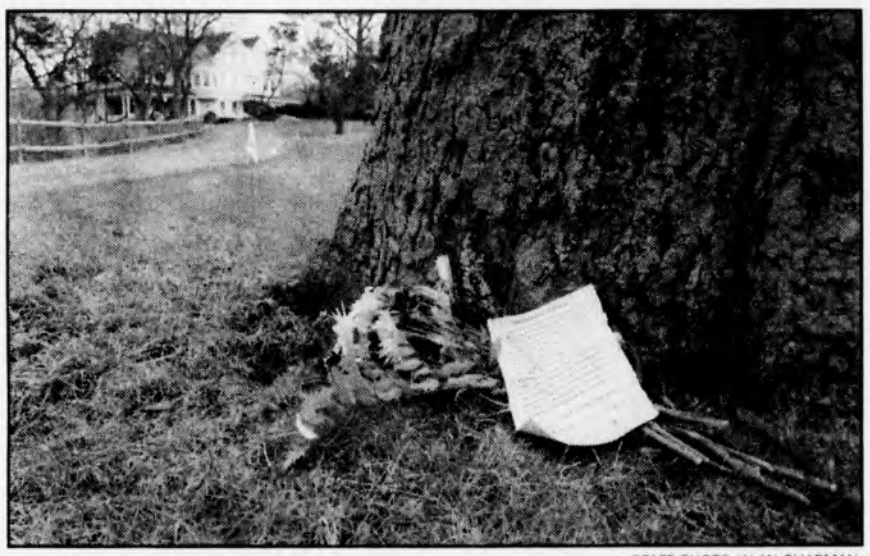
A look back at Cohasset's year



Year in Review

The stories that shaped Cohasset's year

Flowers and a note are left near the Kennedy house at 181 Atlantic Ave., following news of Michael Kennedy's death in a skiing accident.

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

January:

Michael Kennedy dies at age 39 while playing a game of ski-football with family on vacation in Aspen, Colorado. The accident brings an end to year-long media frenzy about Kennedy's alleged affair with an underage babysitter.

The $2.75 million dollar Chart House Restaurant closes when its California-based owner, Chart House Restaurants Inc., pulls out of town.

The North Cohasset sewer project bids come in at about $2.7 million more than anticipated.

Building Inspector Bob Egan orders the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill to cease all operations because of a permit violation in a notice dated Jan. 26. John K. McNabb Jr. Of the anti-CHL group, Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), said CHL's failure to file for a necessary special permit means CHL has been operating unlawfully for most of its existence since 1976.

February:

Anna Abbruzzese is selected as the Mariner's annual Citizen of the Year.

Attorney for CHL landfill owner Paul Barry, Anton Moehrke, said Barry won't close up shop, despite a cease and desist order from the town's building inspector, but will appeal.

A program to use the $30,000 a year paid to call firefighters to train paramedics loses steam when selectmen are won over by the call firefighters' arguments.

A 3-2 vote by selectmen cut $30,000 out of the school department's spending proposal for FY99 prompts school committee Chairman Ralph Kidder to question selectmen's ability to judge school needs.

Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES), which opposes plans that could arbitrarily force homeowners to replace septic systems at costs as high as $80,000, rejoice when the state Attorney General's office recommends that the town sewer 36 homes on Lily Pond.

March:

Businessman Gerd Ordelheide, owner of The Red Lion Inn, delivers a two-part message to planning board members: he has the money to restore the faded jewel of the town and the planning board had better work with him.

Selectmen vote to add $30,000 for the coming fiscal year (FY99) to the school department's budget for education spending after a special request from the school board to reconsider their 3-2 vote.

Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe issues a decision saying that the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill could expand vertically, adding the potential for another 44,000 tons of material until March, 1999, without a supplemental environmental impact report as long as it satisfies certain criteria.

John K. McNabb Jr., vice-president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), uncovers evidence that the Cohasset Heights Limited landfill exceeds the legal capacity of the facility by as much as 170,000 cubic yards of excess material.

Cohasset Harbor Marina owner Paul Trendowicz wants the town to realign federal anchorage in Bailey's Creek in front of his marina and claims he owns up to the middle of Bailey's Creek. He offers to pay his portion of the $1.34 million harbor dredging project in exchange for the remaining anchorage area.

April:

Half of the 14 town offices at stake in the April 4 town election could go to candidates in their first run for office; a healthy voter turnout is expected.

Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES) rally enough support at the March 27 town meeting to defeat two warrant articles which would have provided taxpayer subsidy or state grants to the 200 homeowners facing hook up to the sewer project.

Mark DeGiacomo and Patricia Martin win seats on the school committee; Robert Kasameyer is unopposed for reelection to the water commission; Tom Callahan switches from the conservation commission to the board of selectmen and incumbent Merle Brown wins another term.

The Red Lion Inn's construction team squeezes a "conditional" approval April 1 from the planning board after construction manager Tish Gardner of Shawmut Construction stresses the urgency of the construction season schedule.

Paul Trendowicz goes before the harbor committee in early April to seek support for his proposal to realign the federal anchorage area so he can move his docks about 40 feet into Bailey's Creek, saying he would swap that by paying for dredging in that area.

The health board threatens to sue the sewer commission if it doesn't hook-up four Newtonville homes to the sewer system as soon as possible. The homes were declared public health emergencies in fall of '97 be-

SHOW A LITTLE RESTRAINT
Head restraints have been a regular safety feature in automobiles since 1969, but according to the Insurance Research Council, neck injuries remain the most serious type of injury in nearly 40% of all car insurance claims. Why do head restraints provide so little protection against the whiplash injuries they are supposedly designed to prevent? One answer was provided by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety's recent evaluation of 200 passenger cars, in which only five head restraints were rated as well-designed. The effective restraints were all at least as tall as the seat occupant's head, and all provided a minimum gap (no more than four inches) between the front of the restraint and the back of the passenger's head.
This column on head restraints has been brought to you in the interest of better health. Anyone who has been in an accident needs a chiropractic spinal check-up. It makes sense to see your chiropractor after any injury. Millions of delighted patients can attest to the value and effectiveness of chiropractic care. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we provide safe, drug-free, and gentle chiropractic care for the entire family. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor. Please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. Our "Mothers Morning Out" program lets us assist you in raising a healthy, drug free family. Call us to find out more.
HINT: Car passengers should make a point of adjusting the seat's head restraints to a point as close to the middle of their heads as possible.

Task force, master plan plot future

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Revitalizing Cohasset Village is not an easy task. Problems in the village include infrastructure deficiencies, poor signage, inadequate parking, crumbling sidewalks, few businesses and inadequate lighting. Residents and town officials have been decrying the slow decline of the village for decades.

But that decline started to halt in 1998. This was the year that two committees devoted to revitalizing the village made great progress toward their mutual goal. The Village Revitalization Task Force, a town committee, has been meeting regularly to discuss their latest projects, including a master plan for the village, a vision for Cohasset's downtown, future grant proposals, and plans to develop ideas to connect the harbor and the village. The Village Task Force, formed by the local chamber of commerce, has been instrumental in acquiring grants and providing a vision for the future. Grant money paid for a new sidewalk and a study of village-harbor connections. And there is more to come next year. This end of the year review provides some of the highlights of efforts in 1998 to revitalize the village.

The importance of the Red Lion Inn to the village cannot be understated. In the past, Dean Rizzo pointed out that the historic inn is the anchor for the rest of the village. Ordelheide could not be reached for comment, but in a letter to selectmen last month, he said the inn would re-open in June, 1999.

The first big success for the village revitalization came last June when Dean Rizzo, Chairman of the Village Task Force, said the Massachusetts Highway Department would award the town a $165,000 grant to build a new sidewalk in front of St. Stephen's Church

Fate of Greenbush railroad restoration still in question

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Both proponents and opponents of the MBTA's proposal to restore Greenbush rail service to the South Shore are wondering what the new year will bring.

The project has been delayed for a number of reasons since it was first proposed nearly a decade ago.

Opponents say safer, less expensive and more environmentally-friendly alternatives must be explored, while proponents feel restoring the 17.7-mile Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad is the best solution to ease the growing transportation woes of the area.

"Nothing has really happened in the last three or four months," said Thomas Gruber, chairman of the Greenbush Mitigation Committee in Cohasset. "I don't know why. The only thing I can think of is that it has to be elections, change of governor and secretary of environmental affairs Trudy Coxe leaving."

The Army Corps of Engineers, the lead federal agency reviewing the project, has asked the MBTA for more information about its plan, which has further stalled the restoration effort. The Corps is also awaiting a report from the Environmental Protection Agency concerning the Greenbush proposal. The EPA has met with the MBTA and other consultants and has agreed to meet with Hingham officials before releasing its final report, which is expected sometime after the beginning of the year.

Key issues hovering around the controversial rail line during the years it has been explored include air quality, ridership figures, other environmental impacts, safety and cost — which has risen from $210 million to $285 million.

The transit authority estimates trains could start rolling on the Greenbush line in about 2002.

But proponent David Clinton of Hingham doubts that timeframe.

"Let's hope Governor Cellucci takes a fresh look at the Greenbush issue in 1999."

- Nancy Buckley, train opponent

"I still think the line will get built, even with the delays," he said. "But I don't see it getting built by then. But there's a very big need for Greenbush, and I don't think we'll find better alternatives."

Even with the addition of more commuter boats, Clinton said, they couldn't handle the volume of passengers that a train could.

"I hope the project will get off the ground again soon," he stated. "It can get discouraging."

Nancy Buckley, co-founder of the Coastal Coalition, a grass-roots group which is seeking alternatives to rail restoration, thinks it's unlikely the Corps will permit the project "given the EPA's wrangling over the air quality issue."

What residents of this region want, she said, are for alternative modes of transportation to be developed which will solve the critical transportation woes of the region.

"Let's hope Governor Cellucci takes a fresh look at the Greenbush issue in 1999," she said.

The MBTA remains committed to restoring Greenbush rail service, despite the delays.

However, said Brian Pedro, spokesperson for the MBTA, "as each year passes, we need to reevaluate the timetable and push it back according to the delays which have occurred."

Pedro is convinced the Greenbush line will be as popular as the other two branches of the Old Colony Railroad have proved to be, "especially where people have been waiting so long for it."

Besides, he said, traffic in and out of Boston isn't getting any better.

"There is definitely a need for the Greenbush line," he said.

Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan, on the other hand, says it's less likely this year than it was last year that the rail line will be restored.

"There are more obstacles this year," he said, including strict environmental laws. If all goes well for the MBTA and the plan goes through, Macmillan doubts Greenbush could be completed before 2004.

By that time, some insiders say, the cost could rise be as high as $400 million, including mitigation costs.

"A $400 million diesel rail line through 43 grade crossings, a National Register Historic District (in downtown Hingham), wetlands and densely populated residential neighborhoods abutting the long-abandoned Greenbush line is making less and less sense as time goes on," Macmillan said.

The year CHL closed down

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

There were many big news stories in Cohasset during 1998, but the biggest story of all may have taken place on July 2, 1998 when the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill closed down. Various town officials and private groups have tried for years to shut down the privately owned landfill. Yet, CHL always seemed to defy the odds and find ways to keep the trash coming. Many people worked to shut down the landfill for dozens of alleged environmental violations, but it's safe to say that CHL would probably still be open if not for the efforts of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) and its persistent spokesman, John K. McNabb Jr. Here then is a look back at the events in 1998 related to CHL.

The year began badly for CHL. In January, Building Inspector Robert Egan ordered the landfill to shut down for failing to file a special permit with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. Former landfill owner James Tyeryar obtained the special permit in 1976, but failed to file the document at the Registry of Deeds as required by state law. Tyeryar's failure to file the permit meant the landfill was not operating legally. John and Paul Barry bought the landfill in 1982, but did not file the special permit either. McNabb discovered the permit violation in November, 1997 while researching CHL's paperwork for SAFE.

CHL filed the permit on Jan. 21, 1998. However, the town's Water Resource District, created in 1986, ran right through the middle of the landfill. Because CHL had never filed the special permit, the Barry's could no longer claim it was a legal, pre-existing use grandfathered into the district.

Also in January, Egan decided not to take any enforcement action against CHL in another matter: dumping 1,000 tons of material in Area IV-B, a section of the landfill not approved for dumping. That same month, the ZBA held a hearing on Egan's inaction based on complaints from SAFE. The ZBA remanded the decision back to Egan for enforcement action.

On Feb. 5, CHL announced its intention to appeal Egan's shutdown order. At a Feb. 26 ZBA hearing, CHL attorney Anton Moehrke argued that the town could not argue that the special permit was invalid. Moehrke said the town had enforced the special permit in a legal action years earlier, effectively admitting that the document was in force. But McNabb countered that the legal action in question was a lawsuit filed by CHL, and the town could not be held accountable in such a case.

At a March 10 board of health hearing, Chairman Kevin Ulmer questioned CHL about the apparent existence of massive amounts of excess fill on all of the landfill's slopes. A DEP graphic overlay placed on a map of the landfill's legal parameters showed all the slopes much higher than what DEP had allowed. The existence of the material was confirmed, and McNabb estimated the excess material at a staggering 280 million pounds. CHL mounted an offensive against the town's landfill, claiming local officials ignored violations at the Cedar Street facility while going after CHL aggressively.

March also brought news from

CHL, PAGE 10

It was a vintage year for Cohasset Village

on South Main Street. The grant would pay for a new sidewalk from Robert E. Jason Road to Elm Street and associated improvements. The project hit a few bumps after the grant was approved when a few local businesses opposed the sidewalk, but those issues are being worked out. Rizzo said the construction of the sidewalk should begin in summer, 1999.

In July, Gerde Ordelheide, the newest owner of the historic Red Lion Inn, purchased the Lilac House next door for use as a bakery. Ordelheide plans to use the Lilac House as an adjunct to the Red Lion Inn, which is next door.

The importance of the Red Lion Inn to the village cannot be understated. In the past, Rizzo pointed out that the historic inn is the anchor for the rest of the village. Ordelheide could not be reached for comment, but in a letter to selectmen last month, he said the inn would re-open in June, 1999.

Currently, the Red Lion Inn is closed down. Ordelheide has placed his liquor license on hold until the inn re-opens. A temporary electrical box is in place to provide electricity for workmen. Ordelheide plans to tear down the rear section of the Red Lion Inn and rebuild it with a modern kitchen. Just last week, Ordelheide received permission from the planning board to use the Lilac House as a retail bakery. Other plans for the two buildings include modern bedrooms in the old inn. additional guest rooms in the Lilac House, and a remodeled restaurant and bar. The future of the Red lion Inn has never looked as good as it does now, whenever it re-opens for business.

Another important event from last July was the announcement by Rizzo that the town would seek a $60,000 grant to study ways to connect the downtown's of Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Hull. However, the state did not approve this particular grant. The study would have looked at ways to improve signage and give commuters easy routes to each of the four towns. Rizzo said that even though the town did not get the money, local representatives got the opportunity to develop relationships with the agencies that award grants.

The grant money started rolling in again during August. Local Architect Jim Shipsky was hired with a $5,000 Department of Housing and Community Development Municipal Incentive Grant to study ways of connecting the village and the harbor. Shipsky solicited comments from committees, residents, town officials and anybody who was interested about ways to improve the harbor and the village. Shipsky had his own ideas about the harbor and village. He favored a boardwalk from Mill River Marine to the Charthouse modeled on the Cliffwalk behind the massive mansions in Newport, Rhode Island. The Mariner helped out by publishing a survey asking residents to offer suggestions for the village and harbor. Some of the suggestions, published on Oct. 8, included a walkway, jogging paths, restaurants, festivals, boat tournaments, better signs, and no change at all.

In September, the Village Task Force applied for a $35,000 grant to pay for the entire cost of a master plan, which would address key deficiencies in the area and offer well-defined solutions that reflect the needs of the entire community. The town did not get the grant. Rizzo said the master plan for the village will be configured to fit into an overall town master plan, something local officials are currently working on.

The master plan for the village is really the next step for the revitalization of the downtown. Shipsky's final report will certainly help set the parameters of the master plan. The Village Task Force is currently working on plans for a boardwalk, one of the ideas that originated with Shipsky's study. Rizzo expects an exciting year for the village in 1999.

"There will be a lot happening in 1999," Rizzo said. "The Red Lion Inn will re-open, the Atlantica Restaurant will open on the waterfront, we'll prepare designs for the boardwalk, and the sidewalk work will begin in the summer. There's a lot of excitement about the village and the harbor."

Happy New Year!

cause of failing septic systems there.

Selectmen decide not to go ahead with "phase 2" of the North Cohasset sewer project which would connect Strains Pond area homes to the sewer main.

CHL landfill owners file an April 14 lawsuit against the town in land court to overturn an order by Building Inspector Robert Egan to permanently shut down the facility.

Hollywood hopes are dashed when Robert G. King, an executive vice-president at the Gillette Company and formerly of Scituate, signs an agreement to buy the late Michael Kennedy's 181 Atlantic Ave. home, ending speculation that Kennedy relative by marriage Arnold Schwarzenegger would buy the home listed at $2.3 million.

May:

Paul Pratt Memorial Library trustees begin to consider space at the Osgood school when it is vacated in June.

A running track at the high school is dedicated to math teacher and track coach Charles R. Davis, who served Cohasset from 1961 until his death in 1985.

Cohasset fourth-, eighth- and 10th graders made history as the first students to take part in the new MCAS exam; some 10th-grade students are unfazed by the exams and question its merit.

Sewer commissioners continue to disagree with Town Counsel Paul DeRensis' decision that the authority rests with the town manager and not with them; they ask for access to special town counsel to investigate further but are turned down by selectmen.

The Army Corps of Engineers declares the MBTA analysis of ridership and environmental impact projections "sketchy and flawed" and tells the MBTA to start over.

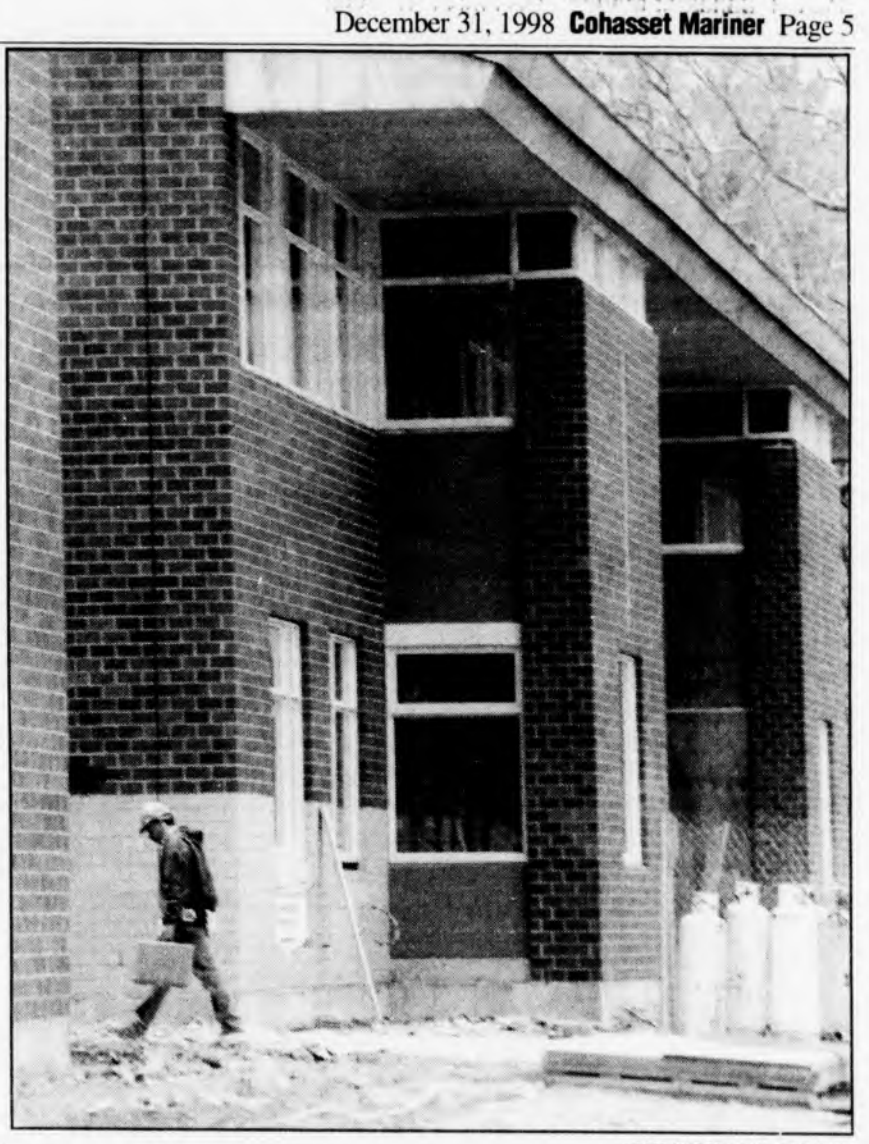
After studying the problems the train would bring to the town, the Greenbush Mitigation Committee concludes that it would disrupt the quality of life in Cohasset far more than the MBTA had admitted.

June:

Janet Husband of Braintree comes on board as the new library director of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library to replace Richard Hayes who is set to retire in June.

A health board hearing is set to discuss several violations by the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill.

Tragedy overshadows Cohasset High's graduation ceremony when 18-year-old Bourke Corcoran is killed in a car crash four days before.



Edward Malvey, the head of the Griswold, Conn. school system, accepts the job as the new schools superintendent. Malvey will replace Stephen Hart when he retires in August.

The sewer commissioners file a lawsuit in Norfolk Superior Court against the board of selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad to settle a contentious dispute over who has the right to award sewer contracts in Cohasset.

July:

Town officials decide to team up with four other towns along the track

AROUND TOWN

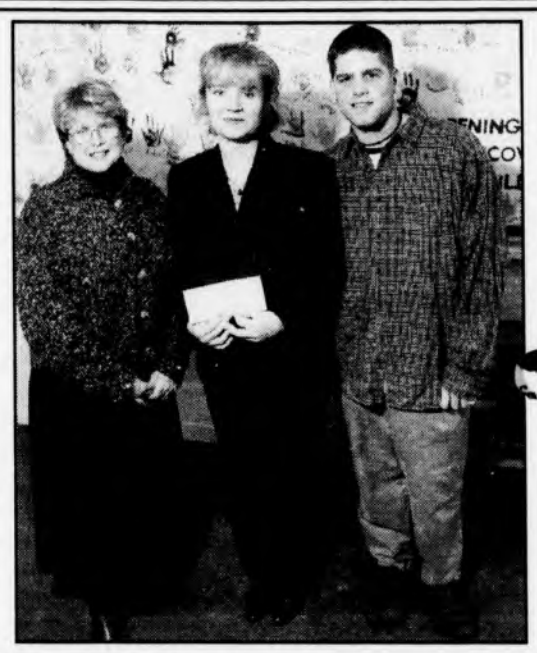
WAITING FOR SNOW

As I begin to write this, the last column for the year 1998, here is the picture: my typewriter is balanced on my sister's suitcase, with coffee at my foot (I am in the corner of the guestroom). In the livingroom, fast asleep are Kelsie, Keala, Pii, Ricki and Annie — every pillow, blanket and quilt we own is wrapped around them! Why, you ask? They are waiting for more snow! On Tuesday night we were all out in the brief flurries, and they are just waiting for more to arrive. They were so excited! The little one, Keala, forgot her shoes when she was out in the midst of it, does that tell you anything? They called all of their relatives in Hawaii to tell them of the grand event — as you may be able to tell, everyone is just having the best time.

AN OLD FRIEND VISITS

Carol Gates (Chick Gates' daughter) came for a long visit, she looks wonderful — she brought her two godchildren, 6 and 3, she cares for them full-time. Carol lives in Amesbury now, where she is very busy — she makes American Doll doll clothes, is in real estate, you name it, she does it! She looks grand, and is extremely happy!

QUICK HELLO



Andrea (Murphy) Powning came for a quick hello to all, she has always adored "The Hawaiians." Andrea also looks fantastic; she lives in Boston now, with her husband Bunt, and loves it! Her daughter, Caroline, lives in California and is home for the holidays.

Clark is playing the perfect tour director — takes all of us everywhere!

Naturally there is tons more company than that, I am trying to catch you up on the former Cohassetites — I'll let you know if more arrive!

EARLY ACCEPTANCE

Speaking of wonderful news, did you hear the latest? Justin Golden, R. Steve Sceery and Ben Littauer all received a great Christmas present — because of all their hard work, they got early acceptance to Harvard! Edward F. Goff III and James O'Sullivan were accepted, early admission, to Boston College, and Megan Connelly's acceptance to Catholic University rounds out the group. Isn't that fantastic? We are ever-so-proud of all of you fine students, and also have to salute the Cohasset school system for their efforts to make it all possible. Quite a feather in everyone's cap, wouldn't you say? We surely will hear more about these fine young men and women, they are exceptional!

BACK FROM ITALY

Hap Pompeo just returned from a nice visit with his son, Danny, in Italy — did he ever enjoy himself! He saw the sights, dined on fine Italian cuisine, shopped in all the little special places — cannot wait to return!

HANDSOME COUPLE

There was a very nice brunch held at the Weston Golf Club last week, to celebrate the engagement of David Shultz to Amy Neher. What a handsome couple they are! Dave is at grad school at Cornell — they are to be married in June, we'll fill you in on all the details! Everyone is just so excited!

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

Happy belated greetings to Holly Pompeo, who celebrated her birthday last week — Holly will be at the CHS 10th reunion party the day after Christmas (she is on the committee, so she'll be sure to give us a full report). Hope your day was a happy one, Holly!

SUPPORT OUR TEAMS

Don't forget that Cohasset Middle-High School sports are underway — great way to have fun in the winter, go and watch your favorite event! All teams hold great promise, and this is the first year that we have combined with another town to form a team — gymnastics will have both Cohasset and Norwell on the squad. All towns in the state are watching to see how the combined effort works out — we know it will be super! Basketball teams are in full swing, as is wrestling. Hockey is underway, so is swimming. See, there is something for everyone to cheer for! Support our athletes; go to a game, and have fun!

HOME FOR HOLIDAYS

Kevin Mulcahy will be home for the holidays! He is living and working in Las Vegas, and loving it. He has really gotten to know the place, he even took some of the athletic directors on a tour when they were out there for their convention last week. If you get out there, be sure to look him up. Better still, if you see him while he is home, arrange to see him. He's great!

DEPT. 56 COLLECTORS

Ray and Nancy BerBerick have an interesting idea for those of you who collect "Dept. 56" miniature buildings and figures — they want to start a group! As any avid collector knows, it is so much fun to share your knowledge and broaden your search together — part of the collecting "bug." If you are interested, call them at 925-2242.

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION

That's the news from here — why don't you "resolve" to call me with your news as it happens in 1999? We would all love to share in your happiness.

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

IT'S HAPPENING

A Gradual Awakening: Eleanor Le Blanc retrospective

The South Shore Art Center will host a retrospective exhibition of Weymouth artist Eleanor Le Blanc from Jan. 1 to Feb. 7 in the Bancroft Gallery. The exhibition, entitled "A Gradual Awakening," will explore her life's work including monotypes, photographs and a three-dimensional installation. A graduate of Massachusetts College of Art, Ms. Le Blanc has exhibited extensively on the South Shore and throughout New England.

In the Dillon Gallery will be an exhibition of work by SSAC Gallery artists entitled, "Resolutions: Photographs, Pastels, Clay Forms." Exhibiting artists include sculptors Debra Giller and Pam Golden, photographers Stephanie Grenadier, Julie Hawkins and Susan White, pastel artist Liz Haywood-Sullivan and clay artist and painter Judy Rossman. In the Manning lobby the faculty feature will be Art Center children's teacher Dorothy Martin Simone.

An opening reception for all three exhibitions will be held Friday, Jan. 1, from 6-8 p.m. For more information, call (781) 383-ARTS.

Book Angel, thank you

Many thanks go out to the wonderful customers of Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset and Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham who, this season, provided more than 600 books to needy children and adults in our communities through Buttonwood's Book Angel program. This year, books were sent to Wellspring Multiservice Center in Hull, Mary-Martha Learning Center in Hingham, South Shore Educational Collaborative's Teen Parent Program in Hingham, Friends of the Homeless in Weymouth, Hingham Interfaith Food Pantry, Norwell Food Pantry and Project Hope in Dorchester. Books went to individuals, as well as to support these facilities' libraries and literacy programs.

Christmas tree pickup

Cohasset area teens will once again offer a Christmas tree removal service to benefit programs of the Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee. Volunteers will remove and dispose of trees Saturdays, Jan. 2, and Jan. 9. To order service, call 383-2552 (24 hours) and specify which day is preferred. Trees should be placed by the base of the driveway.

The fee for the service is $10 per tree, $5 for senior citizens. Please make checks payable to the Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee and place on the front door. Funds raised by this volunteer teen effort will support the publication and distribution of a parent/teen handbook currently under development. The handbook is an informative compilation of facts on specific drugs available in the community; laws on use and possession; statistics on local use; helpful advice on talking with children on substance abuse; and a list of resources for further information and support.

All teens are welcomed to join in this service project. To volunteer, or for more information, call Jami Butman 383-9435 or Wallace St. John 383-2627.

The Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee is a non-profit volunteer organization comprised of parents and teens, as well as representatives from the PSO, board of selectmen, school committee, school council, police and clergy. Programs focus on the education and prevention of substance abuse community-wide, as well as the support of "substance-free" teen activities. It also maintains a confidential hotline for substance abuse (383-4120).

Any interested adult or teen is welcome to join the committee. The next scheduled meeting is Wednesday, Jan. 13 at 7:30 p.m. at the town hall.

The Memory Tree at the South Shore Community Center

This holiday season was enriched by remembering, in a tangible way, the joy our loved ones have shared with us in seasons past.

Commemorative lights shine on the Memory Tree on the lawn of South Shore Community Center, as well as a star placed on the tree in the lobby with the name(s) of your loved one(s). As contributions were received, bulbs were illuminated throughout the season, and the names of the donors and those remembered are published in the Cohasset Mariner.

The following is a list of contributors to the 1998 Memory Tree for the week of Dec. 14

EDITORIAL

Extra efforts for New Year

"He did each single thing as if he did nothing else."
— Charles Dickens

It's almost a new year and some resolutions might be in order. You'll have your own, of course, but we offer a few extras to consider. Help yourself:

• We will get involved in the community this year. No more sitting on the sidelines crabbing about the ineptness of this town official or the bad decision by that town board. Make the time, volunteer, get involved and see what it's like to walk in those shoes.

• We will get involved in our children's school, starting the day they return after the New Year. Ask to sit in on a class. Attend a PTO meeting. Talk with the kids every day about what happened in school, what was interesting, what was challenging and what their homework is about. Not just whether they have done their homework, but what is it really about.

• We will get to know some older folks in town, whether it's by visiting a nursing home, driving someone to the grocery store or for an appointment with the doctor, or just by dropping by the senior center to talk. We will try to learn whist.

• We will pick at least one charity walk or event this year, and just do it. The Walk for Women's Lives? The Good Friday Walk in Hingham? The MS Walk in Cohasset? The Relay for Life in Cohasset? The Walk for Hunger in Boston? We will pick one, fill up the pledge form and do it. It will feel good and it might help.

• We will dust off the exercise equipment we received for Christmas in 1997 and use it in 1999. Three times a week, marked on the calendar where everyone at home can see it.

• We'll stop buying M&Ms and Cokes from the candy machine at work. This will save hundreds of dollars, which we can pledge to one of the walkathons (see above).

• We will allow more time to drive to work, so the day doesn't start off stressful. We'll check out at least one item each month from the "books on tape" section at the library and listen to it on the way to work. Mysteries, romances, famous novels. They all count.

• We'll make it a point to meet every new neighbor within one week after they move in. We'll try to arrive with a plate of cookies or loaf of bread in hand.

• We will not make resolutions that we cannot keep.

Happy New Year from all of us at the Mariner.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Misconceptions are clarified

TO THE EDITOR:

It was disturbing to read in your paper about the unfortunate closing of the collaborative program for deaf children located on the South Shore. It was very surprising to then read further as your reporter quoted people's thoughts about The Learning Center for Deaf Children's campus in Randolph, a school where I am the director.

This closing does not really involve our school, however, since certain assertions were made in the article regarding our program, I feel a need to clarify the misconceptions that were reported.

The Learning Center for Deaf Children established a second campus in Randolph in response to a need for a program which utilized voice and sign language. Since its establishment, as more deaf children have enrolled, the school's educational policy has evolved to include three distinct programs. We still provide a sign-supported English program for those deaf and hard-of-hearing children who utilize this model well in the classroom. Voice and sign (including ASL structure and classifiers) are used simultaneously to provide academic instruction. This is quite different from Signed Exact English (SEE) which is not, itself, a language, but is, instead, a manual code for English.

We also have a quality ASL program for others who learn best in American Sign Language. This group of students are all ASL users, and their classrooms follow a bilingual/bicultural model as do all classrooms at our other campus in Framingham. This program employs users of fluent ASL (as it is intended — a language with no voice equivalent) including competent deaf teachers with advanced degrees who are native users of ASL.

We also offer at this campus a unique program for children who are not deaf, but have limited or no expressive language and benefit from sign language to more fully access the curriculum and to further develop their cognitive and linguistic abilities.

Thank you for allowing me to correct a false impression regarding our school. My staff and I were saddened to hear of the South Shore Educational Collaborative's planned closing of its program for deaf children. We extend our best wishes to the families involved as they begin to seek other appropriate placements for their children.

Nancy Mello Maguire
Director, The Randolph Campus

Thoughts while shaving — some traffic comments

MARK HADDAD, TOWN MANAGER
BOARD OF SELECTMEN
DEAR MARK AND THE BOARD:

I'm puzzled — I'm not sure I understand our attitudes toward Cohasset's streets — intersections — traffic control.

First we have a severe accident on one street in town (King Street) and we consider making it one way — or we consider widening it (which I think is the way to go) — or we consider restricting it to nothing over 2-1/2 ton — or etcetera.

Second — We want to improve, enhance, the Village area, which I think is a great idea, and as part of this improvement we consider narrowing a perfectly beautiful street (Elm Street) that handles traffic very well. Also, at the same time, cutting the access to Elm Street at Main Street to an almost impossible change in the sidewalk and intersection. I really can't believe any of you is serious in considering this change — particularly the narrowing of the intersection.

Third — Sometime ago, at the intersection of Cushing Road and Pleasant Street, we established a "4 Way Stop" intersection. Why a "4 Way Stop?" Why not just stop signs on Cushing Road or even just a "Caution" sign? Or maybe no sign, let the drivers use their judgment. If you've driven it (which you have) you will realize it's an open intersection — you can see all around you .

Fourth — The last comment of these "Thoughts While Shaving" before I cut myself. One I've commented on before — the intersection of North Main Street and Forest Avenue. We made it a "4 Way Stop" intersection. This should be returned to its previous arrangement — a yellow caution blinker on North Main Street and a red stop blinker on Forest Avenue (with stop signs) or, the best idea, traffic lights.

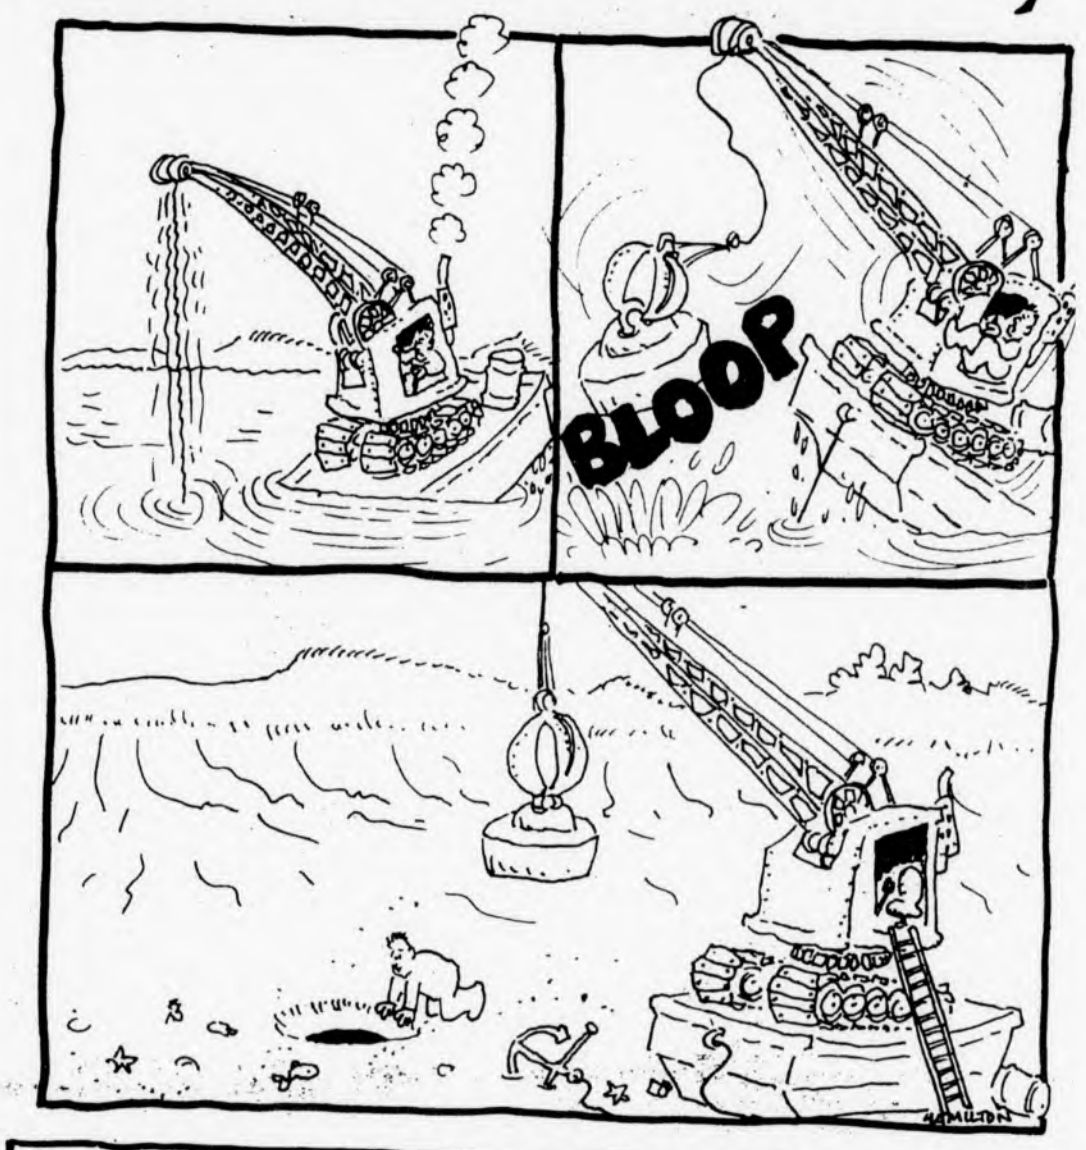
Enough — I'm through shaving. You get the idea — I'm bothered — puzzled by our attitude towards traffic. Basically when the automobile was invented the "accident" came along with it.

Hamilton T. Tewksbury
81 Elm St.

Ed's note: Mr. Tewksbury asked the Mariner to print a copy of his entire letter parts of which were excerpted in a recent news brief.

Time running out for Citizen nominations

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's Citizen of the Year Award. This is the continuation of a tradition begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement. The nomination form was inadvertently omitted from last week's issue so the deadline has been extended one week. See form on page 14.



Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored Anna Abbruzzese, through her many volunteer efforts which she conducts with kindness, caring and love for the town and all its residents.

Once again, here at the Cohasset Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community.

Fate of Greenbush is still in question

If the line were to be built at grade, the train would pass through Hingham's downtown historic district. In question is whether or not the MBTA would pay for a tunnel under Hingham Square to avoid that dilemma.

Macmillan said the air quality issue is key to the discussion of alternatives to Greenbush restoration.

"With rail restoration, the pollution from automobiles wouldn't be removed but moved," he said.

That's because it's estimated that about 98 percent of the people taking the train would use their cars to get to the station.

"Studies say the most pollutants are emitted during the first few minutes cars start and stop," he said. "One of the reasons for proposing Greenbush restoration is air quality, which makes this project unwise."

The Town of Hingham filed a lawsuit against the MBTA in 1996 accusing the transit authority of attempting to evade strict federal environmental laws — which could have required a tunnel under the square — by proposing to build the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad with state funds alone.

The argument revolves around the fact that part-way through the project, the MBTA changed tracks and decided to use state money to fund the project rather than continue to use federal moneys. The lawsuit is still pending but could be resolved soon, according to Macmillan.

"Our morale is still high, and we have faith we will win the lawsuit and get final approval from the Army Corps of Engineers," said Pedro.

Selectmen from Hingham, Scituate and Cohasset are awaiting a response from the office of the secretary of environmental affairs to a letter they jointly signed expressing some of the three communities' shared concerns about the proposed rail restoration. The correspondence was sent in September. Because Secretary Trudy Coxe is leaving the agency to take another position, the fate of the correspondence is unknown.

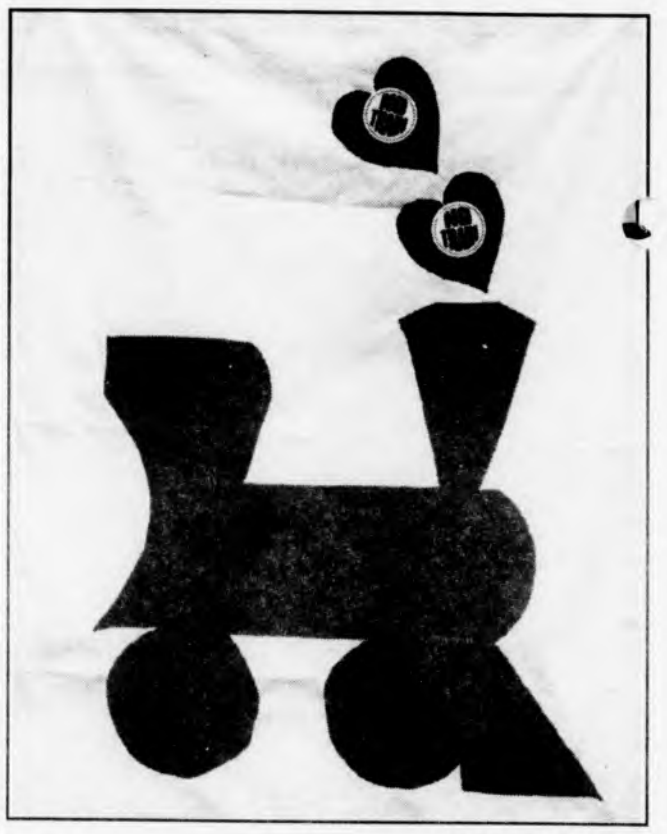
But, says Macmillan, the new secretary, Sen. Robert Durand of Marlborough, is "a very able fellow" with an understanding of historic preservation.

"The question is whether that office will perhaps do another supplemental draft environmental review statement within the context of a public process," said Macmillan.

Adding further uncertainty to the mix are changes occurring in the South Shore area which could call for alterations in the MBTA's original plan, some officials and residents say. A key element of the reuse plan for the South Weymouth Naval Air Station is the access road, which will have an exit near Hingham.

The roadway would also go directly to the South Weymouth commuter rail station, which could ultimately become a 'super station' that might better serve the South Shore community, some say.

"I hope the project will get off the ground again soon. It can get discouraging."



- David Clinton, train proponent

Macmillan has stated that these factors could lead to the development of a multi-modal transportation system which could also include water transportation. The proposed revitalization of Hingham Shipyard includes a plan to improve commuter boat facilities located there.

"It's anybody's guess as to what will happen in the next year at this point," Gruber said. "We just have to wait and see how things play out in the coming months. We've had few mitigation committee meetings; unless we get some correspondence form the T or something that indicates they're starting action or the tri-town committee becomes active again, that's all we can do."

In the meantime, Cohasset is proceeding with the James Brook project independent of the T to stop flooding in the center of town.

Staff writer Constance Pittman Lindner also contributed to this report.

The year Cohasset Heights Landfills closed down

Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe that CHL's request for a vertical expansion was approved only of all of the landfill's permits were in good standing. CHL wanted to increase its maximum height from 190 feet to 206 feet, which would have made it the tallest structure in Cohasset.

The courts delivered two crushing blows to CHL in April. A Norfolk Superior Court Judge, Isaac Borenstein upheld the health board's decision to deny CHL's 27 acre expansion of area V. And in land court, Judge Peter Kilborn upheld the town's Water Resource District. CHL had tried to overturn both actions by the town. On April 9, the ZBA once again upheld Egan's cease and desist order, and on April 14, CHL filed a lawsuit to overturn the decision.

CHL's problems continued to mount in May. SAFE placed pressure on the health board to hold site assignment hearings about CHL. McNabb and SAFE wanted the health board to rescind the site assignment, which would effectively close down the landfill permanently.

In July, CHL went to court again, this time seeking to overturn Judge Borenstein's decision to uphold the Area V expansion denial. Then on July 2 came stunning news: CHL had shut down. Paul Barry said "it at its end" in a short interview with The Mariner. Barry admitted that there was no more space left. Although the landfill closed down on July 2, the town formed a special committee one day earlier on July 1 to negotiate with CHL to settle all outstanding lawsuits and closure issues. Six town officials make up the sub-committee: Ulmer, McNabb, selectmen Ronnie McMorris, former zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo, and conservation committee Chairman Jeff Waal.

The sub-committee immediately enforced an information clampdown, declining to discuss any of the issues in public and meeting only in closed door sessions. Ulmer said there were too many legal issues to discuss negotiations in public. He added that there would be no timetable for the completion of the subcommittee's work. All lawsuits, legal actions and appeals would continue while the sub-committee negotiates a settlement with CHL. Ulmer said the sub-committee has worked hard to reach an all-encompassing settlement which will address five unsettled court cases, wetlands damage, permit violations, illegal dumping, closure details, post-closure plans and other unresolved details.

July continued to be a rough month for CHL. An environmental report confirmed that water-bearing bedrock fractures existed under the landfill with the potential to carry contaminants to Lily Pond, the town's water supply. Members of SAFE looked to the future in July as they contemplated the accomplishment of their goal to close CHL forever. McNabb said the group would continue to monitor clean up efforts at the landfill even after the town completed its negotiations.

CHL faced more controversial news in November when McNabb released a water commission report prepared by Norfolk Environmental that said evidence showed CHL was contaminating the Lily Pond watershed. Norfolk Environmental examined thousands of documents about CHL generated over two decades seeking to summarize environmental findings. Norfolk concluded that evidence existed that CHL was leaching contaminants into the watershed. However, the CHL subcommittee put pressure on the water commission to postpone a public meeting on the report until negotiations are completed. The request infuriated McNabb, but the water commissioners agreed to delay the meeting.

In November, Ulmer reported that the CHL sub-committee had made great progress toward the negotiation of a settlement of outstanding legal and environmental issues related to the landfill. As of this writing, that is where the situation stands. Ulmer did not return telephone calls to The Mariner seeking an update on negotiations. Site assignment hearings have been delayed until early January, 1999. The final chapter on CHL has yet to be written, but 1999 could be the year that the town settles all issues with the landfill once and for all.

COHASSET SPORTS

Some of highlights of Cohasset sports in 1998 included a solid year from the football team (above). As well, Jaime Buick was a star on the lacrosse field.

The sports movers and shakers of 1998

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Topping the year in sports for Cohasset in 1998 had to be the superb season put together by the CHS football squad as they marched to a successful 6-4 campaign and more importantly put an end to a pesky jinx when they defeated Hull at home on Thanksgiving Day.

Working on the arm of QB Jaime DeMichele and the legs of sophomore RB Dan Trowers as well as a defense that got stingier as the year went along, the Skippers beat Hull for the first time in 12 years, 14-0.

The wrestling squad also turned in a fine season, keeping their reputation in tact as the little squad that could.

Despite being one of the smallest schools around that has a wrestling team the squad continued to rack up both team and individual honors this year.

The Skippers finished the 1997-98 season at 16-4, placing third in the South sectional and 10th in Division 3. They started this season ranked 12th overall in the state.

On the individual level, J.P. Laugelle won gold as a heavyweight wrestler at the Bay State Games.

Converse Classic crown goes to Avon

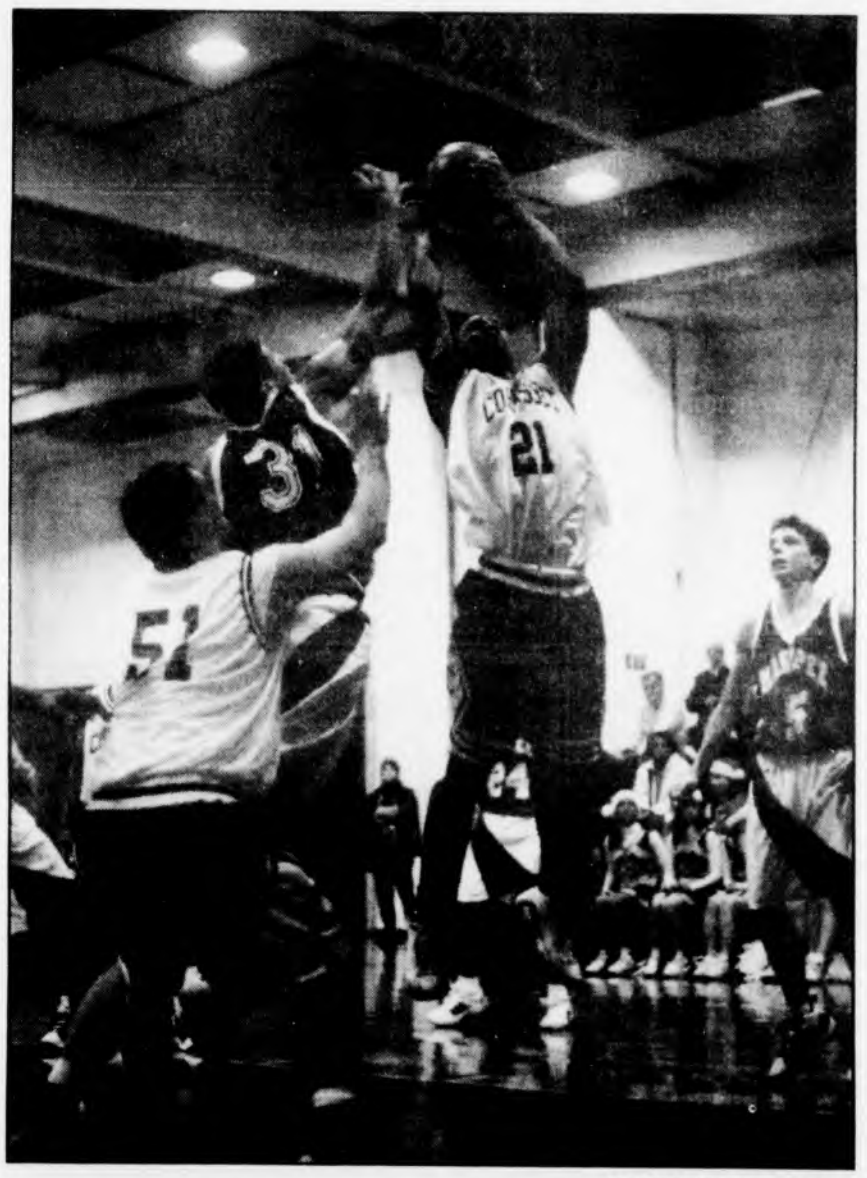
Ron Ford gets 100th career win

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

While most of their classmates were still recovering from the Santa-brought glow and any bloating brought on by too much fruitcake, the Cohasset Skippers had some basketball to play over the vacation. Hosting the Cohasset Converse Holiday Classic (which sounds more and more like the ridiculously titled college bowl games every year), Coach Ford's squad split their two games, waxing Scituate in Monday night's game, and getting waxed by Avon the next night.

Cohasset has yet to play a league game this year, but carry a 3-1 record into the official start of the South Shore League season next week. The tournament games provided two contrasting lessons for the Skippers. Round One's trashing of the Sailors gave Cohasset a confidence lift and helped showcase some of the talent in the blue and white jerseys. While Scituate was led by senior Greg Moynihan, Cohasset's effort was spearheaded by a host of players.

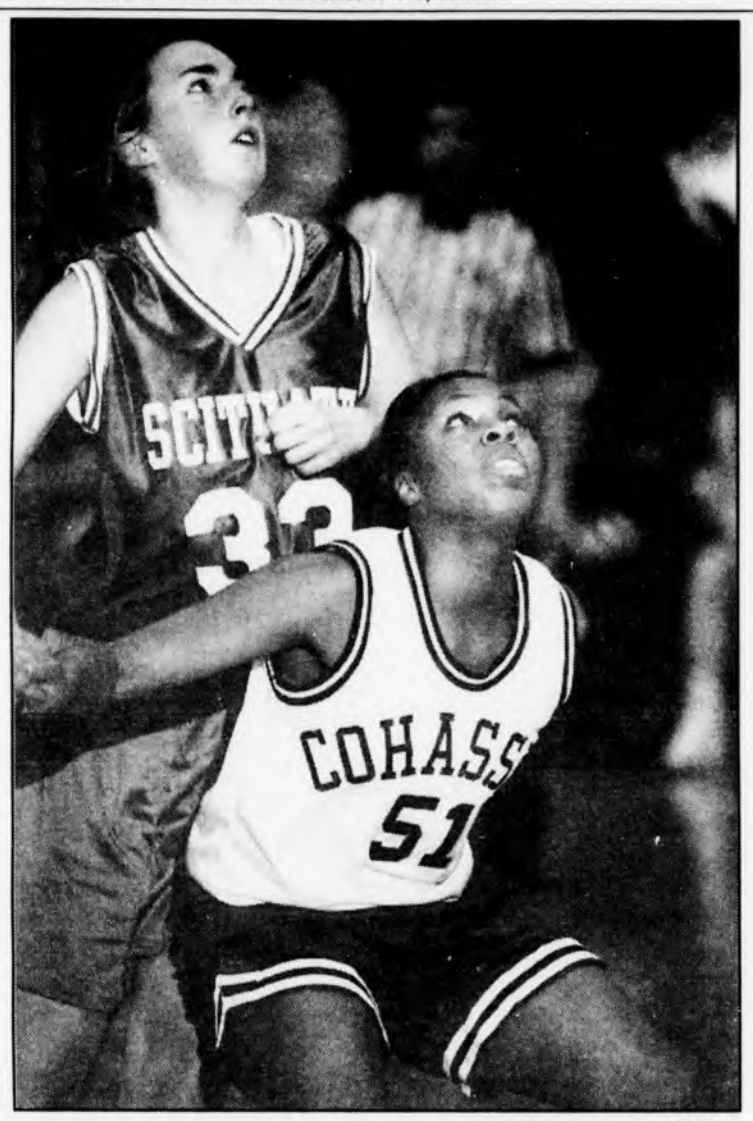
Captain Jamie DeMichele netted seventeen and junior Khalil Madyun posted twelve, eight of those coming during his own personal scoring exhibition. As usual, Raheem Shepard played a solid game and continued to be Cohasset's best second half performer.



Another positive for the Skippers emerged from the absence of point guard Daniel Trowers. Trowers, a recognized star on the team, could not attend either game. In his stead, sophomore T.J. Bilodeau started and played excellently in both contests. He nailed three three-pointers in the first game, while an old-fashioned three point play pushed him into double digits.

Paul Hussey's crowd-pleasing performances continued, as Hussey's scoring dropped off, but his ball-handling and court vision improved. Also in the backcourt, Kevin Andrews provided Cohasset with a spark off the bench, drawing a midcourt game in the Avon game, which helped slow the visitors. Newcomer Matt O'Reilly also played well, showing off a neat baseline move in the first game.

In the frontcourt, Alex Russell and Craig Parker had their hands full on Tuesday night in the loss to Avon. But they dominated the paint on Monday, with Parker scoring seven first-half points and Russell specializing on weak-side rebounds.



The Scituate game also marked a milestone for the coaching tandem of Ron Ford and Mark Hall. The duo are in their seventh year at the reins and have already achieved the 100 win mark. It was fitting that the milestone should be reached against Scituate, as the two teams battled each other fiercely for the South Shore League crown until Scituate's departure after the '95-'96 season. Both coaches call their victory over Scituate that year among their best ever, so it was only fitting that Monday night saw Coach Ford and Coach Hall reach the century mark against the Sailors.

With a 3-1 record, the Skippers head into league action with the still smarting from the whipping at the hands of Avon, but also with the knowledge that they're capable of playing like they did against Scituate.

Shorthanded Skippers fall to Scituate

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Two games in 24 hours will put any team to the test.

Two games in 24 hours with only six players is even harder.

Two games in 24 hours with one player suffering from shin splints and another enduring an asthma attack, well that just doesn't seem to be fair.

It may not have been fair, but that how this went for the CHS girls hoop team as they hosted the Converse Classic Hoop Tourney this week.

The game squad found themselves down by 13 points late against Scituate in the opening round, but battled back only to fall to the Sailors 48-42.

In the consolation game before a sparse crowd Tuesday afternoon, the Lady Skippers led at the break but wore down over the final 16 minutes in a 42-37 loss.

"They're just exhausted right now," said head coach Cori Hughes after the game. "They gave it all they had, but there is only so much that you can do with six players."

The 0-7 squad usually carries as many as ten players, but starter Megan Connolly and a couple of supporting members from the bench were away over the holidays thus leaving the team shorthanded for the time being.

"They're just exhausted right now. They gave it all they had, but there is only so much that you can do with six players."
CHS HOOP COACH CORI HUGHES

"Being this low on players affects our game tremendously. It limits your options as to what you can do both offensively and defensively," said Hughes. "We can't press on defense as much as we would normally do, especially. You have to try and conserve energy, stay close and hop something good happens at the end."

"I think being so tired at the end was the big difference in both of these games."

As the team struggles for their first win, one player who stepped forward with a strong performance in the tourney was senior guard Alyssa MacNamara. McNamara, coming off an all-star season in soccer, was named to the All-Tourney team for her performance in the two games.

The senior led the Skippers with 15 points in the opening round and returned with 14 more in the consolation game, mostly connecting when given the open outside jumper.

Complimenting her on the inside was Caitlyn O'Neil, who showed some nice offensive moves in the paint when given the opportunity to do so.

"I can see us now starting to come together more as a team," said Hughes. "We're moving the ball around better and getting it into the hands of the open person and getting a good look at the hoop."

They hope to get on the winning track when they start their South Shore League Schedule at home on Tuesday against Hanover. Tip-off is 6:30 p.m.

nals and took top honors in the South sectionals.

Honoring a valued teacher and coach, friends and family of the late Charlie Davis assembled on a rainy day at Alumni Field to officially dedicate the running track at the high school in his name.

Davis, a former math department chairman and long-time track coach at the high school, died unexpectedly in 1985.

"He was a superb and caring teacher as well as a loyal friend and just a wonderful man," said CHS principal Curtis Collins at the dedication ceremonies. "We are so proud to know that from this day on this facility will be known as the Charles R. Davis Memorial Track."

CHS Athletic Director Clark Chatterton added a second memorial stone later in the year dedicated to those who had helped with the restoration work at Alumni Field and Milliken Field.

In other newsworthy events from the year.

•Paul-Michael Quintin became the fourth person ever in the history of the boys basketball program at Cohasset to reach the 1,000 career point mark.

•Kristen Sheerin took top honors at the Pilgrim Conference gymnastics meet. The squad would finish as co-champs of the league with Hanover. The squad opened this season a little larger after they merged with Norwell High.

•Swimmer Greg Bilton was the Division 2 state champion 100-yard backstroke and the 50-yard freestyle events.

•The CHS girls tennis squad posted a 16-0 record on their way to winning the South Shore League title. They would fall to Dover-Sherborn in the South sectional semifinals.

•Neither of the soccer teams would make it to the post-season, but that doesn't mean they didn't have some fun along the way. The same is true for the field hockey team, which fell a point short of the tourney but was able to beat Hull for the first time in a decade along the way.

•The hockey team returned as a varsity sport this month, but the girls softball program was not so lucky. They played a JV schedule this season and the sport will be dropped in total starting in the Spring of 1999.

Gold medal hockey women at book signing

Tricia Dunn and Katie King, members of the Gold Medal-winning U.S. women's Olympic hockey team, will sign copies of their new book, "Gold Medal Ice Hockey for Women and Girls," Saturday, Jan. 9, from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Route 3A, Cohasset.

"Gold Medal Ice Hockey for Women and Girls" is a book for novices and hard-core hockey players, as well as coaches, parents and fans. Packed with pictures, the book explains the basics of the game and recounts the struggles and successes of both Dunn and King on their path to Olympic Gold. Dunn is a graduate of UNH where she helped capture an ECAC title and stands 13th in all-time scoring. The Hockey News named her best skater on Team USA. where she was known for being a defensive specialist and constant on the penalty kill. King graduated from Brown where she was named hockey's Ivy League Player of the Year for three consecutive years, as well as ECAC Player of the Year in 1997 . She became the all-time leading scorer in Brown history during her senior year, and was tied with three others for leading scorer on the Olympic team. Both have set their sights on Team USA in 2002.

This is King's and Dunn's first appearance on their book tour and the only local opportunity to meet these women. Call (781) 383-2665 for more information.

between Scituate and Braintree to try to convince the MBTA the state must pay for the problems the coming Greenbush train will bring.

Cohasset Village revitalization looks promising with a $165,000 grant expected from the state for a new sidewalk and associated improvements in front of St. Stephen's church; a $5,000 grant to study ways to connect the Village to the harbor; and a $60,000 request to study ways to connect the downtowns of Hingham, Hull, Scituate and Cohasset to attract tourists and visitors from neighboring communities.

CHL shuts down its landfill operation due to space constraint as of July 2. Co-owner Paul Barry confirmed that the landfill was out of space.

Town buildings rehabilitation carries a hefty price tag for five municipal buildings to last until 2025, a plan drawn up by KFP Associates of Weymouth decided. $15.2 million in all.

Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide buys the 1789 Lilac House from Gene and Marie Price for $600,000 with the intention of turning it into a cafe/bistro and retail bakery.

August:

The Village Task Force's forum to show off proposals for $165,000 worth of sidewalk renovations is met with dissent by 25 local merchants and residents, who argue against curb proposals and especially about potential blasting on the ledge by St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

The zoning board gives the go ahead to Hingham builder John Murphy to proceed with plans to raze the Quonset huts at 430 South Main St. and replace them with five townhouse condominiums.

Paul Trendowicz, owner of Cohasset Harbor Marina, plays hardball with the town over selectmen's lack of decision to recommend moving the federal anchorage line in Bailey's Creek; he demands that all town moorings be moved out of the creek area he claims is his.

Parking becomes a safety issue at the swim center on North Main Street, with visitors ignoring the "handicapped-parking only" sign and also parking along the path to the swim center from North Main Street to Barnes Field, despite the presence of a parking lot only yards away.

Three young Democratic hopefuls—Josh Cutler, 27, of Hull, Garrett Bradley, 28, of Hingham, and Walter Murray, 34, of Hull, heat up the race to run in the state primary against long-time incumbent Republican state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray.

September:

Flames destroy the second and third floors of the $1.5 million 124 Atlantic Avenue Victorian home of Susan and Russell MacPherson after a candle falls on a highly combustible pillow. It required 50 firefighters from five towns to squelch the three-alarm blaze through that lasted six hours.

Political parties mark the end of the Sept. 15 primary and a beginning for Democrat Garrett Bradley who won the election to square off against Republican State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray for the Nov. 15 election.

Selectmen approve safety measures for King Street where cars are averaging 40 miles per hour in a 30mph narrow and winding road. A spot is left open on the Oct. 27 town meeting warrant for the group to prohibit cars traveling along Beechwood Street from turning left onto King Street to get to Route 3A. Town meeting must approve any plan to restrict access to a private way.

The Osgood Reuse Committee favors selling the old Osgood to a for-profit company which will build 29 condos for senior citizens on the site, but library trustees want to turn the building into a new, expanded town library.

Cable contract options are aired before selectmen by cable provider MediaOne to renew its 15-year cable license.

October:

Private ways become a prickly issue, as planning board chairman Al Moore warns that such changes could open the town to unexpected subdivisions if the private ways become town property and abut undeveloped and buildable land.

A Scituate Hill water tank deal is possible after water commissioner John. K. McNabb Jr. detailed plans that are acceptable to Scituate Hill owner J. Michael Susi and Sons.

The Cohasset Mariner celebrates its 20th anniversary and looks back to its start when Jimmy Carter was president, Michael Dukakis was governor, the primary rate hovered at 12 percent and the average house in town cost about $68,000.

Local architect Jim Shipsky is charged with the task of studying ways to connect the village to the harbor and to revitalize both areas, using a $5,000 state grant, and solicits public comment for input.

Sewer commissioners are resigned to the fact that it will cost about 40 percent more than the $6.6 million anticipated in 1997 to connect the affected homes to the Hull treatment plan. Phase One of the project, installation of the sewer main, is 50 percent complete and paid for with part of the original appropriation.

Cohasset Harbor walkway preliminary plan of the harbor district is presented to about 20 residents at a public meeting hosted by the Village Revitalization Task Force at town hall with Jim Shipsky asking, wouldn't it be nice if you could walk around the harbor.

Judge Mark Coven sentences 18-year-old William Leigh Atherton to 2-1/2 years supervised probation and loss of his driver's license for 10 years after he plead guilty to motor vehicle homicide by reckless operation. Coven took the wishes of victim Bourke Corcoran's family into account in his verdict and did not

OBITUARIES

John Zotos

John Zotos of Cohasset, a professor at Northeastern University, died Dec. 26 at his home in Cohasset after a lingering illness.

Mr. Zotos received his bachelor's degree in chemical engineering at Northeastern University and his master's degree in metallurgical engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. As a professor of materials science and metallurgy in medical engineering, he was an adviser to many organizations. He also consulted and lectured for national and international corporations. He developed the process for the titanium alloy used in artificial hip joints.

Mr. Zotos applied computers to improve steel production in the 1960s. His research landed him on the cover of Iron Age Magazine. He received a National Science Foundation fellowship to MIT in 1964 and 1967. He was honored by Northeastern University in 1989 with the Outstanding Alumni Award for Science and Technology.

Mr. Zotos was born in Brockton and graduated from Brockton High School in 1949. He graduated from Northeastern University in 1954.

He was an active layman in the Greek Orthodox Church on local, diocesan and archdiocese levels. He also served on the board of trustees of the Hellenic College and Theological School. He served as a board member with the National Council for Christians and Jews for more than 10 years. He was a member of the Nativity-Assumption of Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church in Cohasset.

He leaves his wife, Freda Anne "Libby" (Scontras) Zotos; two sons, Michael Zotos and Frederic Zotos; a daughter, Yoanna Osborne; a brother, Angelo Zotos of Brockton; a sister, Bessie Tsokanis of Brockton; four granddaughters and several nephews and nieces.

A funeral service was held Dec. 30 at the Annunciation Greek Orthodox Church, 457 Oak St., Brockton. Burial was in Woodside Cemetery, North Main St., Cohasset.

The Russel Funeral Home handled the arrangements.

Donations may be made to the John Zotos Fund, c/o NU Mechanical Engineering, 360 Huntington Ave., Boston 02115 and to the South Shore Hospice, 100 Bay State Dr., Braintree, 02185.

Helen M. Watson

Helen M. (McInnis) Watson, 78, of Cohasset, died Dec. 22 at her home after a long battle with cancer.

Mrs. Watson was born in Quincy and moved to Cohasset 50 years ago.

She was the wife of the late Louis Watson and leaves two sons, William Watson of Methuen and James Watson of Cohasset; a daughter, Tina Watson of Cohasset; and two brothers, Paul McInnis of Hanover and The Rev. William McInnis of Chestnut Hill.

A memorial Mass was celebrated Dec. 26 at St. Anthony's Church on Summer Street.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made to the Norwell Visiting Nurse Association, 637 Main St., Norwell, 02061.

Helen Brown

Helen (Wallace) Brown, 90, of Cohasset, a nanny for the Hugh Bancraft family for many years, died Dec. 22 at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth after a brief illness.

Mrs. Brown was born in Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia, Canada. She attended Cape Breton schools and moved to Cohasset 60 years ago.

She was the wife of the late George W. Brown.

Mrs. Brown leaves a son, Robert A. Brown of Scituate; a daughter, Barbara E. Hoyler of Cohasset; two sisters, Isabel Wallace and Mary MacGillivary, both of Cape Breton Island; and four grandchildren.

A funeral service was held Dec. 26 at the Second Congregational Church. Burial was in Woodside Cemetery.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., handled the arrangements.

Donations may be made to the Alzheimer's Association, 1 Kendall Square, Cambridge, 02139, or the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset, 02025.

Year in Review

bring the case to trial.

Town meeting votes 351-99 vote to spend $152,5000 to develop construction drawings and bid documents to convert the old Osgood School to a new library.

November:

Republican Mary Jeanette Murray beat out Democrat and political newcomer Garrett Bradley of Hingham by 1,000 votes, making Murray one of only three representatives to service such a lengthy (22-year) term.

Plans to expand Cohasset Harbor Marina off Parker Avenue are raised again when Town Manager Mark Haddad announces that marina owner Paul Trendowicz and selectmen have agreed to a truce to see if an accord can be reached short of legal action.

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce expresses interest again in the Independence Building's use as a ground floor public restroom with office space rented on the second floor; there is no public restroom in the village.

Selectmen set the tax rate for fiscal year 1999 at $14.95, down 10 cents per $1,000 of assessed valuation from last year's rate of $15.05.

An estimated $2-$3 million is all that stands between the village and harbor which local architect Jim Shipsky wants linked by a red brick sidewalk, bike paths and a boardwalk along the water's edge.

PSO President Jane Pescatore describes the pick-up and drop-off situation at the new Joseph Osgood Elementary and Deer Hill schools as "an accident waiting to happen" in her letter to school committee chairman Rick Shea.

December:

The board of selectmen stood behind its decision to charge St. Anthony's an estimated $18,000 building permit fee to construct a new parish halll.

An investigative report by Richard Feeney, district engineering inspector for teh Department of Public Safety, find that the number of gas leaks related to D&C Construction Company of Rockland's work on the North Cohasset sewer project exceeds the eight reported to the local fire department.

Voter turnout was 29 percent, but a $1.3 million Prop. 2-1/2 override passed at the polls with a 118-vote majority. For the owner of the average Cohasset home, valued at $341,000, will see an increase of about $19.21 on their annual tax bill for 20 years, which will help to pay for half of the $2.7 million cost overrun for the North Cohasset projects. The users through betterments will pay the balance.

Cohasset students make the grade on MCAS results, scoring in the top 20 percent in state scores.

A $660K override is anticipated for spring to cover the shortfall in the town's proposed $20.8 million operating budget.

Selectmen consider raising the cost of RTF (recycling and transfer station) sticker fees to offset increases in trash disposal costs.

PLUMBING MUSINGS
by Philip Von Iderstein M.P. #8829
BY GEORGE
My great-grandfather was a deacon in the Baptist Church and a very religious man. He stuck close to his faith and the strict doctrines of the Baptist teachings. He never drank or swore and would not work on Sundays, play cards, dance, or involve himself with any of the frivolities that are commonplace today. When he was a plumber, drainage piping was almost entirely done with cast iron pipe with lead and oakum joints.
The story has been passed down that Grampa Fred was working on a job with a young apprentice. He yelled to the young man to hurry and bring him a ladle of hot lead to pour a joint. When the lad reached over to pour the joint he accidentally slipped and poured the boiling metal all down Fred's forearm. Grandfather was quoted as saying, "BY GEORGE THAT HURT." We all agree that if ever a Christian man could take the Lord's name in vain, it was at that point. But Fred never did swear.
